Mr. AUSTIN. I wish to ask a question for fear it may be overlooked. The Senator referred to the Post Office Department losing some control over the air mail.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the Post Office Department would not lose control over the mail itself.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. AUSTIN. Under the bill the Post Office Department would continue to place air mail on the carrier it chose, provided that carrier were authorized to carry mail.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator for that suggestion, because the Post Office Department is still going to have authority with reference to the air mail.

The Interstate Commerce Commission deals with railroad transportation, it deals likewise with motor-carrier transportation, and is not the Commission the proper repository for control over air transportation?

A commission was appointed to study this matter, and they recommended, as I recall, that a separate commission be created for the purpose of handling this matter. The President agreed that there should be a commission appointed, but did not want an independent commission; he wanted to have it, as I read his statement, under the Interstate Commerce Commission, according to messages which he sent to the Congress, and the expert from the Commission says that the President specifically so stated in his letters.

When we are speaking about consolidations which are going on, let me call attention to the fact that certain language was put into the Air Mail Act of 1934, as amended, which prohibited an air-mail contractor from engaging in any other line of aviation endeavor, such as manufacture. It also prohibited mergers and consolidations under section 7 (a), (b), and (c). It further prohibited any director or officer of any carrier from being financially interested in another air carrier.

The opponents of Senate bill 2 openly charged that should the bill pass these safeguards would be eliminated, due to the fact that the bill would repeal the Air Mail Act. This is not the case. The language of Senate bill 2 is tried and tested, and contains practically the same language that has been used in both the Rail Act and in the Motor Carrier Act. This was fully developed at the hearings before the Interstate Commerce Committee.

I attended the hearings for a day or so, at the request of some of the members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and I called attention to the fact, as appears on page 301 of the printed transcript of the hearings, that consolidation of competing lines between Washington and Pittsburgh and Detroit had been permitted. I now quote the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]:

> In this case, then, these two companies have violated the law, and they ought to be prosecuted for it.

I further brought out the fact that this was done with the consent of the Post Office Department.

If the Air Mail Act forbids consolidations—about which the language of section 7 (a) seems to be pretty clear—the Post Office Department has consented and been a party to the following violations:

First. Long and Harmon bid and secured route 15 in 1934, evidently with the idea of selling, because a few months later they sold to Braniff Airways; and this sale, although forbidden by law, was allowed by the Post Office Department. Under the Air Mail Act there is no protection to the Government, as would be the case under Senate bill 2, with complete investigation by the I. C. C. prior to any consolidation. Before any consolidation of any kind may be made, an application must be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the application must be investigated, and hearings had upon it.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. There was also a consolidation of the so-called Pennsylvania Air Lines with the Central of Pennsylvania Air Lines.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; I am coming to that.

Profits on this sale and other mergers, such as the Pennsylvania-Central consolidation, may be capitalized to any extent by the company acquiring the mail contracts. Under Senate bill 2, with full control and investigation of these mergers, lower postal rates would result, because of the fact that the capital structure could not be expanded beyond a reasonable point.

Other violations and consolidations are as follows:

Second. North American Aviation Corporation, an aircraft manufacturing company, was awarded an air-mail contract by the Post Office Department and operates it under the name of Eastern Air Lines. Not only was this allowed but the Post Office further allowed them to acquire a smaller air-mail line known as the Wedell-Williams Line, which also had an air-mail contract. This transfer and consolidation were approved by the Post Office. Under Senate bill 2 such a consolidation would have been investigated, and the Interstate Commerce Commission would have made certain that in this acquisition the capital structure of Eastern Air Lines would not be unduly expanded beyond a reasonable point. The Post Office Department further allowed United Air Lines to buy a portion of the Wyoming Air Lines. Western Air Express has been allowed to purchase National Parks. The Pennsylvania Air Lines bought Central Airlines, as shown in the hearings on page 301. In the latter consolidation a monopoly of the business from Washington to Detroit resulted, and passenger rates were immediately raised above the point where they had been during competition. Senate bill 2 has provisions which will protect the public, whereas under the Air Mail Act the public has no protection. Northwest Air Lines acquired a part of Hanford Air Lines; Varney Air Lines acquired a part of Wyoming Air Lines. In all these cases all parties were air-mail contractors, and nevertheless were allowed to purchase and consolidate at will under the existing Air Mail Act, by and with the consent of the Post Office Department.

According to newspapers and magazines, Eastern Air Lines and T. W. A. are negotiating with the view of combining. It has also been stated in the press that T. W. A. and Pennsylvania-Central are negotiating. The present law has proven inadequate. Some control over consolidation must be immediately enacted.

The bill under consideration would compel air lines desiring to consolidate to file an application with the Interstate Commerce Commission and come before that body and have hearings with respect to their capital structure, and also as to whether or not the public interest is being served. There is nothing in the present Air Mail Act to provide for the proper study of such consolidations before they are permitted.

How are consolidations now accomplished? Applicants go up to the Post Office Department and see some official there, who decides whether the consolidation is all right or is in violation of the law. That is the reason why some of the air-line operators feel they are not getting equal treatment from the Post Office Department, and they desire to have the determination of those questions placed under a body before which they will be afforded hearings, at which it may be shown whether or not the consolidation is in the public interest.

Under subsection (b) of section 3 of the Air Mail Act of 1934, as amended [Senate hearing, see p. 299], the Post Office Department merely considers the transfer of the contract, and does not study the result of such consolidations and their effect upon all United States air transportation. This would be done under Senate bill 2.

The Post Office Department is without authority to control new practices and new ideas such as are illustrated by the following examples:

Two airlines are now advertising "Through sleeper service and interchange of flying equipment." There is nothing in the present air-mail law to prevent the evils of discrimination against other air lines, cities, shippers, or even travellers. Senate bill 2 has the same safeguards in these cases that Congress has so carefully applied to other forms of transportation.

Senate bill 2 provides safeguards to take care of all these cases, and questions of violation and discrimination have to be passed upon by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In one case a connecting line—namely, Pennsylvania-Central—was charged by one of the transcontinentals with whom it connects with favoring a second transcontinental in the matter of connecting schedules, to the detriment of the first. This is entirely possible under the existing law, but impossible under Senate bill 2, as discriminations are strictly prohibited as the bill was drafted and has been reported out by the committee.

Under the existing air-mail law, T. W. A. advertised service to Baltimore, and was promptly told by the Post Office that regardless of the need of Baltimore for east-west service—that city having none—they would not be allowed to render such service. That is the information that has come to me. One week later American Air Lines, on their Cincinnati-Washington-New York service, were allowed to make a stop at Baltimore, which they never before had been allowed to make.

United Air Lines has advertised a service on its transcontinental line terminating one or two schedules at Philadelphia. On protest by T. W. A., the Post Office Department held a hearing at which Mr. Crowley, presiding, stated that the case would be decided purely on the basis of air mail, and that no testimony such as was given by the city of Philadelphia itself and various chambers of commerce as to the necessity for that service would be considered. Public convenience and necessity are not considered in any fashion under the Air Mail Act, whereas under Senate bill 2 the public is not only considered but protected.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. President, am I to understand that at present there is no authority for lowering the passenger rates of interstate air carriers?

Mr. WHEELER. The expert tells me there is none.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Is there no control whatsoever over safety devices?

Mr. WHEELER. That control is in the Commerce Department.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Where does the Bureau of Air Commerce come in? What authority has that Bureau regarding devices for the safety of passengers?

Mr. WHEELER. That Bureau comes within the provisions of the Air Commerce Act of 1926.

In House Document 141, on page 20, a further violation of the Air Mail Act is shown, and while the Post Office Department have full knowledge of this violation, and have publicly stated that it is their duty to enforce the act, no action has ever been taken in the matter.

In the matter of interlocking relationship it is shown that an assistant to the president of American Airlines held the controlling stock in Central Airlines, another air-mail contractor, and participated in the consolidation of Central Airlines with Pennsylvania Airlines, which consolidation was also unlawful.

As a further confirmation of the undesirability of maintaining the contract system in regard to air mail, the last bids prove conclusively that air-mail contracts are being bid for with a hope of making money from sources other than through the carriage of air mail at the bid price. Pennsylvania-Central bid $0.0000008, and were awarded a new air-mail contract, which at this figure will gross them approximately 12 cents a year. T. W. A. secured two routes at 1 mill per airplane mile, and will use on these routes a type of airplane that costs approximately 60 cents a mile to operate. The average airplane now used on any air line costs between 50 and 60 cents per mile to operate. Under Senate bill 2 all new operations would be subject to the same careful scrutiny that Congress has wisely provided in the case of other forms of transportation.

Threatening rate wars and unhealthy operating practices which are possible under the existing Air Mail Act would be impossible if Senate bill 2 were enacted.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. POPE. In what other ways do the air lines make up for their losses under such bids as those to which the Senator has referred?

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me? I think I can answer that question.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. TRUMAN. The only way in the world in which the air lines can make up for a loss of that sort is by the carriage of passengers and freight. Every time a condition of that kind arises those who ride on the air line have to pay for the loss suffered by the air line in its carriage of the air mail. The only reason why the air lines bid for the air-mail routes at such ridiculously low figures is to keep out competition, for fear they will be driven out of business.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Montana heard the question I propounded to the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] the other day. I became a little weary of waiting for an answer after an hour or so and left. I should like to propound the same question to the Senator from Montana.

Is there any difference in principle between the operation of air transportation and the operation of railroad transportation? Was any serious contention made before the Senator's committee as to any difference which would make it necessary to control air-mail transportation in a different way than that in which we have controlled railroad transportation or truck transportation?

Mr. WHEELER. I know of none whatever. As a matter of fact, we pay subsidies to the railroads, or we give the railroads contracts to carry the mails. Is the fact that the Post Office Department lets contracts to the railroads to carry the mails any reason why the railroads of the country should be under the Post Office Department?

I understand also that in certain instances contracts are awarded to busses and trucks to carry the mail, but who is there in this country to say that the transportation system by railroads or busses or trucks or by the shipping industry ought to be under the Post Office Department? It is a perfectly ridiculous proposition; it has led to nothing but graft, corruption, and political chicanery, and it ought to be stopped.

Those of us who were here when it was being sought to have air lines put into this particular section or that particular section of the country know that the location of the lines went by favor and not by right. Such a practice ought to be stopped. One reason why some of the transportation companies are in favor of putting the service under the Interstate Commerce Commission is that before the Commission a showing has to be made that the service would be in the public interest, whereas no such showing used to be required under the previous arrangement.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. POPE. Two or three days ago the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] made the argument since the Interstate Commerce Commission had had experience in dealing with railroad freight rates and thought in terms of railroads and the welfare of railroads, that to place this competing service under the Interstate Commerce Commission might not be a desirable thing to do. The Senator from New York said that in the case of joint water and rail rates he had evidence sufficient to satisfy his mind that the Interstate Commerce Commission had favored the railroads as against the shipping lines. I am wondering, from the experience the Senator from Montana has had with the Interstate Commerce Commission if he thinks there is any validity in that sort of an argument?

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator I introduced, at the request of the administration, a bill to put water transportation under the Interstate Commerce Commission, and I introduced, at the request of the administration, and had passed through the Congress a bill to put motor carriers under the Interstate Commerce Commission. Some of the motor carriers came before the committee and said that they did not want to be placed under the Interstate Commerce Commission because they thought the Commission was railroad-minded. Many of them, however, came before the committee and wanted their business to be placed under the Commission. It has been under the Interstate Commerce Commission for some time, not a complaint has come to me as chairman of the committee or to any member of the committee, and no suggestion has been made that bus and motor transportation has not been treated with absolute fairness.

We had before us the other day the man who has been appointed as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, Mr. Rogers, who had been handling, as head of the bureau, subjects relating to bus and truck transportation. He has been put on the Commission, and the truck industry from one end of the country to the other and the railroads from one end of the country to the other and the railroad brotherhoods all joined in recommending the appointment and the confirmation by this body of the nomination of Mr. Rogers.

So there has been such a fear as the Senator from Idaho suggests, but after the bills have been enacted and the services have been placed under the Interstate Commerce Commission there has been no complaint. The Senator knows that if anything of the kind as he suggests occurred the first place that those engaged in the trucking industry or the air industry would come to would be the committee. They would want an investigation. They would complain and say that they had not been treated fairly. We all know that they would get an investigation. There is no question but that the Interstate Commerce Commission has not been perfect; we all agree to that; no commission has been perfect, and, so long as it is made up of human beings it never will be perfect, but, by and large, the Interstate Commerce Commission has gained the confidence and respect of all classes of people in this country to an extent that no other commission that has ever sat here in the city of Washington has ever enjoyed. I am glad to say that much for the Commission, imperfect though they may be.

I now want to call attention to a provision in this bill with reference to consolidation. The provision found in the bill goes further than the provision of the Railroad Act, and further than the provision in the Motor Carrier Act. It is all right to get up here and say that this bill is going to permit monopolies, but let us see what are the facts and not consider merely statements as to what is going to happen. I read the provision:

Provided, That no consolidation, merger, purchase, lease, operating contract, or acquisition of control shall be permitted if such act would result in creating a monopoly or monopolies and thereby unduly restrain competition or unreasonably jeopardize another air carrier not a party to the consolidation, merger, purchase, lease, operating contract, or acquisition of control so proposed: Provided further, That if the applicant is a carrier other than an air carrier, or a person controlled by a carrier other than an air carrier or affiliated therewith within the meaning of section 5 (8) of part I, such applicant shall for the purposes of this section be considered an air carrier, and the Commission shall not enter such an order of approval and authorization unless it finds that the transaction proposed will promote the public interest by enabling such carrier other than an air carrier to use aircraft to public advantage in its operation and will not unduly restrain competition.

I know of no law and no provision that has been written into any law passed by the Congress of the United States with reference to monopolies that is so strong as the provision in this bill. There is not a law upon the statute books which goes as far as the provisions of this bill go. Those provisions are in the bill because of the fact that I went repeatedly to the Commission and told them of the complaints that had been made, and I went over the matter with Mr. Eastman, who assured me that every precaution was being taken; and every precaution has been taken.

Mr. President, I wish to say a word or so with reference to the argument that has been made by the Senator from Tennessee concerning Mr. Haley. I never saw Mr. Haley until he came before the committee. He has been abused here upon the floor of the Senate because he went down to a room at the Carlton Hotel, I think it was, and sat down with representatives of the aircraft interests. What happened in that case? I will state what happened. The Commission itself asked Mr. Haley to go there. If there is any blame, it should not be put on Mr. Haley.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator point out to me a single line in the testimony which shows that the Commission sent Mr. Haley down to room 212 to confer with the air-mail lobbyists in connection with the preparation of this bill? I challenge him to do it.

Mr. WHEELER. We can show it. The expert will find it for me.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me say——

Mr. WHEELER. We will come to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I did not know that our rules had been changed and that experts could be brought upon the floor of the Senate here for any purpose. We have a rule about such matters. I have never liked the custom of chairmen of committees—and I have never done it myself as chairman of a committee— of having experts from a department come here and sit in the Senate and take part in these discussions and debates.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, well——

Mr. McKELLAR. For they do take part in them when they furnish information. I myself have never engaged in such a practice. I have not asked that the rule be conformed to even in this case when it has been brought out that two gentlemen from the Interstate Commerce Commission have been here from the beginning of this discussion advising Senators who were speaking in behalf of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator from Tennessee wants to ask a question, very well; but I am not going to permit him in my time to proceed along that line.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then, if that is the case, I want to make the point of order now that the rule of the Senate concerning those who have the privilege of the floor is not being enforced.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator wants to make the point of order now because, in the absence of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], who is ill in the hospital, I am trying to explain the bill and answer charges made, and when the Senator from Tennessee asked me a question——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. WHEELER. Just let me finish. I refuse to yield—and I have turned to this expert, who knows the files and who says that he will find the answer—because he does not want it answered, the Senator from Tennessee makes the point.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will withhold the point of order that the rule of the Senate be enforced as to those who are entitled to the floor until the expert finds what the Senator wants.

Mr. WHEELER. Very well, I am thankful to the Senator for that.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is nothing to be thankful for; it is a courtesy that I am happy to accord the Senator.

Mr. WHEELER. I am glad the Senator will grant us one courtesy; it is very generous of him.

Mr. President, I wish to say that not only do I understand that it appears in the record, but, from my personal knowledge and conversation with members of the Interstate Commerce Commission, I know they themselves asked Haley to go down there, for they told me so. Of course, it is all right to denounce these people as lobbyists. I do not know them and I never talked with them. I never saw them, and I would not know one of them if he walked into my office.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I assume that the Senator is not familiar with what is shown by the hearings before the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives. Year after year, charges were made that conferences with air-mail contractors were held, and that under the present Postmaster General it has been found not only wise but necessary to get the air-mail contractors together from time to time to discuss not only the matter of how much money should be appropriated, but also other matters relating to the extension of lines, and all of the necessary details connected with the building up of a vast air-mail structure. Therefore I ask this question: Does not the Senator consider it not only ethical, but practically necessary, for the man at the desk in the Post Office Department to get information direct from the contractors instead of trying to get it through a back door of some kind?

Mr. WHEELER. Of course. It is perfectly ridiculous to talk about lobbyists. When we have to get information, we call these people before the committees. We all know the railroads themselves maintain an office in Washington and all other large industries do the same thing.

At page 335 of the hearings Commissioner Eastman said:

Commissioner EASTMAN. I read what Mr. Haley had to say about that, and it is substantially accurate, although it does not give all the details. I shall be glad to tell you the whole story.

Senator MCCARRAN. I would like to have it.

Commissioner EASTMAN. On December 30, 1936, I received a letter from Congressman LEA, who was not then, I think, chairman of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, but who anticipated becoming chairman, and who said that he wrote the letter with the approval of Mr. RAYBURN.

He submitted to me a copy of a proposed air-carrier bill, and he also enclosed a copy of the bill with the relation to that matter which he filed last year. That latter bill was the one which embodied all the recommendations of the Federal Aviation Commission.

He said he was not sponsoring either of those bills, but he would appreciate it "if the proper persons in your Department could give some consideration to the matter in order that we might informally discuss the subject before the bill is filed."

I was extremely busy at that time, and the bills were voluminous. I called him up and found that he was in no immediate haste on the matter, but eventually I got around to it, with the result that I went up and had a talk with him, and said that I had gone over those bills, and I did not think that either one of them would serve the purpose.

I suggested the desirability of preparing a comparatively simple bill, which would contain what I regarded as the fundamentals of such a system of regulation of air carriers, leaving doubtful points to be brought up and considered at the public hearings.

In other words, I called that a minimum bill, and suggested that there might be need for additions to it, but that those who wanted additions on one side or the other might present those matters at the public hearing and prove their case.

He asked me whether I could prepare such a bill; and I told him at that time what I have told this committee, that I was not very well equipped for that, because, as Coordinator, I did not make a study of the air-carrier situation, nor had I been on the division of the Commission which had dealt with that matter; but, in response to his request, I said that I would undertake that, but that I could not commit the Commission to anything. It would be purely informal work, so far as I was concerned.

Before I finally prepared that bill he submitted, with a letter of January 29, another bill to me, which he said he was advised that all the air carriers, without exception, had agreed to, and he wanted me to consider that also.

In preparing my minimum bill I did not follow any one of those drafts. As a matter of fact, I used your S. 2 as a basis, and made additions, interlineations, and so forth, in that bill, striking out various provisions, and so forth, and getting it into the minimum form.

On February 5 I submitted that bill to Congressman LEA, with an accompanying letter. Would you like to have me read that letter?

Senator TRUMAN. I would like very much to have you read it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask the Senator if he is familiar with this statement appearing in the hearings before the subcommittee of the committee considering the Post Office Department appropriation bill for 1935? Mr. Howes, the Assistant Postmaster General, at page 251 of those hearings, said:

We then called a meeting of those already holding the existing contracts and told them we only had $14,000,000 to spend, and in our letter to them we suggested that they submit plans, if they had any, as to possible curtailment to come within this $14,000,000. They submitted some six different plans, and we finally ended up by taking a plan which was principally our own and deducting from each existing contract a percentage of money to take up the difference, the cut being an equal percentage of them all.

I point to that in order to show that soon after the cancelation of the air-mail contracts and while the air was filled with vibrations from the charges of fraud and collusion and spoils conferences the Postmaster General was doing the only practical thing he could do—that is, calling the contractors together to get their views.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator.

I continue quoting from Mr. Eastman:

I then had a talk with him, I think, over the telephone, and the substance of that talk is indicated in a letter which I wrote him on March 1, 1937.

Senator MCCARRAN. Before you go into that, Mr. Eastman, it is true, is it not, that on one or two occasions that I recall in times past you have conferred with me and have done me the courtesy of coming to my office for conferences on the drafting of bills on this subject?

Commissioner EASTMAN. Yes, sir.

I read now my letter of March 1, 1937 [reading]:

"Hon. CLARENCE F. LEA,
"Chairman, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, House of Representatives.

"DEAR MR. LEA: On February 5, 1937, in response to your request, I sent you a draft of an air-carrier bill, intended to be what I termed a "minimum bill." I also stated that I would later submit another draft, prepared on the same theory but providing for regulation of air transportation in foreign commerce as well as interstate commerce. Subsequently you asked me to confer with the representatives of the air carriers, with a view to seeing whether or not, or to what extent, we could agree upon a bill which would go beyond the minimum stage. Such conferences have been held, with me and with men from the staff of the Commission—"

That is where Mr. Haley comes in. I authorized him to have those conferences.

I had not seen that letter prior to today, but I talked with Mr. Eastman about it and he told me he sent Mr. Haley there for conferences with these men. Now is it fair to rise on the floor of the Senate and denounce a man working in one of the departments when his chief sent him to hold conferences with those people? Is it fair to charge that he is working part and parcel with them and that they are just a lot of lobbyists? Representative LEA asked Mr. Eastman to have a conference with the representatives of the air lines. Commissioner Eastman said he would have a conference with them and asked Mr. Haley to carry on the conference. Mr. Haley did so for the Interstate Commerce Commission. He worked nights and went to the hotel to talk with those parties, to see if they could not work out and agree upon the provisions of the bill which would be satisfactory to the Commission, satisfactory to Representative LEA and satisfactory to the industry. That is what took place.

As I said, I do not believe I know anybody in the air industry. As a matter of fact when the Black investigation was being conducted I think I voted to do everything that anybody asked me to do in connection with it, because I thought there was a lot of crookedness and corruption in the industry and in the Post Office Department at that time. To my knowledge none of the representatives of the air companies has ventured into my office. I do not like the idea, merely because we have the power to do so here, of rising and abusing some individual whom I do not know and saying he is just lobbying here, that he was mixed up with lobbyists in a hotel, and have the statement go out to the country that some decent employee of the Government of the United States is only a crook and a criminal when he is merely doing what his chief has told him to do.

Mr. MCKELLAR Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. MCKELLAR. The Senator has quoted from a letter dated March 1, 1937, appearing at page 338 of the hearings. If the Senator will turn to page 220 he will find that we have there the evidence of Mr. Haley himself. There we find the reason he gave for going there.

He never said a word about being sent there by Mr. Eastman or anybody else. Here is what he said. I asked him this question:

Mr. Haley, do you sometimes go to the Carlton Hotel?
Mr. HALEY. Yes, sir——

Mr. WHEELER. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. MCKELLAR. I am reading from page 226.

I continue reading—and may I say, Senator, that I was at the Carlton Hotel on several occasions in February, at least, if not in the latter part of January, in connection with this very matter. The reason why I went—

Does he say he went because Mr. Eastman sent him? Not at all—

The reason why I went to the Carlton Hotel was that we were doing this work overtime—nights and Sundays—and the offices of the Commission were closed, and the guards would not let people come in who were not employees of the Commission.

That was the reason he gave for it; not that Mr. Eastman had sent him there.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no; just let the Senator read on. Let him read on, on page 227:

Senator McKELLAR. You knew that you were undoing all the provisions in the two air-mail bills, under one of which you were operating?

He was being given one of the most severe cross-examinations that any man has ever undergone who ever came before a committee; and what did he say?

Mr. HALEY. Senator, all I was doing, as I have said before, was carrying out the assignment that Mr. Eastman gave me; and I am sure that Mr. Eastman had no ulterior motive in doing what he was asked to do by Representative LEA. He was giving Representative LEA his advice, and I merely handled the mechanics of it.

When the Senator from Tennessee was reading the testimony, why did he not read it all?

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Montana be good enough to read on the next page, page 228? Let us not read a part and only one part.

Mr. WHEELER. But the Senator from Tennessee read a part and then——

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; but I did it in answer to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no; the Senator did not do it in answer to me. He did not do it in answer to any question I asked.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did it in answer to the statement the Senator had made and the Senator's expert had made, that Mr. Eastman had sent Mr. Haley there.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Eastman did send him there. Not only did he say so in his letter, but he said so to me, and he said so in the testimony.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, whatever the Senator says Mr. Eastman said to him is correct.

Mr. WHEELER. He said it to me, and he said it to other members of the committee.

Mr. Haley said:

May I say just one thing further, which will take but a moment?

Senator McKELLAR. Surely.

Mr. HALEY. I think it has been said here before that the Commission has no interest in legislation. The Commission does not advocate legislation. It does in its annual reports to Congress occasionally make recommendations, but they are usually for changes in existing laws. The Commission does not function as a policy-making institution. That, of course, is also true of the bureaus of the Commission. The bureaus of the Commission and the directors and employees of the bureaus do not tell the Commissioners what to do; they merely carry out the assignments that the Commissioners give them. I thought that that ought to be in the record.

Senator McKELLAR. Mr. Haley, I want to ask you about another matter.

Up to the time this bill was passed, what experience had you ever had in fixing rates for air-mail companies?

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to have the Senator read nearly to the bottom of the page. It gives a very great insight into this man.

Mr. WHEELER. All right.

Up to the time this bill was passed, what experience had you ever had in fixing rates for air-mail companies?

Mr. HALEY. Before what time, Senator?

Senator McKELLAR. Up to the time the bill was passed giving the authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. HALEY. I had had none.

Mr. McKELLAR. He had none.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; but that does not answer the question as to whether or not Mr. Haley was sent down there, does it? I submit, Mr. President, that whether or not he had had any experience in that line, whether or not Mr. Eastman was wrong in telling him to go there, it is not right for some of us to rise on the floor of the Senate and abuse somebody because we may have the power to do it. We have not any right to do it.

Mr. President, I am not going to take up any more time. I wish to conclude with what I said when I began. I have no interest in the bill. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] introduced the bill. It came before the committee. A subcommittee was appointed, composed of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. They held hearings on the bill. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] came before the committee and gave each and every witness who appeared there a grilling.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I know the Senator from Montana does not want to misrepresent what occurred.

Mr. WHEELER. Not every witness, but——

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no, no, no; two or three of the witnesses only—Mr. Haley and Mr. McManamy and Mr. Crowley, I think.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator subjected some of those witnesses to the most grueling cross-examination that anybody had ever undergone before that committee or any other committee of the Congress. As a matter of fact, they were treated as if they were a lot of burglars coming down there.

After that hearing was had, and after Commissioner Eastman made his recommendations, the subcommittee went over the bill and reformed it in accordance with Mr. Eastman's suggestions. The bill came to the full committee, and the full committee unanimously reported it out to the Senate. I say now that there is not a law upon the statute books that goes further toward preventing monopolies than this bill does. It goes further than the Railway Transportation Act. It goes further than any other bill. Before any consolidation of any kind or character may be entered into under the bill, it must be submitted to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it must be shown that it is in the public interest and that there are not any monopoly features about it.

So, in concluding, let me say that the Senate ought to be given an opportunity to vote on this bill. If they do not want the bill enacted they should be given an opportunity to vote it down. If they do want it enacted, and it is in the interest of the people of the country, and in the interest of transportation, and in the interest of the traveling public, then the bill should be passed at this session of Congress.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I now ask that the rule be enforced as to persons who are entitled to the privileges of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee make the point of order?

Mr. McKELLAR. I make the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. Persons not entitled to the privileges of the floor will leave the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if the point of order is raised against this man from the Interstate Commerce Commission, I desire to say here and now that I shall raise the point of order with reference to every man who comes on the floor of the Senate with members of the Finance Committee or any other committee that has bills pending before the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will join the Senator in that.

Mr. WHEELER. It is a perfectly ridiculous rule and a perfectly wrong thing to stop persons coming here under these circumstances, because everybody knows that no individual Senator can keep in mind all the details of the bills that are pending. It is only for the benefit of the Senate that persons familiar with the details of the bills are permitted to come upon the floor of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the point of order is to be made, I suggest that it ought not to be made until after the so-called tax-loophole bill is passed, for I have not yet found anybody who understands it.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say that the point of order will be made with reference to the tax-loophole bill.

HUGO L. BLACK

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, on yesterday, when the Senate was considering the nomination of my colleague [Mr. BLACK] as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, I had intended taking some part in the debate if I found it necessary; but the time was occupied by other Senators until it became entirely clear, late in the day, that the Senate was ready to vote. When it was entirely clear to those who are accustomed to observe the sentiment on the floor that an overwhelming majority of the Senate was favorable to the nomination of Senator BLACK, I decided that it was unnecessary to delay further the taking of that important vote; so I refrained from taking the floor, and I have no intention today of reopening any of the arguments that were made yesterday.

I have one specific purpose, and one alone, in taking a little of the time of the Senate today. That is to read into the RECORD, with an explanation of the identity of the authors, certain letters and telegrams which have been sent to Senator BLACK since his appointment as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States was announced.

Of course, Senator BLACK has received a great volume of communications; and it is not my thought to undertake to show the widespread approval which has been manifested of his nomination by putting into the RECORD promiscuous communications. However, in view of the debate yesterday upon one phase of the question, and in view of the injection of the Ku Klux Klan into the debate, I do desire to read some communications from outstanding Jews, outstanding Catholics, and one of the leading Negroes in the State of Alabama with reference to their attitude toward Senator BLACK.

I think it is well to incorporate this information in the RECORD, because, as time passes, the record made here yesterday, the debate which took place, and the importance which was given by some Members of the Senate to the allegation of membership in the Ku Klux Klan, may be at least a matter of interest to historians, and may have some important bearing upon the consideration of the qualifications of other nominees when the question of their confirmation is being considered by the Senate.

In making this statement, I think it is appropriate for me to say that from the very first day I ever heard of the organization of the Ku Klux Klan I opposed that organization. I did not oppose it secretly, Mr. President. I did not rest quietly in my opposition, as did some persons who, after the demise of the organization, became rather boisterous in its denunciation. I opposed it when it looked as if two-thirds of the voters of my State belonged to it; at least, they were as thick as a swarm of bees wherever I went. But I opposed it upon the stump, I opposed it in the newspapers, I opposed it in conversation everywhere; and those facts are known to all the people in the State of Alabama.

I wish to refer first to a statement appearing in the Evening Star of August 17, reading as follows:

Meanwhile, in Atlanta, Ga., Dr. Hiram W. Evans, imperial wizard of the Klan, said, "BLACK is not a member." He expressed indifference to COPELAND'S statement that the Alabama Senator was a "Klan sympathizer."

With the statement I have made I feel freer to present to the Senate the views of a number of leading Catholics and Jews in Alabama 10 years after the race of Senator BLACK, in which the Ku Klux question is now injected, with their knowledge of his life, of his position in Alabama, and of his position as a member of this body.

Without going further into the subject, I wish to read briefly from some of the letters I am tendering for the RECORD. I will first read letters from outstanding members of the Jewish race in Alabama.

I have in my hand a letter from Mr. A. Berkowitz, a lawyer of Birmingham, who is the head of a firm of six lawyers, as shown by the letterhead. I read merely the concluding statement:

Congratulations, good luck, best wishes. You deserve the place, you will fill it with honor to yourself, to your State and country. Bless you and keep you.

Your friend,

A. BERKOWITZ.

The following is from Birmingham, where Senator BLACK has resided for many years:

It is with a great deal of pleasure that I learned of your appointment to the Supreme Court. I feel that this is a just and fitting reward for your untiring work and efforts on behalf of our people. My best wishes and heartfelt congratulations.

LOUIS PIZITZ.

He is the largest merchant in the State of Alabama, a Jew.

Here is one from Montauk, L. I., from a man who formerly lived in Birmingham, a Jew:

Your appointment to the Supreme Court is a master stroke on the part of the President and a well-earned promotion for you. Heartiest congratulations and best wishes.

IRVING M. ENGEL.

Here is another telegram from Birmingham:

DEAR HUGO: I rejoice with your many other friends in the honor that has been conferred upon you. May God spare you for many years' health, happiness, and service.

JOSEPH H. LOVEMAN.

He is president of Loveman, Joseph, & Loeb, proprietors of a large department store in Birmingham.

I read now a letter from Birmingham:

I don't know whether I am addressing this letter correctly, whether it should be Senator or Judge. I am very sure that it will be Judge BLACK in a very short time.

I feel very proud of you, first knowing you, and secondly being an Alabamian.

My best wishes are with you.

Sincerely,

LEO K. STEINER.

He is a Birmingham banker, a Jew.

Here is another one from Birmingham:

MY DEAR HUGO: I want to extend my congratulations to you upon your appointment, and also to the President for having been successful in such a wise choice. In my humble opinion it would have been impossible for him to have found one more learned in the law. The only regret I have in the appointment is that you will not be able to continue the fight where it is most needed for the good of the ordinary citizen. * * *

Again wishing you a happy and successful career on the Bench, and assuring you that I will always consider it a great honor to have been your personal friend during the time that you resided in Birmingham, I am,

Sincerely yours,

LOUIS SILVERMAN.

He is a lawyer in the city of Birmingham.

BIRMINGHAM.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I want to take this means of assuring you that it made me very happy to see yesterday's papers come out with the announcement that the President sent your appointment as Associate Supreme Court Justice to the Senate. Knowing you as I do, I feel that the President again used his good judgment in selecting you.

ROBERT A. LAND.

He is a merchant in Birmingham, a Jew.

Here is a letter written from Martin Point, Maine:

DEAR HUGO: Here for the summer. I've just listened to the radio announcement of your designation to the Supreme Court, an announcement which fills me with pride and gratification. You've long since vindicated the faith of your myriad friends. This last and deserved honor elates them inexpressibly. Congratulations, Hugo!

Cordially. ISADOR SHAPIRO.

He is a lawyer, and a good lawyer, a Jew.

WATERVLIET, MICH.

Congratulations. Your nomination to Supreme Court is well-deserved recognition of your great ability and sterling character.

Dr. and Mrs. MORRIS NEWFIELD.

Dr. Newfield is a prominent Jewish rabbi in the city of Birmingham, a rabbi of the principal and outstanding Jewish congregation in that city, and has been for 20 or 25 years.

Here is another letter from Birmingham:

DEAR HUGO: It is needless for me to go into a long dissertation on how happy I am to learn of your new honor.

I want to add my congratulations, together with the other thousands you will receive from your close personal friends, and I am sure you will fulfill this honorable position with grace and dignity.

Mrs. Baum, Marcelle, and the boys join me in felicitations and best wishes for a bright and happy future.

HERBERT J. BAUM.

He is connected with the Protective Life Insurance Co. of Birmingham.

MONTGOMERY.

My heartiest congratulations on the high honor that has come to you.

SYLVIAN BAUM.

BIRMINGHAM.

Congratulations on your nomination. It is an honor well merited.

LEO M. KARPELES,

He is a Jew of Birmingham.

BIRMINGHAM.

Our sincere congratulations on your latest honor. Everyone in Birmingham is proud of your record and feel that this truly great honor is well deserved.

LOUIS and SAM PHILLIPS.

This is a firm of Jews in Birmingham, businessmen.

Here is another message from Birmingham. Senators will note that most of these communications come from the home city of Senator BLACK, where the people have known him all these years, and knew him intimately, not only before his race for the Senate 10 years ago, but have had an intimate acquaintanceship and contact with him for 10 years since that time. I read:

BIRMINGHAM.

Accept my heartiest congratulations on what I consider to be the greatest honor that can be bestowed.

BEN LEADER.

He is one of the leading lawyers of Birmingham, active in the practice there for a great number of years, and a Jew.

BIRMINGHAM.

DEAR HUGO: Your nomination to the high position of Justice of the Supreme Court is, in the opinion of your friends, a well-deserved honor. I wish to congratulate you, feeling that you will adorn this high position as you have all others. With best wishes, I am

Yours very truly,

A. LEO OBERDORFER.

He was formerly president of the Birmingham Bar Association, and formerly president of the Alabama State Bar Association.

NEW YORK.

Just heard of your nomination to the Supreme Court. Sincere congratulations. This is splendid recognition of unselfish, fearless public service. The Nation is fortunate to have been able to command for its highest tribunal one so able. Kindest regards.

JULIAN M. SAKS.

He was formerly of Birmingham, Ala., and has been known to Senator BLACK, according to Senator BLACK's notation here, for the last 25 years.

NEW YORK.

As a native Alabamian I am proud of the great honor conferred on one of her distinguished sons, and tender my heartiest congratulations.

OTTO MARX.

I have here also a few communications from foreigners, who, of course, fell under the condemnation of the Ku Klux Klan. Here is one from Birmingham:

BIRMINGHAM.

Hearty and sincere congratulations from one of your truest friends.

Dr. H. A. ELKONRIE,
President of the Association of Assyrian Clubs in America.

He is a man I know well and for whom everyone has very great respect.

BIRMINGHAM.

The Italian American citizens of Jefferson County wish to congratulate you for your good fortune of being nominated to the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States. While Alabama will lose the service of a great Senator, the Nation will gain the service of a great Alabamian. May God bless you and guide you as you sit in judgment.

ITALIAN-AMERICAN PROGRESSIVE ASSOCIATION.

Another telegram from Birmingham:

Just a few words to congratulate you for the honor that has been conferred upon you by the President. We in Alabama are confident you will carry out your new duty with satisfaction to the public. I personally wish you more honor and success.

That comes from the Italian Baptist Church of Birmingham.

I now read a telegram from probably the outstanding Negro in Birmingham, Oscar W. Adams, a man who is and has been for a long time the editor and publisher of a colored newspaper in Birmingham:

May I express to you my deep sense of happiness over your nomination to the position of Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court, and to congratulate you upon your early confirmation by the Senate of which you are so valuable a Member. Because of your experience and fitness in life and intelligence and your loyalty to party and Nation I feel that no one is better fitted than you for the high place to which you have been named. Please accept the warm feelings of my heart for your continued success in this new field of statesmanship.

OSCAR W. ADAMS.

I now present communications from outstanding members of the Catholic Church in Birmingham and in Alabama. I read a telegram, as follows:

I desire to endorse your elevation to Supreme Court and state that United States Senator HUGO BLACK has never demonstrated Klan prejudice in Alabama or shown any but a fair spirit toward members of the Roman Catholic Church of Alabama. I was the first grand knight of the Knights of Columbus in Alabama and served two terms district deputy for Alabama of Knights of Columbus.

JOHN W. O'NEILL.

I read a telegram from one of the outstanding lawyers in Birmingham, a man well known to me. The telegram is not addressed from Birmingham, but was sent from Fayetteville while he was away from home:

Accept my sincerest congratulations on your appointment to the Supreme Court.

Devotedly,

WILLIAM S. PRITCHARD.

Mr. Pritchard is a former State commander of the Knights of Columbus, and also the former State commander of the American Legion.

I read a letter from Mobile, Ala.:

Please allow me to join with your other friends to offer my sincere congratulations to you on the occasion of your appointment to the Supreme Court Bench. This is recognition for service well performed and loyalty to a cause, and is a distinct honor for you and for our State.

This is one appointment that our President never will regret, as I know that you will enter into your new duties and discharge them with the same ability and integrity and loyalty that you have done in the Senate.

I rejoice with you and your friends and wish you unlimited success in your new field.

Sincerely yours,

HERVE CHAREST.

That letter was written on the stationery of the Knights of Columbus, Mobile Council No. 666.

I read another letter from Mobile:

You will get many a message of well wishes; please accept mine somewhat differently.

No news could have appeared in the headline of our newspapers yesterday that would have given me as much pleasure as seeing your appointment to the highest tribunal within our Constitution.

The South has always felt with pride when they thought of Supreme Justice White, and in years to come I want to see another southern man's name placed alongside of Judge White's with his same ability, and I know you have it.

I cannot add more to the above, which expresses my sincere feeling.

Good luck at all times.

Your friend,

H. C. MURNAN.

Mr. Murnan was one of the chief engineers in the construction of the Panama Canal. He is a Roman Catholic. All these later messages are from Catholics.

I read a telegram from Mobile:

May we extend to you our sincere and heartiest congratulations upon your appointment to the Supreme Court of the United States. A logical appointment of a logical man.

VINCENT B. MCALEER.
JOSEPH N. LANGAN.

They are lawyers in the city of Mobile, Ala.

I read an extract from a letter from New York:

One of the statements published yesterday recalls a memorable conversation we had——

This is from a personal acquaintance of Senator BLACK—and reminds me that, as a Roman Catholic, it is my duty now to record my unqualified and enthusiastic approval of your selection for a place on the highest court of the people.

With assurance of my highest esteem and loyal good wishes.

JAMES O'SHAUGHNESSY.

I read a letter from Mobile:

It was with a great deal of pride and pleasure that I read of your nomination by President Roosevelt to the United States Supreme Court. It certainly was a great honor to you and all Alabama should be proud of you, and I wish to join those sending you the sincerest of felicitations and best wishes for your continued success in the high office to which you have been called.

With assurances of my personal esteem, I remain,

Yours very truly,

W. V. McDERMOTT.

That is another lawyer of the city of Mobile, an active and devoted Catholic in that really Catholic city.

I shall not further read such endorsements.

I now wish to read a telegram from Mrs. Beck, a Jewish lady with whose family Senator BLACK lived before he was married. Her family are well-known Jews in Birmingham. Her husband was a businessman. I knew him well before he died. Senator BLACK lived in that Jewish home before he went to the World War. Mrs. Beck says in her telegram:

I have just heard of appointment and honor bestowed upon you. Congratulations. Love to all.

Mrs. H. L. BECK.

I am informed that Mrs. Beck came to Washington on the occasion of President Roosevelt's inauguration, and during her visit here stayed in the home of Senator and Mrs. HUGO BLACK.

I give that personal touch simply to show how Jews, some of whom know this man intimately, because he lived in their home—and Mrs. Beck lived in his home while visiting here in Washington—rush to send to the colleagues of Senator BLACK in the Senate their testimonials to his fairness and his friendliness toward those who were condemned and fought by the Ku Klux Klan.

Let me now read just two or three telegrams from the judiciary of Alabama, because some comment has been made about the judicial temperament of Senator BLACK.

I read a telegram addressed to me from Montgomery, Ala., our State capital:

Permit me to commend in every way appointment of Senator BLACK. He is a great and profound lawyer and as such has the unqualified respect and esteem of this court. His appointment is highly gratifying from the bench and bar of this State and from the South generally.

CHARLES R. BRICKEN,
Presiding Judge, Court of Appeals of Alabama.

We have two appellate courts in Alabama—the court of appeals, which has certain jurisdiction, and what is known as the supreme court, which is our highest court of appeals. I have before me a telegram from the chief justice of the Supreme Court of Alabama. Both of these judges, permit me to say, have been honored by and have held the confidence of the people of Alabama for many long years. I think Judge Anderson has been on the Supreme Court of Alabama for at least 30 years. He has always been a candidate for that office without opposition. He is loved and respected by the people of the State. Judge Brickens, of the other court, has been presiding judge for some 12 or 15 years, and always has been reelected without opposition. He is a man of the highest type, having the confidence of the people of Alabama.

I read a telegram from Judge Anderson addressed to me:

I regard Senator BLACK as eminently qualified to become a member of our highest court. While Senator BLACK has been out of active practice since a Member of the Senate, previous thereto he enjoyed a fine law practice, and I regard him as one of the best lawyers in the State. With his age and vigor I think he will become a valuable acquisition to the Court. His character is above reproach. I recommend his confirmation.

JOHN C. ANDERSON,
Chief Justice, Supreme Court of Alabama.

I now read a telegram from the presiding judge of the circuit court at Birmingham. There are about 10 judges in the circuit court. Judge Thompson is the presiding judge, and he has sent me the following telegram:

I have known Senator BLACK for 25 years. His actual court experience has covered every field of law. His imminent success proves his ability. His personal and mental integrity insures fairness as a judge. This opinion is shared by the leaders of the bar, as I have heard them express themselves since his nomination.

J. FRITZ THOMPSON,
Presiding Judge, Tenth Judicial Circuit.

Here is a telegram signed by all the other members of that court—nine, I believe, in number. I will read the names into the RECORD at the end of the telegram:

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., August 16, 1937.

Senator JOHN H. BANKHEAD:

We, the undersigned judges of the Tenth Judicial Circuit of Alabama, earnestly urge confirmation of Senator BLACK. As an active practitioner for a long number of years in the courts of Alabama and the Federal courts and in both trial and appellate work he has distinguished himself as a lawyer of the highest ability. He has a striking legal mind and is thorough in his work and goes to infinite pains that what he does may be entirely accurate. He is a man of indefatigable energy. He has at all times been courteous, fair, and frank in his dealings with the courts, his fellow members of the bar, parties, and witnesses. His work is relied on implicitly. The finest and highest ideals of the legal profession have been exemplified in his professional career. His whole life to those who know him well stands as an all-sufficient proof of his worthiness of any trust requiring legal learning, ability, moral courage, honor, and uprightness. His moral character is unstained. These qualities have deservedly gained for Senator BLACK a high place among the leaders in the legal profession in Alabama and a high place in the esteem of his fellow citizens of his native State. We confidently predict that if he is confirmed he will perform his duties upon the bench in a fair and impartial manner and in a way that will fully comport with the finest concepts of the function of a court of justice.

Robert J. Wheeler, J. Q. Smith, J. Russell McElroy, C. B. Smith, J. Edgar Bowron, Leigh M. Clark, Richard V. Evans, and Gardner Goodwyn.

All the signers of this telegram are well known personally to me, and one of them was a classmate of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and myself at the University of Alabama.

Mr. President, I shall not go further into this matter, and my only excuse for taking this much time, after the settlement of this controversy, is that I desired to leave here a record of the testimony of his contemporaries, in personal life, in political life, in professional life, including Negroes, Catholics, Jews, merchants, lawyers, judges, covering all fields of human activity and association. I have felt that it was fair and just to him, in view of the adverse inferences sought to be drawn here on yesterday as to his qualifications, as to his fairness, as to his judicial temperament, to read into this RECORD the testimony of people who know him and who have voluntarily, and at their own expense, without information that such evidence was desired or needed, forwarded these communications, most of them in the form of telegrams, asserting their confidence in the man, their faith that he will make a great Judge, their testimony of his purity of character during all the years behind him.

I once had a contest with HUGO BLACK. We ran against each other and we had a vigorous, active campaign. As you know, Mr. President, it is not unusual when contests of that character are waged for the candidates to come out of the contest with bitterness in their hearts. I wish to say to the Senate that after a campaign which lasted for nearly 10 months in the State of Alabama, involving personal canvassing and speaking all over Alabama, and the free use of the newspapers, when the votes were counted and it was ascertained that HUGO BLACK, a man inexperienced in the politics of the State, had led four other candidates, including myself—and one of the candidates was a former Governor of the State, another a former justice of the supreme court of the State, and another a man who twice ran against Senator Underwood, once for the Alabama delegation to the national Democratic convention and once as a candidate for the Senate, and gave him great trouble both times—I had no bitterness in my heart, because I had no justification for it. HUGO BLACK had treated me just as I tried to treat him, with fairness. We had crossed swords upon the political battlefield but neither tried to strike an unfair blow, and I predicted, within a very short time afterward, in a public speech in his old home county, that the time would come when HUGO BLACK, a new Member of the Senate, a man who had left me at home, would be one of the outstanding figures in the Senate of the United States and in our national life.

So I say to Senators that, in my judgment, there is no reason for any man who voted for Senator BLACK to have any regret about it from any standpoint; and I hope now, with this statement, all differences will be forgotten. I hope we will close the book on the controversy which has developed around the confirmation of his nomination. Let us all give him a chance to act upon that great Court; and then if he does not give satisfaction, we will have the opportunity, with the privileges that this Hall gives to us in debate, to condemn him. But let us not do it now any further. Let us wait and let history unfold its unwritten record. I have complete faith, Senators, that his record of service will be one of great value to this country, and that it will not bring shame or discomfort or any great dissatisfaction to any Member of this body, regardless of his attitude on yesterday toward the confirmation of the nomination of HUGO L. BLACK.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, before I enter upon a discussion of Senate bill 2, for a moment I desire to have a word to say in addition to what the distinguished Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] has just said about our colleague the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], who has been made a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

I was born in Alabama; I was educated there; I know a great many of its citizens; I have kept up with its history and its development ever since I lived there.

I desire to endorse everything good that has been said by the gentlemen, many of whom I know personally, who have telegraphed or written Senator BANKHEAD and Senator BLACK concerning the selection of the latter as Supreme Court Justice. Yesterday I wanted to say some words in behalf of the confirmation of Senator BLACK's nomination, but being intensely desirous that a vote should then be had, I did not do so.

I wish to say now that I have served in the Senate for a considerable number of years, and I believe I know the Members of this body fairly well. The Senate contains many distinguished lawyers; but, in my humble judgment, from my observation and experience with Senator BLACK during the last 10 or 11 years, he is the peer of any lawyer in this body. I have known him as an advocate in this body. He is the peer of any advocate in this body, and we have here some of the best advocates in the world.

Senator BLACK is an able man. He is an able debater. He is a student. He is a thinker. He is a philosopher. He is one of the most indefatigable workers I have ever known in all my life. In my judgment, no Member of this body has a better record all along the line, taking it by and large, than has this distinguished gentleman whom the President of the United States has singled out to become a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

In my judgment, Senator BLACK will make a splendid Supreme Court Justice. He will make an able Justice. Over and above all, he will make an honest and an upright Justice. When I have said that, practically all that can be said about a man as a Justice has been said—an able, an honest, an upright judge. In my opinion, that is the kind of Justice Senator BLACK will make.

We have seen Senator BLACK at work in committees. We have dealt with him on the floor of the Senate. We know his ability. We know his integrity. We know his honesty. We know his fair dealing. It seems to me he ought not to have had any opposition here.

Though I had been elected to this body in 1916 I had not taken my seat in the Senate upon the occasion of the appointment by President Wilson of Mr. Louis D. Brandeis to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. As I remember, some 13 charges were made against him—and made against him by the same interests which are now making charges against Senator BLACK. Charges of the bitterest kind were made against Mr. Brandeis. Hearings were held for months and months. Delay after delay occurred. The remotest things that were thought to affect his life were investigated. He was heralded by many of the great newspapers of the country as utterly unfit and unworthy to go on the Supreme Court. After that long fight made on him he was confirmed by the Senate. And what a great judge he has made! All now sing his praises.

I am happy to say today, after a somewhat intimate knowledge of the work of Mr. Justice Brandeis since he has been a member of that Court, that no member of that Court ever made a more intelligent and fair, a more just, a more honest, or a more able, a more upright record than has Mr. Justice Brandeis.

I hope and expect that Senator BLACK will follow in the footsteps of the illustrious Justice Brandeis and will not let the recently uttered words of opposition affect him in any way in the world, as I do not believe they will.

Mr. President, in my judgment, the President of the United States at this particular juncture in our history could not have made a wiser appointment than he did make in the selection of our former colleague, my friend and my associate here for many years, the distinguished Senator from Alabama, HUGO L. BLACK.

I take pleasure in saying this much at this time, because I did not have an opportunity to say it yesterday. I felt then that we ought to vote then rather than talk.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, with the consent of the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and at the request of the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a telegram from the senior Senator from Nebraska, which was received last evening too late to be inserted in the RECORD, expressing his attitude toward the confirmation of the nomination of the Senator from Alabama to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAUPACA, WIS., August 17, 1937.

Hon. HENRY F. ASHURST,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

I regret my illness prevents me from actively participating in the work of the Senate at this time, but I hope through your courtesy to communicate my views upon the confirmation of Senator BLACK'S nomination to become an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. My long and personal acquaintance with him and my intimate association with him in our official work have given me a true insight into his character. I feel greatly grieved at the bitter, unreasonable, and sometimes malicious attacks which are being made upon him. His work in the Senate must convince everyone that he possesses a superior ability and undaunted courage which are seldom equaled or surpassed. His nomination to that great tribunal expresses the wish and hope of the struggling citizen asking only for justice for all alike. The scales of justice in his hands will bring renewed hope to millions of our common people throughout the country, and his nomination meets with the hearty approval of a vast majority of our people. He is a worthy representative of the common people. He understands their hopes and ambitions, and their liberties in his hands will be safe.

G. W. NORRIS,
United States Senator.

REGULATION OF AIR TRANSPORTATION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2, having to do with the regulation of air transportation.

Mr. BORAH. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the consideration of this matter was begun last Saturday; and the proponents of the measure took all that day, as I recall. They took up quite a portion of the day on Monday, and they have taken up all the time that has been consumed on the subject today—and then they jump on me for filibustering! I am not the man who has been filibustering. The proponents of the bill have been doing the filibustering.

They remind me somewhat of a distinguished Senator who was here a few years ago—one of the ablest and greatest men we have ever had here, by the way—who had a seat not far from where I am now standing. One day he made a speech of 4½ hours on some measure in which he was very much interested. After having spoken for 4½ hours, he turned around to me, who was sitting nearby, and said:

> You boys circulate around here and let's stop this debate Let's vote! Let's vote! Get around and see what can be done. Let's stop this talk. There isn't any use for further talk. Let's vote! Let's vote!

That is about the situation my friends are in today. They have taken up all the time of the Senate for nearly 3 days, and now they are accusing me of filibustering!

Mr. President, this is a very important measure. It destroys in part the Post Office Department and turns over its functions to the Interstate Commerce Commission. It takes away a large segment of the duties of the Commerce Department and turns them over to the Interstate Commerce Commission. It virtually draws a blank check on the Treasury Department, and we shall be paying the bills in tremendous sums for a long, long time.

I was almost thunderstruck a while ago when the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] asked why this bill repealed all the provisions of the Air Mail Acts of 1934 and 1935 governing aviation, and it was answered that those provisions had not been repealed but that they had been made stronger in the present bill. In order to see about that, I desire to read the provisions of the present law which govern the aviation companies, which prevent monopolies, which prevent interlocking directorates, which prevent interrelations of other companies that furnish materials; and then I desire to read the provisions of the pending bill, which does what? Which turns over to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to say whether these companies shall be allowed to combine, or whether they shall have interlocking directorates, or whether there shall be only one company or more companies, leaving it entirely to their discretion as to what shall be done.

I am reminded of the opinions of the Supreme Court about the Sherman antitrust law. For quite a while the Supreme Court upheld that law. Then in a decision they held that there were good trusts and bad trusts. The good trusts they would uphold, but they reserved the right to determine which were good and which were bad ones; and that did away with the Sherman antitrust law for all time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. When the Senator says the Supreme Court held that there were good trusts and bad trusts, I assume the Senator is putting his own interpretation on the action of the Court.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; that is what I am doing, but that is the fact nevertheless. The Senator knows there has been no "trust busting" ever since that time.

Mr. BORAH. No; but not because of the Supreme Court. It was because neither one of the political parties would carry out their pledges.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know what has happened; but since the Supreme Court rendered that decision about good trusts and bad trusts, practically nothing has been done in the way of enforcing the antitrust laws of this country.

Mr. BORAH. And nothing ever will be done so long as the trusts contribute to the campaign funds of both parties.

Mr. McKELLAR. Probably that is so.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I think I may remind the Senator from Idaho that during the discussion we had when the N. R. A. bill was up for consideration, the Senator from Idaho himself attributed some of the monopolies to the mergers which the Court permitted, which left very little competition in the field of some of the larger industries. So I do not think we can attribute it all to political inactivity. Some of it, in my judgment, was due to the Court's misconstruction of the antitrust law.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York tell me when there has been any determined effort upon the part of either party really to enforce the Sherman antitrust law?

Mr. WAGNER. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will let me use a part of my time, I will answer the Senator; or I will yield to the Senator if he desires.

Mr. WAGNER. I am quite willing to say that there have not been the prosecutions there should have been of many of our monopolies; but there have also been cases in which there have been prosecutions in which the courts have upheld the mergers. One of them, I remember—I have forgotten the name of the case; the Senator probably can remind me of it—where Mr. Justice Brandeis wrote a very strong dissenting opinion, in which he pointed out that, due to a merger in the leather industry, I think, all but 5 percent of the markets of the country would be controlled by that particular merger; and yet the majority of the Court held that merger not in violation of the antitrust laws.

So, between the two, we have not enforced the antitrust laws. If we had, I think prices would have been lower than they are today.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to answer his question?

Mr. BORAH. I shall be pleased to do so.

Mr. McKELLAR. A very long time ago I was a Member of the House of Representatives, and while I was a Member of that body I remember that we passed what was known as the Clayton antitrust law.

It was for the purpose of strengthening the Sherman antitrust law and putting teeth into it. That was the gist of the argument made in behalf of it. It passed the House and passed the Senate, and was brought before the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court did not actually declare it unconstitutional, but they stripped it of everything that was in it that was of any value in governing the trusts of the country. The Senator recalls that.

Mr. BORAH. I know that is the Senator's view, or he would not state it; but I quite disagree with him.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Court decided a case in which they virtually stripped the Clayton antitrust law of all its teeth. The Senator will recall that.

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not recall it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sorry the Senator does not, because it is a fact.

Mr. BORAH. I wish the Senator would refer me the opinion to which he has reference.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, I do not have it with me now, but it is well known.

Mr. BORAH. Both the political parties go into a campaign and make solemn pledges to the American people that when they are put into power they will destroy the trusts.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. They do not say a word in the campaign about being unable to do so, about not having the power to do so. They say that they will rid the country of monopoly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. And when the campaign is over they cease activities along that line.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. There are two bills pending before the committees of this body, one of which I have had the honor to introduce, either of which, or both of which, if enacted, in my opinion would go far toward ending monopolies in the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, Mr. President, and I think they ought to be ended, and I think the Senator is exactly right about the promises which have been made by both political parties and of the failure of both political parties to carry out those promises.

Let me call attention to the fact that in the very bill before us, instead of our regulating the trusts, instead of putting restrictions around the trusts, if the Senator will look at section 312 on page 101 he will find that the Interstate Commerce Commission is to be the benevolent institution which will regulate the trusts hereafter. I will say to the Senator from Missouri and the other Senators that that is why I brought emphasis to bear on the negotiations between the agents of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the lobbyists for the aviation companies, in order to show how benevolent that arrangement is going to be.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In connection with the remarks of the Senator from Idaho, and also the remarks of the Senator from Tennessee, concerning the efforts of the Government to proceed against monopolies, I think it ought to be stated that within the last 2 or 3 years the Department of Justice has proceeded not only by civil action against so-called monopolies and organizations in restraint of trade but they have proceeded by indictment against men in numerous cases charged with criminal conspiracies in restraint of trade, and the Federal grand juries have indicted such men. Of course, what may happen to those civil actions is up to the courts and not up to any particular political party.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I will yield in a moment. Those indictments have been brought, and I congratulate the office of the Attorney General on having gone even that far. But I say here publicly that I think it is the duty of the Attorney General to prosecute those cases with vigor to see that the antitrust laws are enforced. From time to time we have before the Committee on Appropriations requests for appropriations for the prosecution of trusts. I vote for all of them. I regret that they do not ask for more money so as to require these people who are violating the law in my judgment to obey the law. I do not believe in benevolent trusts. I do not believe in any organization within the Government being allowed to create trusts. Yet that is what is provided in the bill before us. Section 312, on page 101, would turn over the entire matter of regulating a trust, so far as aviation companies are concerned, to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that ought not to be done.

I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I was going to say that I did not catch the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky; but I was not offering any criticism as to any specific instance of failure.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that.

Mr. BORAH. I do say, however, that there is no organized, determined policy in this country against monopolies. There never has been; and, in my opinion, until we do settle that question such bills as that the able Senator from New York has conducted through the Senate—the housing bill, and the wage and hour bill, and all these other bills which are designed to relieve the poor people of this country—will be largely fruitless in their results.

Take, for instance, the building of houses which must be erected for the poor people. To whom is tribute being paid every time anything is purchased with which to build a house or to go into a house? Tribute is being paid to those private corporations which fix prices in the United States—the monopolies of the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is exactly right.

Mr. BORAH. At this time there is in private interests the power to fix prices of practically everything that goes upon the backs and into the stomachs of the people of the United States; and until that is controlled we may relieve, we may mollify, but we will never cure the trouble which we now have.

Mr. McKELLAR. And we certainly cannot cure it by turning over the subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator that I do not want any regulation of monopoly. I want it destroyed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator again.

Mr. BORAH. The power to fix prices by private interests is an evil which should not be tolerated.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I agree, of course, with everything the Senator from Idaho has said, and it is the one step in which we have failed thus far. As we improve conditions so as to give the worker a better wage, those who control the markets simply raise the prices of the commodities, and thus do not in any way lower their exorbitant profits. But I was going to ask the Senator whether or not he agrees or has agreed with a number of decisions which have been rendered by the courts where the Government did prosecute monopolies, either where the particular manufacturer was indulging in monopolistic practices or where there has been a merger of several different manufacturers into one entity. In many of these cases, though the Government has prosecuted, the courts have held, because they found in some distant place some combination, which was theoretical, not actual——

Mr. BORAH. I do not agree with all the decisions of the courts.

Mr. WAGNER. That has contributed somewhat to our failure to destroy monopoly.

Mr. BORAH. I do not agree with the decision of the court in the Standard Oil case, and in those cases where they distinguish as to the rule of reason. I do not agree with that principle. That was a matter, however, that was within the power of Congress to remedy by proper action and by proper legislation, and we have not done so.

I just contemplate for a moment this situation. Suppose the present administration with its tremendous power and its tremendous leadership in the White House, should announce a campaign for the extinguishment of monopoly in this country. It would, in my opinion, be the greatest crusade for human rights since the American Revolution. It would free the American people from the troubles which they now have as nothing else would or could; and the President with his support in Congress could end monopoly.

Mr. WAGNER. As I understand, the Attorney General is proceeding in the prosecution of some of these trusts which are in existence, which have not had the sanction of the courts.

Mr. BORAH. We ought to enact a law which would make it impossible for any corporation engaging in monopolistic practices to pass its goods through the channels of interstate trade until these corporations, properly censored, gave up such practices. We have the power to strip corporations engaged in interstate trade practices which are injurious to the public welfare. That would go far in solving the trust problem. We should enforce the laws we have and we should pass other legislation. It is a question which touches the interest and affects the welfare of every man, woman, and child in the United States.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am inclined to agree with the Senator; but while we are doing that, or while we are waiting to do that, for Heaven's sake let us not repeal laws we now have against monopoly concerning the great industry of aviation, and put it into the hands of a benevolent institution that will look at it as the aviation industry desires to have it looked at.

Let me show the difference between the law we are asked to repeal by the bill and the law as it would be provided in the bill. I read first from section 7 of the so-called Air Mail Act of 1934:

SEC. 7. (a) After December 31, 1934, it shall be unlawful for any person holding an air-mail contract to buy, acquire, hold, own, or control, directly or indirectly, any shares of stock or other interest in any other partnership, association, or corporation engaged, directly or indirectly, in any phase of the aviation industry, whether so engaged through air transportation of passengers, express, or mail, through the holding of an air-mail contract, or through the manufacture or sale of airplanes, airplane parts, or other materials or accessories generally used in air transportation, and regardless of whether such buying, acquisition, holding, ownership, or control is done directly, or is accomplished indirectly, through an agent, subsidiary, associate, affiliate, or by any other device whatsoever: Provided, That the prohibitions herein contained shall not extend to interests in landing fields, hangars, or other ground facilities necessarily incidental to the performance of the transportation service of such air-mail contractor, nor to shares of stock in corporations whose principal business is the maintenance or operation of such landing fields, hangars, or other ground facilities.

There is an inhibition. There is a prohibition.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me conclude my statement about these matters and then I will yield to the Senator.

I wish to read section 312 (a). It provides for consolidation, merger, and acquisition of control. Our bill makes suitable provision in terms that cannot be misconstrued. Four men passed on that provision. One of them was Senator BLACK, now Justice BLACK; another was President Roosevelt; another was the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]; and the fourth one was myself.

Listen to this:

SEC. 312 (a). It shall be lawful—

Not unlawful—

It shall be lawful, under the conditions specified below, but under no other conditions, for two or more air carriers to consolidate or merge their properties, or any part thereof, into one corporation for the ownership, management, or operation of the properties theretofore in separate ownership—

Could anything be plainer than that? Could any grant of authority be plainer than the authority to two corporations to merge?—

or for any such air carrier, or two or more such air carriers, jointly, to purchase, lease, or contract to operate the properties, or any part thereof, of another such air carrier; or for any such air carrier, or two or more such air carriers jointly, to acquire control of another such air carrier through purchase of its stock; or for a person which is not an air carrier or a carrier subject to this act to acquire control of two or more air carriers through ownership of their stock; or for any such person which has control of one or more air carriers to acquire control of another air carrier through ownership of its stock; or for any carrier or carriers subject to this act to consolidate or merge with, or acquire control of, any air carrier, or to purchase, lease, or contract to operate its properties, or any part thereof—

After providing that the air carriers or persons may do these things, this is the condition on which they may be done:

(1) Whenever a consolidation, merger, purchase, lease, operating contract, or acquisition or control is proposed under this section, the carrier or carriers or person seeking authority therefor shall present an application to the Commission—

Remember that Mr. Haley, who meets the aviation companies' lobbyists at night at their hotel——

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. In just one moment. Let me finish the sentence.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask the Senator not to get too far away from the subject he was discussing when I asked him to yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall not. I will yield in a moment. I continue to read:

and thereupon the Commission shall notify the carriers involved in the proposed transaction, and the applicant or applicants, and other parties known to have a substantial interest in the proceeding, of the time and place for a public hearing.

They may have a private hearing before that, just such as was had in regard to the preparation of this bill. They first met at the Carlton Hotel and agreed upon the terms of this bill, but afterward they had a public hearing.

If after such hearing the Commission finds that the transaction proposed will be consistent with the public interest and that the conditions of this section have been or will be fulfilled, it may approve and authorize such consolidation, merger, purchase, lease, operating contract, or acquisition of control, upon such terms and conditions as it shall find to be just and reasonable and with such modifications as it may prescribe.

Mr. TRUMAN rose.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that is the situation. On the one hand we have a prohibition against mergers and control, and on the other we have a provision that the Interstate Commerce Commission may grant permission for such mergers and control.

Mr. President, I promised to yield first to the Senator from Vermont, and I now yield to him.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee if he does not think it is more in the interest of the public that mergers should be made under the law, and by virtue of its regulations, than in violation of the law.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not think they ought to be made at all; and when there is a violation of the law those who violate it ought to be prosecuted. If the Senator knows of a violation of the law, while I cannot say that it is his duty, he might take steps, if he knows the facts, to have the violators prosecuted. It is one thing to say on the floor of the Senate that a violation of the law has taken place, but it is another thing to furnish the facts to the proper prosecuting officer. If a violation has occurred, I think the facts ought to be furnished to the Attorney General. I am opposed to the violation of law by trusts or individuals. I do not believe in it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does not the Senator know, after his thorough study of the record of hearings on this bill, that the Post Office Department considered applications for mergers in several important cases?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I do not; and if they did, they ought to be prosecuted for it.

Mr. AUSTIN. And does not the Senator know that those mergers were actually made?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I do not know that; but if they have done so, I will say to the Senator that if he will furnish me the facts, I will furnish them to the Attorney General, if the Senator has any qualms about bringing the facts to the attention of the Attorney General.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator look at part I of the hearings on Senate bill 2, page 147, and he will find there a report of Mr. Crowley, the Solicitor of the Post Office Department, relating to the consolidation of Pennsylvania Air Lines, flying between Washington, Detroit, and Milwaukee. He will find that Mr. Crowley also stated in the record that General Motors controls North American Aviation, Inc. (Eastern Air Lines), holding air-mail contracts on route no. 5, from New York to Richmond; route no. 6, from New York to Miami, via Washington, Richmond, Charleston, and Jacksonville; route no. 10, from Chicago to Jacksonville, via Indianapolis, Nashville, and Atlanta; and route no. 20, from New Orleans to Houston.

Then, again, the Senator will find that North American Aviation, Inc., according to the testimony of Mr. Graddick before the House Appropriations Committee on the Post Office Department appropriation bill for 1938, at page 302—which has been made a part of the record of the hearings on Senate bill 2—has recently purchased Wedell-Williams Air Service Corporation as holder of an air-mail contract on route no. 20, from New Orleans to Houston.

Again, on the same page of the House hearings to which I have referred, Mr. Graddick stated that Braniff Airways, Inc., original contractor on route no. 9 from Chicago to Fort Worth, Tex., via Kansas City, Wichita, and Oklahoma City, had purchased route no. 15 from Long and Harmon. This route runs from Fort Worth to Brownsville, and from Fort Worth to Galveston.

Each one of these consolidations and each one of these purchases was made after a hearing held by the Solicitor of the Post Office Department, according to the letter appearing at page 303 of the House hearings to which reference has been made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Vermont that neither the Solicitor of the Post Office Department nor any other solicitor of any Department ever had any right to allow mergers under the present law; and that I regret that the Senator has not taken occasion to present this material to the department of Government whose duty it is to prosecute persons, whoever they may be, who may be guilty of violating this law. They ought to be prosecuted. I do not know what the facts are. We cannot bring them up here in a debate in the Senate and say what should be done or what should not be done; but if the Senator has facts which show a violation of this law, I think it is his duty to lay them before the Attorney General.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am informed—though not so credibly as in the case of other consolidations—of a contract between Hanford Air Lines with Northwest Airways; another case in which United bought part of Wyoming; another in which Braniff bought part of Wyoming; another in which Western Air and National Park consolidated, to be called Western Air.

Mr. McKELLAR. In the opinion of the Senator, are these transactions contrary to law?

Mr. AUSTIN. I am not sure that they are.

Mr. McKELLAR. Unless they are, what is the point of bringing them up?

Mr. AUSTIN. They appear to me to be that way.

Mr. McKELLAR. If they are that way, the Senator's forum is in the Department of Justice; it is not on the floor of the Senate, when he is trying to get a bill passed that will permit the very thing of which he now complains.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is a misconstruction on the part of the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I sometimes misconstrue, but I do not do so intentionally, and I certainly would not do so in the case of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. Such facts as came to the attention of the Senator from Vermont were inquired into by the subcommittee, and I was under the impression that the Senator from Tennessee was present in person at the time of the examination of Mr. Crowley. That probably is not so——

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not recall it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Because the Senator does not remember these facts. But I think, as the Senator from Vermont has indicated, the purpose of preventing just that sort of thing is shown by the McCarran bill, Senate bill 2. Section 312 does not bear the interpretation the Senator from Tennessee puts upon it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not see how any other interpretation could be put upon it.

Mr. AUSTIN. There is a clear distinction in the circumstances under which consolidations may be made. They may not be made if they tend to create a monopoly, and we have just the type of supervisions provided for in that section that we ought to have with respect to other consolidations which have already been made and to which I have called attention.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator that, of course, I do not know what infractions of the law may have occurred. If there are any, I think it is the duty of the Senator to send the facts he has to the Attorney General's Office, and I think it is the duty of the Attorney General's Office to prosecute. I wish to say, however, that I disagree entirely with the Senator when he states that he does not believe that this bill will prevent monopoly.

Paragraph (b) of section 7 of the existing law provides:

(b) After December 31, 1934, it shall be unlawful (1) for any partnership, association, or corporation, the principal business of which, in purpose or in fact, is the holding of stock in other corporations, or (2) for any partnership, association, or corporation engaged directly or indirectly in any phase of the aviation industry, as specified in subsection (a) of this section, to buy, acquire, hold, own, or control, directly or indirectly, either as specified in such subsection (a) or otherwise, any shares of stock or other interests in any other partnership, association, or corporation which holds an air-mail contract.

Mr. President, the pending bill, if enacted into law, will repeal that provision and simply submit the matter to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and they may allow all the benevolent holding companies they desire. In other words, the bill provides for the establishment of holding companies. It provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission may allow holding companies to take control of any aviation or all aviation, if it sees fit so to do. That is why it seems to me that not long after we have had in this body one of the greatest contests that were ever fought here about holding companies we should not pass a bill which will permit them. We went through that fight. It was very close. Men lost their seats in the Senate on the question whether they voted for or voted against holding companies. I was one of those who voted against holding companies and, looking around this body today, I see more Senators than I can count in a moment who voted against holding companies. Yet, if they vote for Senate bill 2 they vote for holding companies; they vote to turn the matter over to the Interstate Commerce Commission and to make that Commission the agent of the Congress, to make it the agent of the President in establishing holding companies in the field of aviation. I was opposed to holding companies in aviation in 1934 and in 1935, and I am opposed to them now. I was opposed to trusts then; I am opposed to them now. That is why I am opposed to this bill.

There is another provision of existing law which this bill proposes to repeal. Is any Senator on this floor so simple-minded as to believe that those men who met with Mr. Haley in room 212 and whose names I gave a few days ago—it is not necessary to repeat them, every one of them lobbyists for the air-mail companies—did not know what they were doing when they wanted the existing act repealed? Are we so simple-minded as to believe that at that very moment when they were dealing with Mr. Haley they did not know just what they wanted? And just what they wanted is in Senate bill 2.

Here is another provision they wanted repealed:

(c) No person shall be qualified to enter upon the performance of an air-mail contract, or thereafter to hold an air-mail contract, if at or after the time specified for the commencement of mail transportation under such contract, such person is (or, if a partnership, association, or corporation, has and retains a member, officer, or director that is) a member, officer, director, or stockholder in any other partnership, association, or corporation, whose principal business, in purpose or in fact, is the holding of stock in other corporations, or which is engaged in any phase of the aviation industry, as specified in subsection (a) of this section.

Do you think, Senators, that the lobbyists for the aviation companies, who have been trying to get this law repealed ever since it was enacted, did not know exactly what they were doing when they put a provision in the pending bill repealing these sections of the law and substituting in their place provisions which would permit the Director of Aviation, when he thought a trust was all right, when he thought a combine was all right, to allow its creation? Incidentally, that man is going to get $10,000 a year if this bill passes. Do you think they did not know that if it was transferred to him to say whether or not a trust was good or a holding company was good or a merger was proper, what the result would be? Do you think they did not know what they were doing when they were seeking the repeal of the existing law?

I say I do not believe any Senator will stand on the floor and say that he thinks under those circumstances we ought to repeal these acts against trusts, against combinations, against holding companies, and instead allow a director under the Interstate Commerce Commission, who will have charge of this matter, to say whether a trust is benevolent or not, or good or not, whether a holding company is all right and proper and for the best interests of the country. They will do just what they have been doing ever since we unfortunately put the rate-making authority in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission. What have they done? They have raised rates every time they had a chance. They have raised them to the highest limits permissible under the law. They are serving the aviation companies. They are not serving the American public or the American Government.

Now I desire to read further.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. McADOO. With respect to the Director of Aviation, I ask the Senator if the power of the director is as broad as he has indicated in his comments on that section of the law?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; but when the employee of the Commission who is at the head of this division says he never looked at a rate in his life and knows nothing about rates, that he is dependent upon this Director for advice about it, I think it is very important.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is obvious to all of us that the pending motion cannot be disposed of this afternoon; I am not certain that it can be disposed of during the present session of Congress. The Senator from Tennessee has made a very valiant and intelligent fight against taking up the motion. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] as the representative of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], who is ill in the hospital, has felt it his duty to press the motion today. However, the tax bill is now ready to be taken up. I wonder, in view of the situation, whether the Senator from Missouri would be willing to withdraw the motion made by the Senator from Nevada——

Mr. McKELLAR. One moment, Mr. President. I have been charged with filibustering.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not charged the Senator with filibustering.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know, but others have. The filibustering has been done by the proponents of the bill. I have not had an opportunity to let the Senate know until this afternoon, what is really in the bill. I am discussing what is in it. I am discussing those sections of the present law which would be repealed if the bill should be passed. I think I ought to have an opportunity to discuss it fully. Here we have been going along all afternoon. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] could have brought the tax bill in at any time he wished, but the moment I begin to tell the Senate about the air-transportation bill, about the benevolent methods of the Interstate Commerce Commission in allowing good holding companies and good monopolies and good consolidations, then the tax bill comes in, and I am asked to withdraw.

I am not blaming the Senator from Kentucky, but I want to finish discussing the proposals and the provisions of law which it is desired to repeal. I think Senators ought to know about them.

Mr. BARKLEY. If there is no possibility of voting on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill at this session, the same ground will have to be gone over again in the next session; so I am wondering if we cannot suspend discussion of the bill at this session, if it would not be well to postpone further discussion of it until the next session, in order that the Senator may be saved the trouble of going over the same ground again at that time.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will give me that assurance, that the bill will not be taken up at this session——

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I cannot give that assurance.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator from Tennessee decline to yield in order that the Senator from Missouri may withdraw his motion?

Mr. TRUMAN. I cannot withdraw the motion. The motion is the motion of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN]. I am perfectly willing to ask unanimous consent that the motion may be laid aside temporarily to consider the tax bill, so that the Senator from Tennessee may have an opportunity tomorrow to conclude his remarks.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to give notice that unless some other method to dispose of the motion discloses itself very shortly, I shall move an adjournment, which would displace the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the motion?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not yet yielded the floor.

Mr. AUSTIN and other Senators rose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee has the floor. Does he yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator from Vermont want me to yield? I do not want to lose the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee has the floor, and no power on earth can take him off the floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Vice President.

Now, I want to read another provision of the present law which it is proposed to repeal:

(d) No person shall be qualified to enter upon the performance of, or thereafter to hold an air-mail contract, (1) if at or after the time specified for the commencement of mail transportation under such contract, such person is (or, if a partnership, association, or corporation, has a member, officer, or director, or an employee performing general managerial duties, that is) an individual who has theretofore entered into any unlawful combination to prevent the making of any bids for carrying the mails.

Why was that provision inserted in the law? It was because before any contracts were let, before any bids were advertised for, a former Postmaster General called all the interested parties to the Post Office Department. He did not go to a hotel about it. So far as the record shows, at any rate, he did not go to a hotel; but he called them to his office in the Post Office Department and told which to bid on which contract. He divided the contracts up.

This provision was incorporated in the law to stop that kind of business on the part of any Postmaster General, and it ought not to be repealed; yet it is proposed to repeal it and turn over to the Interstate Commerce Commission the determination of what the bids shall be.

Now, let me read further:

Provided, That whenever required by the Postmaster General, the bidder shall submit an affidavit executed by the bidder, or by such of its officers, directors, or general managerial employees as the Postmaster General may designate, sworn to before an officer authorized and empowered to administer oaths, stating in such affidavit that the affiant has not entered nor proposed to enter into any combination to prevent the making of any bid for carrying the mails, nor made any agreement, or given or performed, or promised to give or perform, any consideration whatever to induce any other person to bid or not to bid for any mail contract.

Why repeal that provision? It provides that honesty and fairness shall prevail in the making of contracts for these valuable mail privileges. Why should we repeal that provision of the law?

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] took exception to the next provision and I want to call attention to it:

Or (2) if it pays any officer, director, or regular employee compensation in any form, whether as salary, bonus, commission, or otherwise, at a rate exceeding $17,500 per year for full time.

The Senator said that is an intolerant provision. Let us see about it. It was inserted at the suggestion of the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]. That was one of his pet provisions, and it was put in the law at that time at his request. Why was it inserted in the law? We had been granting enormous sums of the people's money to various concerns; and it was not only reported but shown before the committee that out of these subsidies which we gave, out of the subsidies which the people had to pay, one man was being paid a salary of $75,000 a year for conducting one business.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think the Senator ought to yield after referring to the Senator from Vermont in his remarks as he did. I questioned the Senator from Tennessee respecting the source of the salary of that gentleman because, as I recall the evidence, he was engaged as an officer for a manufacturing company as well as for the company which transported mail. I hardly think the Senator from Tennessee is justified in saying that his salary came out of the people's money obtained by taxation and handed to him as a subsidy.

Mr. McKELLAR. At that time, when that provision of the law was enacted, we paid the aviation companies $21,000,000 largely in the way of subsidies for carrying mail. The only money they received out of other transportation was about $5,000,000.

The Government was paying about four-fifths of it; and out of these enormous subsidies that we were paying some of the officials were paid as high as $25,000, some as high as $40,000, and, as I recall, one of them was paid $75,000 a year. Those were the facts.

This provision stopped giving that money as subsidy, not to the companies themselves to build them up but to the officials of the companies. We found that not only were they officials of the air-mail companies but at the same time they were also officials of various other companies. Some of them were bankers and were made officials to look after the banking interests. Some of them were connected with the General Motors Corporation and were made officials to look after the interests of General Motors in supplying materials to these companies. Various other materialmen were drawing great salaries, and for that reason that provision was inserted in the act.

The provisions which were put in the law which now exists were for the purpose of deterring these men from violating the laws and taking the Government's money without let or hindrance. Not only did we give these concerns $21,000,000 of subsidy in 1932, as I remember the year, but we appropriated about $15,000,000 to give them lighted ways and airplane landing fields and safety devices, in all somewhere between thirty-five and forty million dollars; and then, when the existing law was passed, we got honesty. We got fair dealing.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the pending motion be withdrawn?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky if he is willing to agree that, if this motion is withdrawn by unanimous consent, the pending bill may be taken up again before the present session of Congress adjourns.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in that connection I will say that the Senator from Vermont realizes that we are approaching the end of the session. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] made the motion, and it was discussed for 2 or 3 days. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] opposed it. In the meantime the Senator from Nevada was taken ill and is now in the hospital; and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] in good faith has been attempting to represent the Senator from Nevada in the matter. The Senator from Nevada stated to me, at the time the motion was made and since, that he did not desire to have it interfere with necessary legislation which must be passed before adjournment.

In view of the short time remaining of the present session, as we hope—the next 2 or 3 days—and the important emergency legislation which will be coming over from the House and conference reports and other matters that will be pending, I should not feel that it was quite fair to other proposed legislation to agree that this motion may be automatically reinstated and that the Senate may proceed upon it for the rest of the session just as it has proceeded for the past few days.

I will say to the Senator that if this motion is withdrawn, of course at any time, if he is recognized, the maker of the original motion or any other Senator will have the same right to make a similar motion that the Senator from Nevada had when he made the original motion, and that right will exist not only at this session but at the next or any other session of Congress.

Under all the circumstances, I do not believe I ought to be required to agree that this motion may be reentered during the next 2 or 3 days, which we hope will be the termination of this session.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if any such agreement as that were proposed, not only should I object to it, but I should not yield to the Senator from Kentucky to make it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not asked the Senator to yield to me to do that. I desire to have the motion withdrawn unconditionally.

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I ask the Senator from Tennessee a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly.

Mr. TRUMAN. If the request to withdraw this motion should be objected to, would the Senator from Tennessee agree to a vote on the matter within the next 24 hours, say at 2 o'clock tomorrow?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I would not.

Mr. TRUMAN. Would the Senator agree to a vote on it at any specified time?

Mr. McKELLAR. No.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I desire to ask another question. I ask the Senator from Kentucky if he will look favorably upon an early consideration of this bill in the next session of Congress if we consent to his request.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that I am on the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which reported the bill to the Senate. I have been asked, not publicly but privately, whether it would be agreeable to set down this bill as a special order at the next session. My reply has been in the negative, because agricultural legislation has already been set down for special consideration at the next session, and, following that, the antilynching bill; and I think that is going far enough in the way of trying to tie up the next session of Congress as to what it will consider.

I will say to the Senator from Vermont that in the next session any Senator—not only the author of the bill, but the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN], who reported it, or any other Senator—will have the same right to make a motion similar to the one now pending as the Senator from Nevada had to make the motion at this session; and I think I ought to say that, so far as I am personally concerned, I shall throw no straw in the way of making such a motion unless it should interfere with emergency matters or business that ought to be taken up at the time. The next session will be long—much longer than the rest of this one, I hope—and I think that is all I ought to be asked to say.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and the motion is withdrawn.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

PREVENTION OF TAX EVASION AND AVOIDANCE

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8234, Calendar No. 1293.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the title of the bill.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 8234) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, prevent tax evasion and avoidance, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8234), which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments of the committee will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, in section 353, on page 3, line 17, after the word "royalties", to insert "(other than mineral, oil, or gas royalties)", so as to read:

For the purposes of this title the term "personal holding company income" means the portion of the gross income which consists of:

(a) Dividends, interest, royalties (other than mineral, oil, or gas royalties), annuities, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 353, on page 5, after line 14, to insert:

(h) Mineral, oil, or gas royalties, unless (1) constituting 50 percent or more of the gross income, and (2) the deductions allowable under section 23 (a) (relating to expenses) other than compensation for personal services rendered by shareholders, constitute 15 percent or more of the gross income.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment. In line 15, after "(h)", I move to insert a subhead as follows:

Mineral oil or gas royalties.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 355, on page 9, after line 8, to strike out "(b) Amounts used or set aside to retire indebtedness incurred prior to January 1, 1934, if such amounts are reasonable with reference to the size and terms of such indebtedness" and insert "(b) Amounts used or irrevocably set aside to pay or to retire indebtedness of any kind incurred prior to January 1, 1934, if such amounts are reasonable with reference to the size and terms of such indebtedness", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 355. UNDISTRIBUTED ADJUSTED NET INCOME

For the purposes of this title the term "undistributed adjusted net income" means the adjusted net income (as defined in sec. 356) minus—

(a) The amount of the dividends paid credit provided in section 27, computed without the benefit of subsection (b) thereof (relating to the dividend carry-over); and

(b) Amounts used or irrevocably set aside to pay or to retire indebtedness of any kind incurred prior to January 1, 1934, if such amounts are reasonable with reference to the size and terms of such indebtedness.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

Mr. BORAH. Is there any provision in this bill relative to the subject of community property?

Mr. HARRISON. None at all. The committee has not yet taken up that question.

Mr. BORAH. Or the subjection of the depletion of mines?

Mr. HARRISON. Not a thing. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that the only subjects taken up in the bill are the following:

Domestic personal holding companies, as to which we have increased the rates and made some other changes to try to stop some of the loopholes that were revealed before the joint committee which showed tax evasion.

Incorporated yachts and country estates: We think we have closed that loophole.

Incorporated talent.

Artificial deductions for losses from sales or exchanges of property.

Multiple trusts.

Foreign personal holding companies.

Nonresident aliens.

Those are the only subjects taken up in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield for a question?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Is there involved in this bill any change in the existing law in the way of a limitation upon what persons who come into this country from some outside territory may bring in?

Mr. HARRISON. There is nothing in the bill on that subject.

Mr. PEPPER. That is not involved in the pending bill?

Mr. HARRISON. No. The matter of customs is dealt with in another bill.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH obtained the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to offer another amendment which has been agreed on?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 42, it is proposed to strike out lines 9 to 16, inclusive, as follows:

(a) Credits of estate or trust: For the purpose of the normal tax and the surtax an estate, but not a trust, shall be allowed the same personal exemption as is allowed to a single person under section 25 (b) (1). If no part of the income of the estate or trust is included in computing the net income of any legatee, heir, or beneficiary, then the estate or trust shall be allowed the same credits against net income for interest as are allowed by section 25 (a).

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

(a) Credits of estate or trust—

(1) For the purpose of the normal tax and the surtax, an estate or trust shall be allowed the same personal exemption as is allowed to a single person under section 25 (b) (1), except that no exemption shall be allowed a trust if the trust instrument requires or permits the accumulation of any portion of the income of the trust and there is not distributed an amount equal to the net income. For the purposes of this paragraph the term "net income" does not include amounts included in gross income which, under the law of the jurisdiction under which the trust is administered, cannot (even if permitted or required by the trust instrument to be considered as income) be considered as income and are not distributable.

(2) If no part of the income of the estate or trust is included in computing the net income of any legatee, heir, or beneficiary, then the estate or trust shall be allowed the same credits against net income for interest as are allowed by section 25 (a).

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, is this the amendment which has been worked out by the experts of the Treasury with certain gentlemen who are interested in sections 401 and 402, and is this the amendment that was designed to take care of that situation?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this is the amendment agreed on in the conference on this matter, and the purpose is to eliminate a great many reports and useless expense.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What is the effect of the amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, section 401 of the House bill takes away the personal exemption of $1,000 from all trusts. It has been called to the attention of the committee that certain receipts which are "income" for Federal income-tax purposes are considered as accretions to principal under State law. The local law in such cases may prevent distribution by the fiduciary of such amounts, even though the trust instrument requires full distribution of the trust "income", and may compel the fiduciary to add them to corpus.

Under the committee amendment, the personal exemption of $1,000 is withdrawn from any trust if the trust instrument requires or permits the accumulation of any portion of the trust income and there is not distributed an amount equal to the net income; but the term "net income", for the purposes of the paragraph, does not include amounts included in gross income, which, under the law of the jurisdiction under which the trust is administered, cannot, even if permitted or required by the trust instrument to be considered as income, be considered as income, and are not distributable.

The amendment will operate to relieve fiduciaries of trusts of paying tax with respect to amounts of this character not in excess of $1,000 for the taxable year, without opening any loophole for avoidance of taxes through setting up trusts to accumulate, and is in the interest of administrative economy and simplicity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I send another amendment to the desk and ask to have it acted on.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 43, it is proposed to strike out lines 13 and 25, and lines 1 and 2 on page 44, as follows:

(4) Every estate the net income of which for the taxable year is $1,000 or over;
(5) Every estate or trust the gross income of which for the taxable year is $5,000 or over, regardless of the amount of the net income;
(6) Every estate or trust of which any beneficiary is a nonresident alien; and
(7) Regardless of the amount of the gross or net income of the trust:
(A) Every trust having a net income; and
(B) Every trust, though having no net income, which would have a net income if distributions had not been made which under the terms of the trust instrument were in the discretion of the trustee or conditioned upon a contingency.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

(4) (A) Every estate, and every trust entitled to the personal exemption allowed by section 163 (a) (1), the net income of which for the taxable year is $1,000 or over.
(B) Every trust, not entitled to a personal exemption under section 163 (a) (1), which has a net income for the taxable year.
(5) Every estate or trust the gross income of which for the taxable year is $5,000 or over, regardless of the amount of the net income;
(6) Every estate or trust of which any beneficiary is a nonresident alien; and
(7) Regardless of the amount of the gross or net income, every trust, though having no net income, which would have a net income if distributions had not been made which under the terms of the trust instrument were in the discretion of the trustee or conditioned upon a contingency; but subject to such conditions, limitations, and exceptions and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, a fiduciary required by this paragraph to file a return may be exempted from the requirement of filing such return.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask for an explanation of the amendment. I may add that these amendments were drawn after the committee had instructed the experts to confer, but I think the members of the committee and the Senate ought to have an explanation of them before they are acted on.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I think the Senator is correct.

The amendment to paragraph (4) of subsection (a) is made necessary by the amendment to section 163 (a) and relieves trusts entitled to the personal exemption allowed by section 163 (a) (1), and not having a net income for the taxable year of $1,000 or more, from filing returns.

The amendment made to paragraph (7) of subsection (a) of this section merely empowers the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, to exempt fiduciaries from the requirement of filing returns otherwise required by such paragraph, subject to such conditions, limitations, and exceptions as he may prescribe. This amendment will enable the Treasury Department to dispense with such returns in cases where they are unnecessary to protect the revenue and so avoid unnecessary inconvenience and expense to fiduciaries. The other amendments make necessary the elimination of paragraph (7) (A) of this subsection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, was the amendment on page 9, line 13, agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I do not feel that this body, out of fairness to itself, can permit the passage of this important piece of legislation without some consideration. I think the Members of the Senate know that I usually try to be reasonable; I do not like to inject objections. I appreciate the fact that the Committee on Finance has been making a study of this matter, and I appreciate that it is a technical subject; but there is not a Senator who does not realize that from the minute the bill was brought up there has been complete confusion. The chairman of the committee has not known whether or not certain amendments were adopted. The Presiding Officer has not known. We have not had any explanation of the bill. The bill and the report were laid on our desks today for the first time.

I realize that it is late in the session, and it is necessary to put legislation through rapidly; but, so far as I am concerned, I cannot permit an important piece of legislation such as this to go through in 15 or 20 minutes of confused consideration without any general explanation of the bill.

It is my belief that the bill should go over until tomorrow. I will say frankly that I do not know of any objection I may have to it, but I do not think this body, in fairness to itself, can permit this piece of proposed legislation to go through with this sort of consideration.

Personally, I should like to have an opportunity to take the bill home tonight and study it and to read the report and the hearings. Probably there is not one chance in a hundred that I will have any objection to the bill tomorrow, but I feel we should handle this measure in the way I suggest; and I say frankly that unless there is a willingness upon the part of those in charge of the bill either to go into a complete explanation tonight, or to permit it to go over to be voted on the first thing tomorrow, while I do not like to make a statement of this kind I feel it will be necessary for me to talk for a considerable length of time upon other subjects. I do not desire to be an obstructionist, but I feel that the Senate cannot afford to put this bill through tonight.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I think the request of the Senator is quite a reasonable one, and I shall be glad at this time to try to answer any questions he may ask as to any paragraph.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The trouble is that we are not sufficiently familiar with the bill to be in a position to ask questions with regard to its provisions.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator prefers to have the bill go over until tomorrow, I shall raise no objection to that. I may say that some of the Senators who are in charge of the bill are trying to settle some kinks in the sugar controversy, and I was anxious to get this bill through as quickly as possible.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I fully appreciate that, and I was casting no reflection on either the committee or the chairman of the committee; but I do not think the bill should be put through so rapidly.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I inquire if all the amendments have been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. All the amendments have been agreed to. The question now is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought the bill was about to be passed. I wanted to discuss some features of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will say to the Senator from Washington that there is one remedy that he has if he desires to avail himself of it. If the Senate should pass the bill this afternoon the Senator from Washington would have a right tomorrow to move to reconsider, or to bring to the attention of the Senate any part of the bill that might be objectionable to him.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I fully appreciate that fact, Mr. President. My objection is not to the bill or to any part of it. My objection is to putting through, in 15 or 20 minutes, an important piece of legislation in such confusion that no one knows what is going on. I am perfectly willing to yield the floor if an agreement may be had that we shall vote upon the bill the first thing tomorrow. Probably I shall not object to it then, and I shall not do anything to obstruct action upon it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say to the Senator that this is a very technical measure, drawn by the Treasury to fill up tax loopholes. Frankly, I do not think the Senator will know any more about the bill tomorrow than he does today; and I will say to the Senator that I shall not know any more about it then than I now know.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I am perfectly willing to agree with the Senator that I may not know any more about the bill tomorrow than I do today; but I feel it my duty to myself to try to make some little effort to find out what the bill is about.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it seems unlikely that anything else will be done about the bill by the Senate this afternoon. Suppose I invite the attention of Senators who wish to stay and listen to me. Some may wish to leave and go home—I know that many of them do—but I shall undertake to make an explanation of the bill, so that the explanation may be read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD tomorrow, and we may have a vote tomorrow, unless objection shall be raised.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield the floor?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. My understanding is that we will vote upon the bill the first thing tomorrow.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. If the Senator desires an explanation, I shall not mind making it now, so that it will appear in the RECORD tomorrow.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not ask for an explanation. I ask for an opportunity to read the report and the bill tonight, so that I may vote more intelligently upon it tomorrow.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator suggest any particular time for taking the vote?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. No particular time.

Mr. HARRISON. Very well.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. With that assurance, I yield the floor.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF CALENDAR TOMORROW

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no doubt that the bill will be voted upon at an early moment after the Senate meets tomorrow. It is contemplated that we shall take a recess for that purpose. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow at the conclusion of the consideration of the pending bill, subject to any conference reports that may be ready for disposition, the calendar be called for the consideration of unobjected bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request made by the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I am sorry, but I did not hear the full statement of the Senator from Kentucky. Will the Senator restate it?

Mr. BARKLEY. I stated that it is obvious that the tax-loophole bill will be disposed of soon after we meet tomorrow. I ask unanimous consent that, subject to conference reports which may be ready for consideration, the calendar be called for the consideration of unobjected bills immediately after the pending bill shall have been disposed of tomorrow.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, may I make a further inquiry? Will the Senator indicate what conference report or reports he has in mind?

Mr. BARKLEY. If the conference report on the sugar bill shall be ready, that will be taken up. It is desired that the Senate have something to do while waiting for such conference reports as may come in. Numerous bills are now in conference. I do not want them to be shunted aside simply because of the call of the calendar. If a conference report is ready to be taken up in the middle of the call of the calendar, I wish to have it taken up when it is ready.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. PEPPER. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is not a conference report a privileged matter even during the call of the calendar?

The VICE PRESIDENT. A conference report is a privileged matter, and may be taken up by the Senate at any time.

Mr. BARKLEY. So it is not necessary for me to ask unanimous consent that a conference report be taken up during the call of the calendar?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not necessary that unanimous consent be obtained in order to have a conference report come before the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Regardless of conference reports, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the consideration of the pending bill the calendar be called for the consideration of unobjected bills.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I wish to say by way of explanation that I did not understand that the objection I made included the consideration of bills on the calendar. The objection I made was with regard to the consideration of conference reports. Since such an objection does not seem to have any force, I withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. GLASS, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported favorably the nomination of Meyer L. Casman, of Pennsylvania, to be regional attorney, region III, Philadelphia, Pa., in the Social Security Board.

Mr. VAN NUYS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Victor E. Anderson, of Minnesota, to be United States attorney for the district of Minnesota, vice George F. Sullivan.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of several officers and citizens for appointment in the Marine Corps.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

He also, from the same committee, reported adversely the nomination of Howard K. Wells to be postmaster at Colfax, La., in place of V. N. McNeely.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

OWEN J. C. NOREM

Mr. PITTMAN. From the Committee on Foreign Relations, I report favorably the nomination of Owen J. C. Norem, of Montana, to be Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Lithuania, and call it to the attention of the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be considered and confirmed at this time.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I wish to state the reason why I make the request. There is now pending and under consideration before the Appropriations Committee the third deficiency appropriation measure, which should carry an appropriation for the salary of this position. The Secretary of State has written a letter to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee requesting that the matter of the salary be taken by the committee immediately upon the confirmation of this nomination. It was expected that the nomination would be confirmed sometime ago, but it has been delayed and pending in the Foreign Relations Committee. Unless we can have immediate action on the nomination, it may preclude the action of the Appropriations Committee with respect to the salary of the position. It will result in a further complication. Unless immediate confirmation is had, the salaries of the new Ministers to Estonia and Latvia will also be in suspense. Therefore, I urge confirmation at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection has been heard.

Mr. MURRAY. I merely wanted to have the RECORD show the reason why I made the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further reports of committees?

MARY W. DEWSON

Mr. HARRISON. From the Committee on Finance, I report favorably the nomination of Mary W. Dewson, of New York, to be a member of the Social Security Board for the term expiring August 13, 1943.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that immediate consideration may be given to this nomination, and that it may be confirmed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the nomination.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Mary W. Dewson, of New York, to be a member of the Social Security Board for the term expiring August 13, 1943.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] for the immediate consideration and confirmation of the nomination? The Chair hears none; and, without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the President will be notified.

If there be no further reports of committees, the Clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Edward G. Dolan, of Connecticut, to be Register of the Treasury.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 18, 1937

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most gracious Father, whose blessings outnumber the sands of the sea and the stars that reflect the glory of the heavens, hear our prayer. We thank Thee for another day, with its opportunity of service; surely we are enfolded in Thy bosom and live by Thy mercy. Thou, who art the Comforter of the ages, from the recesses of Thy love let Thy blessings flow. O remember those who live in clouds of affliction and all those who are tried and entangled by the relationships of life. Draw near to those who are drifting as upon a sea in the darkness of an unstarred night. O temper the spirit of antagonisms. Teach us how to be happy and responsive and how to make friends by being friendly. May the Congress be attended by Thy grace and wisdom; the laws of our land, may they be faithfully executed; the affairs of state wisely administered; and may prosperty continue to bless our people; and Thine shall be the praise. In the name of our glorified Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

S. J. Res. 199. A joint resolution to authorize an appropriation for the expenses of participation by the United States in the Eighth International Road Congress in 1938.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2281) entitled "An act to regulate proceedings in adoption in the District of Columbia."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 29. An act to require certain common carriers by railroad to install and maintain certain appliances, methods, and systems intended to promote the safety of employees and travelers on railroads, and for other purposes.

S. 1040. An act placing provisional officers of the World War in the same status with emergency officers of the World War and extending to them the same benefits and privileges as are now or may hereafter be provided by law, orders, and regulations for said emergency officers, and for other purposes.

S. 1283. An act to increase the extra pay to enlisted men for reporting.

S. 1516. An act to authorize certain payments to the American Gold Star Mothers of the World War and the American War Mothers, Inc.; the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, Inc.; and the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, Inc.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437) entitled "A joint resolution relative to determination and payment of certain claims against the Government of Mexico."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 2711) entitled "An act to create a Division of Water Pollution Control in the United States Public Health Service, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. COPELAND, Mrs. CARAWAY, Mr. GUFFEY, Mr. CLARK, and Mr. WHITE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report and statement on the bill H. R. 7646, to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", for printing under the rule.

SMALL RESERVOIRS

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon the bill (H. R. 2512) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of small reservoirs under the Federal reclamation laws.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho calls up a conference report on the bill H. R. 2512, which the Clerk will report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2512) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of small reservoirs under the Federal reclamation laws, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

COMPTON I. WHITE,
JOHN J. DEMPSEY,
PAUL R. GREEVER,
FRANCIS CASE,
Managers on the part of the House.

ALVA B. ADAMS,
JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
GERALD P. NYE.
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2512) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of small reservoirs under the Federal reclamation laws, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying report.

The bill as passed by the House authorized an appropriation out of the reclamation fund for the purpose of constructing small reservoirs. The Senate amended the bill providing for the use of relief funds for such construction. The managers on the part of the House insisted that this was properly a matter for the reclamation fund rather than from relief funds owing to the difficulties entailed by the regulations in connection with the use of relief funds. The Senate upon hearing the managers on the part of the House receded from their amendment leaving the House bill as it originally passed the House.

COMPTON I. WHITE,
JOHN J. DEMPSEY,
PAUL R. GREEVER,
FRANCIS H. CASE,
Managers on the Part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO TRAFFIC ACT

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 8266, to amend the District of Columbia Traffic Act, as amended, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 8266, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso in section 6 (c) of the District of Columbia Traffic Act is amended by inserting after the comma following the phrase "Parliamentarian of the House of Representatives" the following: "the Tally Clerk of the House of Representatives."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PAYMENT OF CERTAIN CLAIMS AGAINST MEXICO

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report and statement upon House Joint Resolution 437, relative to determination and payment of certain claims against the Government of Mexico, for printing under the rule.

WAGE AND HOUR BILL

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes regarding a little discrepancy in two statements appearing in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, after I criticized the Committee on Rules regarding the wage and hour bill for its refusal to report the bill out, the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], chairman of that committee, said, quoting the RECORD:

I do not propose to join my Democratic colleague from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN] and lambast my own party and put the responsibility on them.

Mr. Speaker, I did not lambast the Democratic Party. This is what I said, again quoting from the RECORD:

The Democratic Party will be held responsible for it——

That is, responsible for the action of the Rules Committee in smothering the wage-hour bill.

In my remaining time, Mr. Speaker, I shall read the headings from a daily paper in my home city, a town of 50,000 people, an industrial city, and I have no doubt that on the same day similar headlines appeared in every daily newspaper in the United States:

Rebellious Congress tosses hour-pay bill into discard.
Action marks second revolt within a month against Roosevelt's New Deal program.

And here is the opening paragraph of the article:

WASHINGTON, August 14.—(U. P.).—A rebellious Congress Saturday night abandoned President Roosevelt's wage-hour bill and began a pell-mell race toward adjournment.

Mr. Speaker, there is no reference to the Committee on Rules in these headings. The country does not know anything about the Committee on Rules; it does not care anything about it, or know or care about individual Members of Congress. All it knows is that the Democratic Party is in overwhelming control of this Congress and has failed to pass the wage-hour bill, and it will hold the Democratic Party responsible for it. That is what I said, and all I said, regarding the Democratic Party.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time that the Rules Committee has arrogated to itself the power to pass upon the policy of legislation and has granted a rule for the consideration of legislation in the House, or refused to grant it, according to the views of individual members of the committee as to whether or not they favored such legislation. It has become a common practice on controversial legislation. In other words, the Rules Committee has set itself up as a superlegislative body over all the legislation of Congress, requiring a special rule in order that it may be brought up in the House and considered. That is precisely the position now occupied in the scheme of things in the House by the Committee on Rules.

This, as I say, is not the first time the Committee on Rules has refused to grant a rule for the consideration of major legislation, which consideration was desired by a substantial part of the membership of the House and by millions of people in the country; but I have heard it stated by Members that this is the most flagrant case of the usurpation of the powers of the House of which they have any recollection.

How flagrant the action of the Rules Committee is may be gathered from the statement of the chairman of the committee himself in the debate of yesterday. The committee chairman said:

> In my opinion, the Members of this House will not cast over 75 votes against the bill.

He followed up by saying of the Republican membership:

> I do not believe one-third of their number will ever vote against the bill.

So here is a great piece of legislation, concededly the most important piece of legislation to come before the Seventy-fifth Congress, a bill, moreover, which was passed by the Senate after days of able and thorough consideration by a vote of 2 to 1, exactly 57 to 28. If I wanted to criticize the Rules Committee, it would not be by lambasting it in generalities. It could be better done by simply stating what the bill is and the refusal of the committee to give it a rule, and then put in the statement of the chairman of the committee. Here is a body of 435 Members, of whom, it is authoritatively stated, that not to exceed 75 of them are opposed to the legislation, and yet they are not permitted by a small committee of 14 of their own number to consider it.

Think of a Democratic Member of Congress going to his constituents with any such alibi for the failure of his party to pass a great humanitarian measure to which his party is committed, which the President and party leader has asked at the hands of Congress, and which is endorsed by all the labor organizations of the country, regardless of their own differences.

The newspaper headlines had nothing to say about the Rules Committee, nothing charging the committee with the failure of Congress to act. Ninety percent of the voters of the country who favor this legislation will never know of the committee action, or would consider it as an excuse if they did know. The fact may as well be faced that in the national judgment, not merely the Democratic majority in the House of Representatives, but the National Democratic Party, will be held responsible.

Mr. Speaker, I was a Member of this body when the regime of Czar Cannon was overthrown, when he was stripped of his autocratic powers over the House of Representatives, and that power lodged in the hands of a committee selected by the Members of the House.

But it was too late then to save the Republican Party from the split which overwhelmingly defeated it in the ensuing congressional election and later in the Presidential election. The autocratic and unrepublican control of the House of Representatives, blocking popular legislation, had become a national issue, dividing the party, not merely the politicians of the party but the people; and when the Democratic Party, joining with the Progressive Republicans, stripped the so-called Cannon machine of its powers, it only served to accentuate the party division, resulting in its complete defeat and its loss of power in this House for 8 years. The people did not care about the effect of czar rule or the rights of individual Members of Congress, but they cared greatly about its effect on legislation.

Mr. Speaker, there are differences, vital differences, between the principles and objectives of political parties. There are such vital differences between the principles and objectives of the Democratic and Republican Parties. But there are little or no differences in the technique of political party organizations. Once a party gains power it is quickly led into adopting the methods of its predecessors. Power is quickly gathered into a few hands, and a machine is built up. Its own perpetuity and control become naturally its major concern. It knows best what Congress should do and should not do. It knows best what is good for the party. The Cannon machine knew this. All other machines know it.

As an illustration of however much parties may differ in their principles and objectives, they pursue the same methods once they gain power, is the change made by our party in the number of Members required to sign a discharge petition to take a bill from a committee and bring it before the House for consideration. As is well known, the 145 rule, being exactly one-third of the total House membership, was established by the Democrats of the House when they gained sufficient power in the Seventy-second Congress, cutting the number from 218, as the Republicans had it. The requirement of 218 names, being a majority of the total membership, was properly regarded as a rule designed to prevent the consideration of controversial legislation or any legislation not desired by the House organization. The 145 rule was a more democratic rule.

But no sooner had the party acquired complete and overwhelming control in the Seventy-third Congress than a caucus was called within a few days after the organization of that Congress for the purpose of changing back to the old Republican number, 218. The effort failed of the two-thirds vote necessary to make it binding on all the Members and the proposed change was temporarily abandoned. Later, after the new membership was gotten somewhat better in hand, a second and successful effort was made, so now it requires 218 Members to take a bill from a committee.

There was no secret about the object of this change. It was not needed to control the Republican membership. In the first place they would never sign a petition to bring out reform or progressive legislation. No one could imagine the Republican Party petitioning a wage-hour bill out of a committee. Or a bill to regulate the corporations, which legislation they would consider Government interference in business. So far as the Republican Party is concerned, the House and the country have always been perfectly safe from anything resembling reform or progressive legislation. No; the object of the change in the rule was to tie the hands of the Democratic majority. It is known to be a matter of the utmost difficulty to secure 218 signatures to a discharge petition, with House leaders working against it. Many Members will refuse to sign a petition who would hesitate to vote against a bill once it is brought before the House and the roll is called.

Now, in addition to this undemocratic change in the rules of the House, comes a Rules Committee bloated out of all resemblance to its small beginnings and proper proportions. One might well exclaim—

> Upon what meat doth this our Caesar feed that he is grown so great? Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow world like a Colossus, and we petty men walk under his huge legs and peep about to find ourselves dishonorable graves.

The Rules Committee, consisting of 14 Members of the House, has become a superlegislative body. If 7 of its 14 members do not like the haircut of a bill, it matters not that the whole House and the whole country may be clamoring for it. The only way a measure can be taken from the committee is by a discharge petition and the signature of 218 Members, just as in the case of other committees. It is now too late in the session for this, as a month or more must elapse.

Mr. Speaker, I have said to my people, and in every paper in my district, that if I could make but one contribution to the political education of the people, it would be to rid their minds of the idea that they are running the Government and the Government is running the country, and that this would be the beginning of knowledge. I have been a student of national affairs for more than 50 years, at least an observer and part-time small actor in them. I do not believe that any great people ever lost so much ground in so many ways in the same space of time. The policies of President Roosevelt have been inspired and designed to arrest this downward tendency and to restore that economic liberty without which, it has been well said, political liberty cannot survive. The wage-hour bill is an approach to the solution of one phase of our economic problems. It is a practical and moderate step. But it shall not pass, says the House Committee on Rules.

This fairly raises the question whether the House Committee on Rules shall not become a subject of consideration by the Members of the House, whether it may not itself force consideration. At least all of the liberal opponents of the President's Supreme Court reform conceded that policy making was no part of the constitutional judicial power. Far less can it be a part of the powers of a mere committee of the House of Representatives, which was created to determine, not what legislation, not what policies, the House of Representatives should consider, but how consideration of important legislation in the House should be facilitated.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. PAREDES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a short table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement by Steven Rauschenbusch.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report upon House Joint Resolution 363, to authorize an additional appropriation to further the work of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

Res. 363) entitled "Joint Resolution to authorize an additional appropriation to further the work of the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission" submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

On no. 1: The House provided for a distribution quota of 2,500 copies of The Story of the Constitution for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate from a Territory. The Senate amendment reduced the quota to 2,000 each and the House accepts the Senate amendment.

The House accepts the Senate amendment modified to provide that any funds heretofore or hereafter available to the Commission for carrying on its duly authorized functions might be expended for printing and binding outside the Government Printing Office and for such objects as the Commission may deem necessary and proper to accomplish the purposes of its functions with the same exception that the provision should not be construed to waive the submission of accounts and vouchers to the General Accounting Office for audit.

KENT E. KELLER,
ROBERT T. SECREST,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

THE HOUSING BILL

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I call up the resolution H. Res. 320.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 320

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of S. 1685, an act to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the eradication of slums, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill, and continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the substitute committee amendment recommended by the Committee on Banking and Currency now in the bill, and such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of such consideration the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and the amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes on the resolution to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. Speaker, this rule provides for the consideration of the housing bill. It is an open rule, permitting amendments, and we hope to complete the bill today. In fact, we shall make every effort to complete the bill today no matter how late we have to stay to do it.

As is well known, the matter of Federal aid to housing has been a subject of great interest for many years. Many Members, particularly from the congested sections of the country, have been eager to see a housing bill passed. Such a bill has been proposed for years. We are, therefore, glad at this moment, although it is somewhat late, that this bill now comes before us.

It is a subject in which I have long taken a personal interest. I want to commend, if I may respectfully do so, the House committee for putting amendments in the Senate bill, which are a distinct improvement over that bill.

First, as to the limitation of cost, the Senate had a limitation of $1,000 per room and $4,000 per unit, about 4 rooms. This cost is outside of the cost of land and demolition. That small limitation would make it absolutely impossible to erect low-cost housing in any of the cities of the United States of any size, due to the cost of material and especially the labor cost.

In the two big improvements in New York City of recent date, the Harlem improvement and the Williamsburg improvement, the cost per room was about $1,600. The House committee properly eliminated the $1,000 per room limitation and the $4,000 per unit limitation, and put in a limitation of $5,000 per unit. Some of us fear that that limitation may be too small if the cost of construction increases, because as I said, the cost in New York City recently was $1,600 a room, and as of July 1 the cost per unit in Atlanta was $4,632; in Cincinnati, $4,872, as instances of the cost of construction.

Furthermore, it must always be borne in mind that it would be very unprofitable to build cheap construction, so-called jerry building which is going to be financed by the Federal Government over a period of 60 years, and it is assumed that the construction should last at least 60 years.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I appreciate the gentleman from New York probably knows more about what I want to ask than anybody else in this Congress. What is the difference in the financial set-up of these improvements that have already been made in New York as against those proposed in this bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Oh, there is such a substantial difference I could not in my limited time explain it. I prefer to leave that explanation to the Committee on Banking and Currency. The present improvements I referred to are P. W. A. projects, financed up to 70 or 75 percent, but I would not want to state positively about it.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. When the gentleman refers to a unit, how many rooms are there to the unit?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. It is generally considered four rooms.

Mr. BLOOM. That will be over $1,000 a room, then?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. There is some fear even about the unit limitation of $5,000. We may not be able to build within that limitation in certain cities, but, of course, this plan will not be carried out for some months or a year or perhaps longer, and when we come back here next year there may be a possibility of meeting the exact situation at that time as it presents itself.

Mr. BLOOM. Will the gentleman yield for one further question?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. That excludes the cost of the land?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes. And also the cost of demolition.

Mr. BLOOM. And excavation also?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I do not understand the cost of excavation is excepted.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Will this bill now before the House provide any relief except in the very large cities, in the congested areas?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Oh, yes, indeed. I was going to answer that last. It has been stated, and it will probably be stated, possibly by some members of the committee, that only five or six or eight cities will derive any benefit under this bill.

Other members of the committee and some people who have studied the subject know that the bill will help thousands and thousands of communities, because the slums in this country are not confined to the five or six great metropolitan centers. I think it is within the observation of most Members that in some of the small cities of 25,000 or 50,000 there are certain sections in which people live which are utterly despicable from the standpoint of health and sanitation. I have seen them. I know a number of cities from 25,000 to 200,000 which have slums such as New York never had. When you talk about the slums of New York from the standpoint of filth and extremely insanitary conditions you are talking about the condition of 25 years ago.

Mr. BLOOM. They have them right here in Washington.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes; there are slums right here in the Capital City. This city will benefit by the passage of this bill. Any city of 50,000 or even less will benefit from it.

Mr. DEMUTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. DEMUTH. To speak of cost per room is not to use a very definite unit. I notice that in some of the projects, for instance, Greenbelt, they build rooms that you can hardly turn around in. The cubic foot is a common unit in building and is the unit used in appraising and assessing property. Why do they not use the cubic foot as a standard of cost?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I have no idea why they did not.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. BLOOM. That depends upon the law of the place where the building is located. In some places they require rooms to be of a certain size and in other places of other sizes, and, of course, in some places there is no requirement as to the size of rooms.

Mr. DEMUTH. But when you use the room as a unit, the room may be 14 by 14, 8 by 10, or any other size. You may build a building for $500 per room, but the rooms may be 8 by 8. If you base the price on the cubic foot, then you are using a unit that is common to the industry, that is used alike by appraisers and builders in figuring costs.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. When the bill is read for amendment, of course, the gentleman can go into that at the precise point of the bill where it is taken up.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. The statement has been made that this bill will benefit only a few of the large cities. What difference does that make? Certainly the large cities are parts of the United States.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Sometimes we think so; sometimes we hear that they are not. I am willing to compare them in every possible aspect with every other section of our great country.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. On the question of cost; yes.

Mr. KENNEY. I had an observation, and I wonder if the gentleman would agree with me in it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield briefly.

Mr. KENNEY. I believe the gentleman knows that communism breeds in slums. If we provide adequate quarters for our people and eliminate the slums, not only will we benefit mankind but will be doing more than anything else we could do to wipe out communism.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I do not know about that. I sometimes feel that communism is preached more around the fireplaces in some of the most palatial homes and in some of the finer residences. "Parlor bolshevists", they are sometimes called. I would take my chance at any time on the people in the slums as to being good, patriotic American citizens.

Mr. KENNEY. But we know, too, the powerful influence of good living quarters and pleasant surroundings.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. There is another provision in the bill to which I do take great exception, a provision that I do not think is fair and for which I do not think any adequate reason can be given; that is, the 10-percent limitation of this $500,000,000 that is to be used, that not more than 10 percent shall go to any one State. The bill as passed by the Senate provided $726,000,000. The House cut it down by $200,000,000. I have no particular complaint about that, because it could not all be used in 1 year, 2 years, or maybe 3 years, but the Senate put in a provision limiting 20 percent to any one State. In principle that was likewise objectionable, but the House has reduced it to 10 percent. All this possibly will do, will be to work to the disadvantage of some of the big States which really need slum clearance and will inspire the other States to ask for their share of the "pork", and they will be here with their demands whether the need is great or not, demanding their 10 percent of the loaf.

I believe there should be no limitation, that it should be left to the discretion of the authorities. I am confident they will not abuse it or permit too much to be used in any one State.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. I assume that the gentleman's committee has held hearings upon this matter.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The gentleman means the Committee on Rules?

Mr. KNUTSON. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. What price per room did the Resettlement people say these projects would cost on an average?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I never heard anything about the resettlement costs; I do not know.

Mr. KNUTSON. I mean slum-clearance.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I just went into that. They fix a limitation of $5,000 per unit.

There is a provision in the bill—and I hope you will pardon my characterization of it—that is foolish, that is the provision that requires for every unit of new construction the demolition of an old unit.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield.

Mr. STEAGALL. The bill in its present form leaves a discretion with the authority, simply requiring that satisfactory arrangements be made for the demolition or repairs of slums in existence.

We have a committee amendment which liberalizes that by authorizing the Housing Authority to defer that requirement.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I am glad to hear that.

There is another matter to which I wish to refer. As I understand it, the Committee on Banking and Currency—and I do not mean to intrude, but I have taken a personal interest in these matters—has been considering amendments offered by the Federal Housing Administration to permit the Federal Housing Administration to guarantee mortgages on a certain type of building which they cannot do now. As explained to me, the Federal Housing Administration is limited in the first instance to the single home worth not over $16,000. In my district, for instance, no loans could be made because the value of those brownstone houses there, together with the value of the land, will run to $20,000 and upward. The Federal Housing Administration has also been financing, by guaranty of mortgages, the big units, such as apartment houses costing $1,000,000 to $5,000,000. But in between the $16,000 single dwelling and the big apartment projects, the Federal Housing has had no power to guarantee the mortgage. In many places the so-called walk-up apartment of 6 or 10 families, 2, 3, or 4 stories high, costing from $200,000 up, is the ideal accommodation for the people. The Federal Housing Administration and the Federal Reserve asked the committee to put in this bill provisions authorizing the Federal Housing Administration to take care of this intermediate group. I understand the committee has not done that.

Before the consideration of this bill is concluded, I trust the committee will offer those amendments, or some Member will offer them so that the matter can be taken care of before next session of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe any one subject has attracted more attention in the country than housing.

It is going to be said here, "Well, this is a local matter entirely." I do not believe the Members of the House feel that the health, the morals, and the comfort of the people of our country in any place, whether it be big city or on the farm, is strictly a local matter. It pertains to the Nation, and it pertains to the Nation's assets. If the Nation does not take care of them we may regret it at some future time, and I hope the House will overwhelmingly pass this bill before we adjourn this evening.

Mr. FORD of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FORD of California. Would not an epidemic in a great slum area in New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, or any other big city affect the entire Nation?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Surely; and by the same token, at least 70 percent of the people in New York are drawn from practically every State in the Union. They come there, and we have to take care of them. There are very few lifelong residents of the city of New York.

Mr. FORD of California. In other words, it is a national problem?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. That is true; and the same situation applies to Chicago and the other big cities.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. Under the terms of this act, do they have to have a housing authority in each State?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. As I understand it, there has to be some State or city housing authority.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and sixty-three Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

CONFEREES ON STREAM-POLLUTION BILL

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] may be substituted as a conferee on the stream-pollution bill in my place. The gentleman from New York is senior to me on the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will notify the Senate of the substitution.

THE HOUSING BILL

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, it is doubtful if a more important measure than this has been presented to the House in this session. It involves money to the ultimate extent of at least a thousand million dollars, and possibly $2,000,000,000. It concerns a question which has been agitated and discussed throughout the country. It involves the welfare of millions of our people. And yet this question was precipitated upon the Committee on Banking and Currency only a few days ago. It is an intricate bill, full of difficulties. In the ordinary course of events it would have been studied through many weeks and possibly many months by a subcommittee.

It was my fortune to be part and parcel of the construction of the three measures that have made up our housing program, the home loan bank bill, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation bill, and the housing bill. To every one of them we gave weeks of study. We passed days and nights in company with the legislative counsel, studying every section, every sentence, every punctuation mark. In this instance that has been absolutely impossible. There are features of this bill that no man can rise here and explain surely, quickly, and accurately. The financial features of the bill are the most difficult of comprehension, and yet at the very end of the session, with only a day of consideration here and only meager consideration by the committee, we are asked to permit the Government to bind itself for an enormous amount of money and to engage in a program that has not been digested.

The blame for this does not attach to the committee. If you seek blame, you will find it in the history of a session which has crowded into its last days nearly all the important work. We are now being pushed through action upon measures that we are confident are not complete, have not been adequately considered, and that will develop many plague spots to vex future Congresses. So I deplore being virtually compelled as a committee member to address you when I myself have to admit that I do not want any questions asked of me, because I know you can ask questions I cannot answer.

Let us consider first the purpose of this bill. It is for the clearance of slums. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], who preceded me, whom you may not all have heard, said that this measure would accomplish results throughout the country; that it would be of use to the people who dwell in the vilages and in the towns, and even the hamlets of the country. I attended all the meetings of the House Committee on Banking and Currency on this subject, and I have read with care the Senate hearings on this subject, and I may say that no man in any hearing has dared to say that this will be of the slightest service to the rural areas of America.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The gentleman has referred to me. Of course, I never used the word "town", I never used the word "village", and I never used the word "hamlet." I mentioned the cities of this country. The smallest place I mentioned was of 25,000 population.

Mr. LUCE. No man in the committee has heard a word said, either here or in the other branch, to express a belief that this bill would be applicable in any town or city of small size. The committee itself is of the belief that this will apply to not more than 6, 8, or 10 cities in this country. The bill has been constructed on the basis of big-city service.

We are facing one more proposal to take money from all the people for the use of some of the people. How is it proposed to do this? It is proposed to lend money and to give money.

The lending of money contemplates that the United States will, through 60 years, probably, I fear, beyond the life of any person listening to me, lend the credit of this country for the payment of $500,000,000, in addition to the cost of interest, which will, as I understand, more than double or nearly double the guaranty.

The giving of money is to be by way of outright grants. I shall not undertake to go into the intricacies of the method but rather give you, if I may, a broad picture of what is contemplated.

The purpose of this bill and, as far as language can accomplish it, the meaning of the bill, is that it shall serve no citizens of the United States whose incomes are more than $1,000 a year, and many of the witnesses and members of the committee believe it will be $800 a year at the most. You may put it down in your mind that this bill is for persons living in 8 or 10 cities of this country who have incomes of less than $800 to $1,000 and more than $500 a year. No provision whatever is made for people of the smallest income or without any income at all. Not a cent is to be spent or used for the benefit of people without any income.

This bill applies to the group of people who in our large cities live in what are known as slums. Any man who tries to make his hearers think that the word "slum" can possibly be perverted to cover the blighted area in some small community is greatly in error.

There is not a line in this bill that contemplates any help to any citizen desiring to build a detached house.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I will try to answer questions, but I warned the gentleman that I may not be able to answer because we have not been given a chance to learn about and understand some of these things. I only hope I know something about them.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman has said that we are not providing a program that will aid those who are without any income. We have passed the Old-Age Pension Act and we have passed the Unemployment Act, which will help those who have no earnings, and in that way we have already provided for them to some extent, although not to the extent they should be provided for. We have by legislation, however, aided them or tried to aid and help them.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman is talking about another subject. I am talking about this bill. [Laughter.] I know a little about this bill. I do not know all about it, but I know a little about it, and I know enough to know that I was accurate in my statement.

Mr. SABATH. We cannot take care of all of them in this bill, and we do not contemplate that.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman has accomplished a purpose, I admit, that may be somewhat embarrassing to me. He has cut my thread of thought. I shall fish around in my brain a moment, and perhaps will get back to what I started to say. Oh, I know what it was: I wanted to show the difference between what England is doing and what we are doing; for under the English system they have erected thousands and thousands of cottages for the benefit of the people of small incomes, and they are spending over there one-thousand-two-hundred-and-odd dollars a unit, while you are asked to spend on apartment houses here $5,000 a dwelling unit, or four times as much as is found sufficient in England to house, largely in cottages, persons of low incomes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The gentleman lost his train of thought when he said that nothing in this bill provided for the individual detached dwelling.

Mr. LUCE. Yes; I thank the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. But have we not taken care of that under Resettlement and under the Federal Housing Administration?

Mr. LUCE. What they have done has no relation to the pending bill for slum clearance. There is under consideration here, so far as I know, no program contemplating aid to the individual who desires to build a new house. I may be in error; anyhow, I find nothing in the bill for that. I am trying, sir, to disabuse my hearers of the impression my friend gave them that this was more than a slum-clearance bill for big cities.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. COX. The proponents of this measure talk incessantly about the poor who inhabit the slums of the big cities. The measure proposes to obliterate and demolish these slums. Will the people who now inhabit them be privileged to return to this new construction and live there?

Mr. LUCE. I recall no prohibition against that, but the rate of rent that will be required in these new buildings will make it impossible for the greater part of those who are dispossessed to take advantage of the new opportunity.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on that point?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Did the gentleman hear anything in the testimony before the committee which would lead him to believe that under the provisions of this bill those with incomes of less than $600 per annum could occupy any of these proposed buildings?

Mr. LUCE. I was liberal in making it $500. Six hundred dollars is probably nearer the exact figure.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is, nobody under $500 could occupy any of this space?

Mr. LUCE. So far as I made it out, sir, you are correct.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. As I understand, in the consideration of this legislation we are talking about families and not individuals.

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. The gentleman talks about $600 or less. In what big city in this country, aside from their being out of work or on relief, can any family exist on as little as $600 a year, which is only $12 a week? In my opinion, the limits are too low, and I believe you ought to let people go into these slum-clearance buildings who get as high as $1,000 or $1,200 a year, because in the big cities that is only $20 or $25 a week for a family; and years ago, when we were in prosperity, the average wage throughout this country was nearer $1,500 for the head of a family, and at that such families had no easy time existing.

Mr. LUCE. It would have been of great help to the committee if the gentleman from New York had come before the committee and presented his views in that respect.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I have been trying to do everything possible for over a year to have the committee consider this legislation. The gentleman has said that within a few days it was "precipitated" upon the committee. I recall that the substance of the bill was before the gentleman's committee in the last Congress, and nothing was done; and this bill, in substance and in principle, has been before the gentleman's committee almost from the first day of this session of the Congress. Now, is not that correct?

Mr. LUCE. In all kindness and without desire of malice, I would point out to the gentleman that the program of the Congress in this session has been dictated in other quarters. [Applause.]

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. FORD of California. The gentleman from Massachusetts states that $50 a month, or $500 a year is the minimum. This would be true, I presume, of a family that would have to have a four-room apartment; but, is it not true that a two-room apartment might be occupied by a husband and wife where the salary of the husband is $50 a month?

Mr. LUCE. That is quite possible; but I fear I have allowed myself to be diverted from a discussion of principles to a discussion of details.

Mr. FORD of California. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I simply wanted to make that point clear.

Mr. LUCE. I was not addressing myself to the gentleman in particular, but to the course of inquiry in the last few minutes, and now I pray that I may address myself to the general principles for the rest of the time allotted to me.

Mr. DEMUTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question on general principles?

Mr. LUCE. Yes; but make it snappy.

Mr. DEMUTH. If a person is untidy or has a dirty home in a slum now, does the gentleman think he will suddenly reform when he gets into this new apartment and keep it neat and clean?

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman will find that in the hearings there was some testimony to the effect that miracles are no longer out of date.

Mr. DEMUTH. Under the Home Owners' Loan we charge from 5 to 6 percent and tell these people that they must pay all their taxes, although they may be out of work. Under this bill a man must have steady work or we will not accept him as a tenant, and we give him a home at 3 percent and he does not pay any taxes. Is that just?

Mr. LUCE. That is another point I would like to dwell upon; but, speaking of taxes, there is a provision in this bill to the effect that localities shall waive taxes on these institutions. I should like to take about an hour to point out the fallacy involved therein, but I must content myself with saying that such contribution of the city in my judgment is not of material consequence.

And now let me turn to what, to my mind, is the all important consideration in this matter. When I came here 18 years ago the country was about to embark on a program that has already brought most serious results and threatens to change our form of government. It was in 1921 that the highway law was passed under which States and the Nation divided the cost of highways. There was then established what has come to be known as the 50–50 principle. I think I have voted against it every time that I have had an opportunity to do so, because it seemed to me unwise to hold before States, to dangle before them, the temptation of the chance to get Federal money. But the 50–50 would not have been so bad if we could have stopped there. When the pending bill was introduced it was a bill for 100 to 0. Such is the distance that has been traveled in a comparatively few years. In the old days, before I came here, nobody ever dreamed of coming to Washington to get money for the maintenance of municipalities or for their aid. First, 50–50; now, 100–0. The Senate would not stand for it, and they compelled a contribution by the municipality. The House has gone further, demanding, if I figure rightly, one-quarter of the contribution to be made by the municipality.

Why should the Federal Government contribute a red cent to the maintenance of what is primarily a local responsibility? Who would most profit by the elimination of slums? Who should bear the expense? I shall be told that this is of national importance, because the slums breed disease and start epidemics. That may be true, but should all the health agencies of the United States be handled from Washington?

If this be true, then all our waterworks ought to be handled by Washington, and we ought to make contribution for the construction of sewers, both matters of great health importance, and if you take over sewers and waterworks, why not also local parks, because they, too, are a matter of importance to the health of a community? And if you maintain parks your next step will be to say that crime is of national interest, and you must put it all under the control of Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, because crime is bred in these slums. Crime now knows no State lines, and you should take over the prevention and punishment of crime from these municipalities, if you are to follow in logical sequence. And if you are to take over crime, where will you go next? You will go in the direction where powerful forces are already impelling us. Every year they gain strength. You will take over the schools, because you will argue that as the schools train for citizenship, they have primarily a national interest. Thus, little by little, will you break down that system of government of which we have been so proud.

Sir, it has been for many years my pleasure for purposes of publication, to devote study to the methods of government, and the result of that study has led me to the belief that our fathers devised the best system of government the world has ever known. [Applause.] A system under which we began with the town, or the parish, and later the city. Then we gave some powers to the States and now we are transferring them to the Nation.

In these last few years, little by little, you have been breaking down the sense of responsibility on the part of the citizen. You have been taking away from him knowledge that he pays any taxes. The mayor of New York, my good friend, a man whom I respect and admire and whom I wish well, came here to speak for the municipalities of this country with more than 50,000 inhabitants. He asked that we take over this responsibility.

Your mail and mine in these last few weeks have been full of appeals that we give money out of the Public Treasury to municipalities for this or that purpose. By the passage of this bill you speed the day when your mayors will become obsolete, when your Governors will be simply ornaments, and there will be no source of money except the Treasury of the United States.

It is urged in behalf of this bill that various laws will not permit the States to contribute as we would wish. Have there not been legislatures in session now for 4 years since the depression began? Has there not been ample time to change constitutions to remove all impediments in the way of raising enough money locally? Instead of that, instead of seeking to help themselves, they come here and ask us to help them, as if our Treasury were bottomless, as if you pulled down out of the clouds or picked off the trees the money with which to pay the bill, as if there were no taxes to be transferred back to the people.

Let me just point out what has been done for the city of New York. Two days ago the administrator of the W. P. A. there made a long statement about the accomplishments of the last 2 years.

He declared that of W. P. A. funds $315,723,885 had come from the Federal Government and New York City had spent only $93,356,157. Less than one-quarter of this money was raised by the city of New York, the largest city in the land, the wealthiest city in the land. Less than one-fourth paid out of the pockets of the wealthy and the poor and all of the other citizens of New York.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I do not have time. My time expires in 2 minutes.

Now, how far are we going with this thing? I would like to vote for this bill. I sympathize with its purpose. I believe that slums ought to be eliminated. I would like to help eliminate slums, but more important than dollars, more important than helping any locality, is it to save the framework of the Government of the United States; to rely upon the sense of responsibility of the individual citizen, to make him feel that his local government is his chief concern, to give him interest in all elections, give him opportunities to criticize, and not drive him to Washington to get money. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] has referred to "crime being bred in slums." I do not subscribe to that whatsoever, because if that were true there would be no occasion for all the jails and all the penitentiaries and all the penal farms in every State of the Union, and in every one of the 3,000 counties in the Union, because surely in some of those places there must not be any slums.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts in saying that $315,000,000 in relief was afforded out of Federal funds to the city of New York, did not proceed to make the calculation of how many billions in taxes the city of New York has contributed to all these billions which have been spent for relief throughout the entire country. I will wager it is many times the $315,000,000.

But the gentleman was much more greatly concerned and upset as to what he says has happened since 1921. He said that up to 1921 nobody ever dreamed of coming to the Federal Government and asking for one penny for local purposes. That is probably true. Cities and States did not ask the Federal Government to aid them with money, but the gentleman, one of the great champions of a certain group—not of municipalities but of individuals and corporations in this country—can testify that there were plenty of individuals and there were plenty of corporations who had no hesitancy in coming to the Federal Government and asking its aid to put billions and billions of dollars into their pockets. I refer to the gentleman's Textile Trust in New England. [Applause.]

I refer to the Steel Trust. I refer to the Aluminum Trust and to the Harvester Trust. They never had any hesitancy in those good old days to which the gentleman refers and which he bemoans as passing, in coming to the Federal Government. While the money was not distributed to aid people throughout the States of the Union, yet through tax refunds of $4,000,000,000 in 4 years, and through a high protective tariff, the Federal Treasury was used for the benefit of corporations and individuals and not the people of our country. [Applause.]

We are living in new days now when we have a different concept entirely from those good old days of the G. O. P., when the gentleman was such an outstanding advocate and example of those past and bygone days. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] states that he sympathizes with the purposes and aims of this bill, but states that the committee did not have sufficient time to consider it. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] has replied as to the time the committee has had the bill under consideration, and has quite fully answered the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] is in error in charging that this bill will benefit only five or six large cities. I am satisfied that it will assist a great many cities in the United States. Lest there be any misunderstanding, it should be stated that under this bill no private individual can get any aid. Assistance will be given to States and municipalities only, not to individuals. Referring further to the 6 or even 10 large cities which the gentleman mentions, he should recognize the fact that those cities pay, through various taxes, almost 60 percent of the entire income of the Federal Government.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] also complains that there is too much centralization, and that it would be better if we would leave things alone. I know the gentleman is a historian, and he knows what occurred nearly 150 years ago when the greatest man of that time thought that the colonies themselves could not operate successfully, and consequently they brought about a central government, and the central government has been found to operate successfully in the interest of all the States, and it has been proved that those gentlemen responsible for that central government used great wisdom in bringing it about.

The gentleman states that no relief was asked by municipalities when he entered the House, but he failed to state that he came here after the greatest era of prosperity this country has ever enjoyed. Because of the foundation laid by the Democratic Party, that prosperity continued with us until 1929, when his party, unfortunately, brought about the conditions that made necessary the granting of aid to the unfortunate people of the cities. From 1917 to 1920 these cities had seen a great influx of industrial workers for whom no housing facilities existed. Slum conditions continued to grow worse, and after 1929 the cities were unable, because of their inability to collect taxes, to care for the needy, provide relief and feed the millions of unemployed. Consequently, only the Federal Government was able to prevent wholesale bankruptcies of the cities and save its people from starvation.

The gentleman has stated, and so have all those who appeared before the Rules Committee, that the need for legislation such as this exists. This bill, they charge, will not aid the unemployed or those who earn less than $600 a year. Admitting that those earning that sum cannot afford to rent these houses that are proposed to be built, it should nevertheless be remembered that we have done and are doing everything we can for that class, by legislation such as old-age pensions, unemployment insurance, and by other laws and acts. Personally I wish it were within my power to accord them much greater aid and assistance than has been so far made possible under the laws that we have passed. It was for that reason that I endeavored to secure passage of the minimum wage and hour bill, but unfortunately, the gentlemen who now state that not enough is being done for those earning $600 per annum or less were the very ones who failed to cooperate or assist in securing consideration of that measure.

This bill will not cost the Government as much as has been charged. I do not believe it will exceed $15,000,000 a year, and if we can eliminate even one-half of our slum areas and provide only 500,000 homes, the Nation will be abundantly repaid.

I have done everything I could to aid the farmers and have voted for every measure designed to give them relief. I hope that those gentlemen who sponsored farm legislation will show their appreciation by aiding in the adoption of the rule and the passage of this bill without delay.

Conceding that it may not be a perfect bill, and that it is not the same as the Senate bill, I hope that any differences will be ironed out by the conferees so that we will have a workable law that can meet immediate needs and lend itself to future refinement and improvements or strengthening in the next and following Congresses.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD].

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am deeply interested in this measure as another piece of legislation that will help the underprivileged of America. During the course of this administration we have striven to help those who were not in a position to help themselves. Yesterday we restored to the appropriation bill an item to help tenant farmers. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation has helped thousands in every section of the United States to purchase homes. It has been the philosophy of this administration to carry assistance through the credit of the Federal Government to those groups that are in need of help, and I am glad that this bill continues this policy.

So far as I know, no city in my district will receive any assistance, but other legislation has helped my people, and I am willing to go along to help the very low income group in the cities to have better homes. I cannot agree with the philosophy of my distinguished friend from Massachusetts, for whom I have the greatest affection. I think the time has come in this Nation when our philosophy must change. Federal taxes are collected locally. They should be spent locally to help solve those problems that are local to a large extent but which nevertheless affect our Nation.

Some hesitate to vote for these authorizations and find fault with the gigantic national debt. Great Britain has put on a housing program successfully, and Great Britain has about the same national debt that we have, around $36,000,000,000. The aggregate wealth of Great Britain—that is, the island, not the dominion; England, Scotland, and Wales—is estimated at $130,000,000,000. While our debt is about the same as that of Great Britain, $36,000,000,000, we have an estimated wealth of $360,000,000,000. In other words, our national debt is about one-tenth of our national wealth. Already we see evidence of returning prosperity; we see the Federal income increasing and catching up with the excess of expenditures. Within another year we shall be in that position where our expenditures will not exceed our income. With the wealth of America increasing at the rate of from $10,000,000,000 to $20,000,000,000 a year under the prosperity of this administration, we shall have no trouble in meeting our national debt, especially if everybody has an opportunity to work, is properly housed, and is given—as we have tried to give by these measures—the opportunity to have a home and contentment. It will mean the firm establishment of America as the outstanding representative democracy of the world. If there is one thing above others that promotes Americanism and representative government it is individual home ownership, or lacking that, low rentals of decent living quarters. I am in favor of curing these sore spots, such as slums and tenant farming, and I am in favor of using the credit of the Federal Government to give to all of the American people, even the lowest and the humblest citizens, the advantages we believe any citizens of America is entitled to have—a home in which to live happily and the opportunity to educate their children. This will make them good American citizens. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution to its adoption or rejection.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the eradication of slums, for the provisions of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 1685, the low-cost housing bill, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, this bill is dual in purpose and in plan. Under one provision of the bill, loans would be made under an alternative provision, grants by a Government Housing Authority to be established, not exceeding 40 percent of the cost of projects undertaken would be made available to local housing agencies. Such local housing agencies would be required to supply 25 percent, and loans would be made available for 35 percent, but loans would not exceed 25 percent of the cost of development or acquisition of projects. This is designed to provide aid to States and political subdivisions in the elimination of insanitary conditions, the eradication of slums, and to provide decent houses for families of low income.

The bill is dual in purpose in that it contemplates relief from unsafe and insanitary conditions both in the cities of the country and in rural and suburban communities. It should be borne in mind that this measure is a first step—a beginning. It is not thought by anyone that the tasks upon which we are about to embark can be adequately accomplished by this measure, but the plan involves a long-range program and would extend the benefits not alone to the larger cities of the country or to a limited number of the largest cities, as has been stated here today, but, if the program progresses as contemplated, its benefits will spread to all sections of the Nation, both urban and rural.

The bill would create a Federal Housing Authority to be established under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior. An Administrator would be appointed by the President for a term of 5 years, at a salary of $10,000 annually, who would exercise all the powers of the Authority. An advisory committee of nine members, to be appointed by the President, would be created, to be selected with regard to geographical areas and other interests, the members of the committee to receive remuneration only for time spent in meetings and for expenses incurred in attendance.

Under the loan provisions of the bill, $500,000,000 would be made available—$100,000,000 for the first year, $200,000,000 for the second year, and $200,000,000 for the third year—the measure in its financial provisions being intended to cover a 3-year program.

Twenty-six million dollars would be appropriated for the first year of the program, $1,000,000 of which would constitute the capital stock of the Federal Housing Authority. Twenty-five million dollars would be available for grants, for administrative purposes, and for contributions during the first 3-year period of the operation of the law.

Under the loan provision, any local agency would be eligible for loans not to exceed 85 percent of the cost of a proposed project. Fifteen percent would be contributed or supplied by the local housing authority, the same to be in cash or its equivalent. The project constructed would be available to families of low income upon a basis of rent not exceeding one-fourth of the annual salary received by the occupant, where the family is less than three minor dependents, or one-fifth of the income of the occupant where the family has more than three dependents.

The contribution under the loan provision to be supplied by the Federal Housing Authority would be determined with the view to maintaining the low-rent character of the project to accomplish the purpose of relief to families of low income.

It is estimated that citizens with an income as low as $600 a year would be the beneficiaries of the plan and that the benefit would extend to those having salaries between $600 and $1,000 annually.

The contribution by the Federal Housing Authority would be the amount of the going interest rate on Government bonds plus 1 percent, which would be approximately 3½ percent. That would be the maximum contribution to be made. On a million dollars it would be $35,000 a year.

The local housing authority would be required to contribute not less than 25 percent of the amount of the annual contribution or subsidy, to be supplied in cash, tax exemption, or tax remission. Under the alternate provisions of the bill the Federal Housing Authority would make capital grants not exceeding 25 percent of the cost of a project. The President would have authority to transfer an additional grant in the amount of 15 percent of the cost of the project, to be supplied out of relief funds at his disposal. The local agency or housing authority would be required to supply 25 percent of the cost of the project, leaving 35 percent to be loaned by the Federal Housing Authority. In that case, as in the case of the loans under the first plan for which provision is made, the sum of $500,000,000 is available over a 3-year period as indicated.

The same provision would apply to loans under the grant plan limiting such loans to 85 percent of the amount of the total cost of the project, the local housing authority being required, as in the other case of loans, to supply 15 percent of the initial cost.

Much has been said on the floor of the House and elsewhere about the cost to the Government involved in the annual contribution plan of the bill, which provides for annual subsidy contributions over a period of 60 years by the Federal Housing Authority. In the first place, those figures deal with the maximum subsidy or contribution that might be supplied. It should be borne in mind that under the provisions of the bill now before the House the Federal Housing Authority would cast up the account at the end of 10 years and would then determine what subsidy would be required to maintain the low-rent-housing plan contemplated by the bill, and would have authority also to allow contributions that had been contracted for or to withdraw and abandon any contract that had been entered into, and every 5 years thereafter the same provision would apply for reopening the entire matter.

I am sure no one who has spoken or who will speak on this measure would desire to mislead the House or to leave in the RECORD any misleading statements or figures. It was stated on the floor today that this bill would involve considerably more than a billion dollars of burden upon the Treasury as a result of the subsidy provisions of the bill. I am not going to read the figures now but will insert them as a part of my remarks for the benefit of the membership of the House.

Cost of program

Federal bond issue:
Total principal amount of Federal guaranteed bond issue is	$500,000,000
Total interest thereon at 2½-percent interest during 60-year period	475,000,000
Total principal and interest cost to Government on bonds it issues	975,000,000
Receipts from local housing agencies on bonds which Authority purchases:
Total principal amount which would be repaid to Authority on the bonds it purchases out of proceeds of its Federal bond issue	500,000,000
Total interest which would be repaid to Authority on above bonds which it purchases at 3-percent interest during 60-year period	580,000,000
	1,080,000,000

Amount of annual contributions which would be made assuming they would be paid for 60 years at an average amount of 2½ percent per year (3½ percent is the maximum), which would be $12,500,000 per year, or for 60 years the amount would be $750,000,000

SUMMARY

Principal of bonds:
Total receipts for principal on bonds which Authority purchases	$500,000,000
Total principal amount of federally issued bonds of Authority	500,000,000
So Government is repaid in full the principal which it borrows.
Interest on bonds:
Total receipts for interest on bonds which Authority purchases (at 3-percent interest for 60 years)	580,000,000
Total interest payments by Authority on bonds it issues (at 2½-percent interest for 60 years)	475,000,000
Net profit to Government on its loans	105,000,000

Extent to which payments for annual contributions exceed profit on loan

Total payments for annual contributions, assuming 60-year payments on $500,000,000 worth of projects	$750,000,000
Less profit on loans	105,000,000
Amount by which aggregate payments of contributions exceed profit on loans over 60-year period	645,000,000

Subsidy expenditure (after deducting loan profit) per year would amount to a little over $10,000,000 on the $500,000,000 program.

Upon analysis it will be found that these figures are not fantastic or imaginary, but, on the contrary, they present a reliable calculation of the final cost over the 60-year period to be sustained by the Federal Housing Authority because of the subsidy provisions of the bill, and the amount, instead of the aggregate that has been proclaimed in the press and elsewhere, would be only $645,000,000 over that period of time.

In the first place, $500,000,000 would be repaid. When you figure the subsidy on a maximum basis you must take from it the difference between the burden sustained because of the bonds issued and outstanding and the amount that would be repaid on loans and interest.

It has been asserted that it would be cheaper for the Government to pay the entire cost of the projects at the outset, because it is said this would only cost the Government $500,000,000. However, the Government would have to issue its bonds to raise this $500,000,000 and would have to pay interest on them at 2½ percent. Assuming these Federal bonds were repaid over a 60-year period, the interest thereon would be $475,000,000, so that the total expenditure by the Federal Government to repay the principal and interest on its bonds would be $975,000,000 under this plan. The proposed annual contribution and loan plan, on the other hand, would involve an aggregate net expenditure over a 60-year period which would be $330,000,000 less than this amount. In short, the annual contribution and loan plan involves a far lesser cost to the Government than an initial contribution of the whole cost.

Mr. LANZETTA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. In just a moment.

Mr. Chairman, we had before us a bill passed by the Senate. Under the provisions of the Senate bill each project was limited to $1,000 per room and $4,000 for total construction, exclusive of land and demolition costs. The committee of the House amended that provision so as to put a limit of $5,000 in each unit of construction. The Members will readily understand it is difficult to undertake by statute to deal with matters of detail of this kind.

If we had set an average of $4,000 or $5,000, there would still have been opportunity for abuse if the Authority had seen fit by allowing larger amounts in some places and smaller amounts in other places. But we raised the limit to $5,000 as average cost of family-dwelling units, which we thought would take care of the difficulties in the larger cities of the country where, if you contemplate houses that will last and houses that will not soon become slums themselves, it would enable the Authority to deal with the condition in a few of the larger cities that presented different problems from those that would exist in the average city. So we put in the $5,000 limit.

We did not stop there. Another limit is a provision of the bill which says that the Housing Authority shall require that a project upon which aid is extended shall not exceed the cost of similar projects undertaken by private enterprise in the same community. This lays down a yardstick to apply to New York or to any town or city in the district of any Member of this House. It is fair and workable and should be satisfactory to everybody.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH and Mr. LANZETTA rose.

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield first to the gentleman from Maryland, a member of the committee. I must hurry on. We are necessarily limited in this discussion. I am not responsible for it. I am doing the best I can.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The limit of the contribution, as a matter of fact, will be something over $11,000,000 a year over the 60 years?

Mr. STEAGALL. No; the gentleman is in error. Under this bill there could be a contribution of $20,000,000 a year. This is the way it is computed, according to the best figures I can get from experts, who know how to figure much better than I. Upon the basis not of $11,000,000 but $20,000,000 of annual contribution I have given the figures I have indicated to the House.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That could not be true, because the total amount of the contribution would be less than $700,000,000, and if this is averaged throughout the 60 years it would be something over $11,000,000. There is no question about that.

Mr. STEAGALL. I shall put those figures in the RECORD. I have not undertaken to read them here now for the reason that it would take 5 or 10 minutes more time than I desire to use. I recognize the large amount of thought that has been given to this bill by other members of the committee, and I must yield time to them for discussion. Some of them are in better position than I to supply the House with information, anyway.

I now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LANZETTA. Is it not a fact that the $5,000 limitation in section 15, subdivision 5, practically forecloses slum clearance in the cities?

Mr. STEAGALL. I do not think so, the committee did not think so, and our best advisers did not think so. The complaint has been that this limit is excessive. I would not undertake to say, for I do not claim to be an authority on the subject, but we put this figure in, allowing a thousand dollars additional, in order to be sure that we had not handicapped the Authority in the administration of this bill. However, as I stated a moment ago, the test which is laid down in this bill and which ought to govern the Federal Housing Authority in every instance is to determine the cost of these projects by the yardstick which it can find when it sees what it costs local authorities under private enterprise to construct similar projects in the same localities. This is the best test we could think of, and we put it in the bill. The truth is this bill, like all other measures of this kind, will depend for its success upon the common sense and good faith with which it is administered by those who have charge of it.

We have undertaken to bring this bill to the House in response to the wishes of the House. We have gone about it hastily. There was no other way to do it. However, we have undertaken in good faith to meet the sentiment of this House and of the administration, which has undertaken in the broad scope of its altruistic purposes in meeting the distressed conditions which confronted us a little while ago to extend relief to all classes, to all sections, and to all the people of the United States. I represent a rural section. If there is anybody here who has a community less adapted to receive immediate benefits from the provisions of this bill than mine, I do not know who it is. But I recognize that we are one people and that distress in one community involves every community in the United States. I also recognize that conditions which invite crime and which are inimical to sound social conditions and to good citizenship in any community are the legitimate concern of every citizen under the flag of this Republic. [Applause.]

We have asked the Representatives from our cities to help our people on the farms in the hour of distress. We passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act under a former administration, I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, whom I greatly love and respect. Under the provisions of the original Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act the benefits were applied to the insurance companies, the banks, and the railroads of the United States. As the result of the efforts of some of us its benefits were extended to agriculture and from time to time to other interests. This is in pursuit of the plan upon which we then embarked. The motto used to be, "To him that hath, shall be given; and from him that hath not, shall be taken away even that which he hath." We have now an administration which listens to the heartbeat of humanity everywhere. The spirit of the new commandment is enthroned in the administration now in guiding the destiny of this Republic. [Applause.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, regardless of what action this Congress has taken in years gone by to give relief to the railroads, to the insurance companies, to farmers, to home owners, and to small industry, that alone is not a justification for passing this bill if this bill is not meritorious. Several wrongs cannot make a single right.

I am supporting this bill because I believe it is meritorious. I know there are many in the House and in the country who are in complete disagreement with me on the stand I have taken. If I cannot justify my stand, then I individually am responsible, for I speak for no one but myself in respect to this bill.

I believe the need for decent, respectable, and sanitary homes for the underprivileged of this Nation has been proven beyond any peradventure of a doubt. If there is any doubt in the mind of anyone of the need for low-cost housing and slum clearance, then he should listen attentively to the rest of the debate, because it is not my purpose to dwell upon the need for this legislation. I believe that a trip through the slum areas of any of our large cities demonstrates the need for demolition of such areas and the construction of safe and sanitary dwellings to replace them.

This bill is not perfect by any means. This bill, perhaps, does not go as far as some of you would like to have it go, and it goes further than some of you would like to have it go. We do not anticipate any trouble whatever with the body at the other end of the Capitol, for the reason that when this bill came to us from them it was just a hodgepodge of inconsistencies. The House Committee on Banking and Currency has worked diligently, and I hope intelligently, during the last 3 weeks to bring order out of chaos.

During the last week we have held executive sessions, we have literally picked this bill to pieces, salvaged what we could of it, added and subtracted and, finally, we present to you the result of our endeavors with the belief that with few exceptions it should be enacted. I hope I shall have the time to call attention to the few exceptions which, of course, are very important, but regardless of what we do here with respect to housing and regardless of what this Congress eventually does during this session, we must have constantly in mind that this bill is merely a foundation upon which we are building a slum-clearance and low-rent housing program. We might better, perhaps, pass a simple joint resolution authorizing the Department of the Interior or the Federal Housing Administration or any other agency of the Government to make a survey of the needs for low-rent housing and slum clearance, to report back to the next session of Congress, which might be in November and, surely, will be in January, and upon their recommendations we might build a better structure than we have constructed in this bill, but that was not given to us to do. So the next best thing is this foundation upon which we hope to build constructively a housing program to meet the purposes of this bill. It is not my purpose to justify the action of the committee, but to go into the bill somewhat in detail, and if time will permit, if there are any questions which the committee thinks I might answer, I shall be pleased to answer them if I can.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. After I have finished my statement, if I may.

This bill contemplates three methods of relief within the restrictions of the act.

The first is by lending the local housing authorities the cost of the development and the acquisition of the project. Now, I wish you would not be confused with the fact that in the same provision, in section 9, I believe, there is a prohibition against the lending of any more than 85 percent of the funds. If a loan is made without a grant being given and without an annual contribution being made by the Federal Housing Authority, that loan, under the terms of the bill, might be for 100 percent of the acquisition costs, the development costs, and the cost of administration; but in the event that the municipality or the political entity set up in the States to administer this relief makes application for, and is given, a grant under section 11 of the bill or makes application for and is granted an annual contribution under section 10 of the bill, in either of these events, the local housing authority, or anyone for or in its behalf must contribute at least 15 percent of the cost of development and acquisition and administration.

The next method of relief, as set up, starting in paragraph 10 of the bill, is by annual contributions. The act provides that these contributions on the part of the Federal Housing Authority must be of uniform amounts, and in that event the municipality, the local housing authority, or whatever other public entity is set up for the purpose of administering these projects, must contribute 25 percent, not of the acquisition, development, and administration costs, but 25 percent of the annual contribution or 25 percent of the amount which the Federal Housing Authority agrees to contribute uniformly over, perhaps, a 60-year period of time to the construction of the project. This contribution on the part of the local authorities might be in cash or it may be in tax remissions or exemptions.

As a further limitation upon these contributions, the localities, within certain limitations, have to agree to demolish existing slum areas or repair existing slum areas to make them sanitary and habitable, and there are some other requirements under the bill which I shall not enumerate.

A further provision in this respect is that the annual contribution by the Federal Housing Authority shall not exceed 1 percent in excess of the going rate of interest on Federal obligations having a maturity in excess of 10 years which, under the going rate of interest, would be 3½ percent per annum. The committee in its wisdom wrote into the bill that in case a loan had been made in addition to the annual contributions, this three and a half percent annual contribution made by the Federal Housing Authority would first be applied against the retirement of that loan and the payment of interest. If the contract covers a period longer than 20 years, after the first 10 years the Federal Housing Authority reviews the contracts and may make such amendments as may meet the situation, and then they may review it every 5 years thereafter.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I finish this thought and then I shall be pleased to yield.

We authorize an appropriation of $26,000,000 in this bill, $1,000,000 of which is to create capital for the corporation which we provide to be $1,000,000. The other $25,000,000 is for contributions, because no part of the $500,000,000 which we set up under section 20 of the bill, which is the section authorizing the Authority to issue obligations upon its capital, periodically, not to exceed $500,000,000—these funds raised on the security of the obligations of the Federal Housing Authority can be used only for grants.

The $25,000,000 may be used for administrative expenses, and together with whatever sums are transferred to the Federal Housing Authority by Executive order from any other agency, may be used for the purpose of making these annual contributions.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Page 46, lines 13 and 14, the gentleman referred to the period of time a contract might run. If a contract for annual contributions is made for 19½ years, would there be any review of the contract at the expiration of that period?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think the act speaks for itself, the way it is written. Quoting subsection (c) of section 10, page 46:

> In case any contract for annual contributions is made for a period exceeding 20 years, the authority shall reserve the right to reexamine the status of the low-rent-housing project involved at the end of 10 years and every 5 years thereafter.

I think if the gentleman contends that there is no review if the contract is for 19½ years, he is correct under the terms of this bill.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. LANZETTA. Was there any testimony before the committee as to the unit costs in cities for constructing these low-cost houses?

Mr. WOLCOTT. With due regard to the projects which have been built in many of the cities, we have no yardstick up to the present time by which we might determine the unit cost definitely. We do feel, as I have said, that $5,000 might not be high enough, and we thought that $4,000 might not be high enough; but if it developed between now and January 1, in the study of the whole situation, that $5,000 is not high enough or that $5,000 is too high, and that we thereby get out of the low-income group by reason of that construction, we can correct that difficulty very easily by a simple amendment to this act.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. I want to inquire in respect to the definition of slum clearance. On page 36, no. 4, I find the following:

> The term "slum clearance" means the demolition and removal of buildings from any slum area.

The original bill, on page 4, in defining the same term reads:

> The term "slum clearance" means the demolition and removal of any buildings from any slum area, and may embrace the adaption of such area to public purposes, including parks, parking areas, or other recreational or community facilities.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I know the gentleman's interest in that amendment, and I hope he will offer that amendment as he has drafted it, because I vigorously fought the elimination of those words to which he refers in the committee. I shall be very glad to support the gentleman. It seems to me that if we build these units on a given piece of property it is senseless to prohibit the use of the vacant property between the units for any purpose, such as playgrounds, parks, parking lots, or anything else.

Mr. CROWTHER. In the case of parking lots and similar developments there would be an accrued revenue.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Regardless of revenue, there is a vast need in these projects for the utilization of this vacant property between the units for playgrounds to keep the children off the streets.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. In the smaller cities and villages throughout the country there are, no doubt, hundreds of thousands of low-income families. Is there any way that these families can get advantage of this act to get homes?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, there is no prohibition in the act against the construction of a project under the provisions of the act in any community of any size, provided the locality can meet the requirements of the act, which means as a practical matter that there is no relief in this act as it now exists for small communities, but we wrote in the word "rural", and some of us thought that the word "suburban" should have gone in, but they convinced us that rural included suburban, and we did not write it in; so that if it becomes desirable to build these projects outside of the city limits, to house those who are now cooped up in the city, move them outside of the city limits, they might do so without running into a technicality of the law that prohibited it.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Then there is no hope that we can hold out to our people back home that they can have advantage of low-cost housing?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have not held out any hope back in the Seventh District of Michigan to my people there that they are going to get any relief out of this bill.

Mr. SHORT. Then the legislation is discriminatory?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Not any more discriminatory, if I have to say it, than legislation which has to do with the welfare of my farmers. And my farmers up to the present time have not found fault at all that their Representative is going along with the representatives of the big cities in trying to clear up these holes that exist in New York, Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, and wherever else they do exist, and as a representative of the State of Michigan I want to see the slums of my metropolitan area, Detroit, cleaned up, because anything that cleans up Detroit will make my district just north of there a better place in which to live.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I notice the term "public housing agency" is used. Do I understand it will be necessary for each State to pass special legislation to be able to take advantage of this law?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Twenty-nine States have already passed legislation which authorized the setting up of housing agencies. If the States have not always done so, they could, upon application of those interested in the establishment of a local housing agency, provide by State legislation for the creation of a political entity which would meet the requirements of the act.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I want to say I deeply appreciate the explanation of this bill made by the distinguished gentleman from Michigan. He is to be congratulated upon the knowledge he has shown concerning the details of its operation. Do I understand that a private person or a private corporation or, in other words, owners of property outside of this public agency would not have the right to acquire loans under the operation of this act?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Private individuals or artificial persons, corporations, and so forth, could not take any advantage of the terms of this provision, because there is no authority for loaning to anyone excepting local housing authorities.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. There have been different views expressed with reference to this proposition as to whether all of these projects must be built upon demolished slum areas. I understood the gentleman to suggest it might be possible that a municipality which complies with this law could go outside of any built-up territory at that time and build a new project entirely.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The act provides, page 45, section 10—and this has to do with annual contributions, but the same proviso has to do in another part of the bill with grants:

Provided, That no annual contributions shall be made, and the Authority shall enter into no contract guaranteeing any annual contribution in connection with the development of any low-rent housing project involving the construction of new dwellings, unless arrangements satisfactory to the Authority are made for the elimination by demolition, condemnation, and effective closing, or the compulsory repair or improvement of unsafe and insanitary dwellings situated in the locality or metropolitan area, substantially equal in number to the number of newly constructed dwellings provided by the project.

The committee recommends an amendment adding to that the following:

Except that such elimination may, in the discretion of the Authority, be deferred in any locality or metropolitan area where the shortage of decent, safe, or sanitary housing available to low-income families is so acute as to force dangerous overcrowding of such families.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Did I understand the gentleman to say that in order for any municipality to take advantage of this proposition, the State legislature must pass some enabling act?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; unless the municipalities are authorized to build these projects at the present time, it will be necessary to pass an enabling act to authorize them to do it, if the State constitution allows it. As I understand, the constitution of one or two States may prohibit it, but that is all. The constitutions of a majority of the States do not prohibit it.

Now, I wish you would let me cover this third method.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one brief question?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Very well; I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. I am very much interested in what the gentleman has to say in connection with the lower rate of interest on these homes. Does the gentleman in his opinion believe it will set an interest rate on borrowed money from the Government for the building of homes? What I am driving at is this——

Mr. WOLCOTT. I know what the gentleman is getting at, and I hope that it does. I had hoped that within this session of Congress we would reduce the interest rate on H. O. L. C. loans to 3½ percent, but apparently we will not be able to do it.

Mr. STEFAN. We will not be able to take advantage of this in my district, because it is a rural district entirely, an agricultural community, but there are hundreds of homes being foreclosed by the H. O. L. C., with interest rates at 6 and 7 percent.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman wait until we reach that point?

Mr. STEFAN. I would like to go along with you on these homes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Wait until we reach that section.

Now, the third method of relief is what we know as capital grants. The Federal Housing Authority can contribute 25 percent of the acquisition and development cost, and the President may transfer from relief funds 15 percent of the acquisition and developing cost, making a possible 40 percent grant by the Federal Housing Authority. The act, nothing to the contrary notwithstanding, provides that 25 percent in those instances—now, distinguish between this and annual contributions—in those instances the local housing authority can put up 25 percent of the development and acquisition costs. That accounts for all but 35 percent, and the local housing authority may borrow under the loan provisions of the act, section 9, the 35 percent and pay it back by amortizing it over a period of years, subject to the provisions of the act.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I would just like to know how, under the provisions of this bill, a community in the country can get a house or a man living in the country can get a house.

Mr. WOLCOTT. An individual living in the country, I think for all practical purposes, could not. I do not think we should argue about that very much.

I cannot see any relief for the individual living in a shack on the outside of the gentleman's community or of my community.

Mr. MAY. Another question, if the gentleman will permit. This bill, as a matter of fact, is what is known as a slum-clearance bill, to eliminate the slums in the larger cities.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It has two purposes, the elimination of slums and the providing of low-rent housing for the people who otherwise would have to live in slums.

Mr. MAY. How many cities will be really materially affected?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I would say New York City, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Detroit, Chicago, and quite a number of points west.

Mr. STEFAN. How about the slums in Washington?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The bill makes distinct reference to alley slum clearance in Washington. If the gentleman will turn to section 28 of the bill, he will see that specific authority is granted to give relief to alley slum clearance in the District of Columbia.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I have an appeal in my hand from the Emergency Commission of Oakland County, Mich., where a tent city has sprung up because of lack of housing.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I meant to cover that. I have that specifically in mind, and one of the things which induced me to go along with this bill was the low-rent housing feature of it which might relieve just such conditions as we have in Pontiac, Mich.

Mr. DONDERO. Will this bill remedy that condition?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is possible to do so under the provisions of the bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY].

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill is a low-rent slum-clearance measure.

There can be no slum clearance unless the rents are low enough to come within the reach of our low-income classes that live in slums or blighted areas.

In 1929, when our country was going on high, students of our housing problem tell us that about 10,000,000 of our citizens were living in homes unfit for human habitation. The housing situation in this country since 1929 has not improved; in fact, it has been continually getting worse.

Not only has the annual construction of homes decreased greatly since the panic began but hundreds of thousands of slum homes have been demolished, with the result that there is a home shortage that runs up into the millions; in fact, to about 3,000,000.

The pending bill is a recognition of the fact that homes for our citizens in the low-income brackets will not and cannot be built by private enterprise; and if those citizens are to be housed in better living quarters, such a housing movement must be assisted by our National Government.

In other words, in this day and age, when we are becoming one great state instead of 48 individual States, the problem of furnishing livable homes for those of our citizens who are unable, through their own earning power, to provide themselves with such homes has become a national problem.

Since the beginning of the panic the National Government has attempted, through several agencies, to improve housing conditions. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, the Public Works Administration, the Federal Housing Administration, the Resettlement Administration, and the Subsistence Homesteads Corporation have all been designed to help solve our housing problem—a problem that pertains not only to the furnishing of homes for those who are able to pay for the cost of said homes, but also to the furnishing of homes for those of our citizens who are unable to finance the full cost of their homes.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has loaned millions of dollars at a low rate of interest to limited-profit corporations for the construction of homes.

The Public Works Administration has spent $135,000,000 for the construction of 21,769 unit dwellings.

The Federal Housing Administration has insured loans for the modernization and repair of about a million and a half homes in our country, and has insured mortgages for the building and refinancing of homes to the amount of $500,000,000, affecting 125,000 homes. This Corporation is insuring mortgages for the financing of new low-cost houses at the rate of 1,500 a week.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation has saved from foreclosure hundreds of thousands of homes.

These different agencies, however, for the solving of our home problem, have not been able to provide homes for the lowest-income classes; that is, with incomes below $1,000 a year. The pending bill is designed to attempt to solve the problem of furnishing homes for that class of our citizens whose earning power will not enable them to pay the cost of building and operating decent living quarters.

The slum problem has two phases: It involves not only the use of homes by our citizens that are unfit for human habitation but also the problem of several families living in such a home.

There can be no doubt at all but that our slum problem would not be so serious today if only one family would live in a single slum dwelling; but the depression and the demolition of slum dwellings under State and municipal authority, and by the owners to avoid taxes, have resulted in an overcrowding of the slum homes of the country.

The pending bill is designed not only to assist States and their political subdivisions in working out their slum problems; but also to provide work for our unemployed.

In 1929, there were probably 2,500,000 mechanics and laborers employed in carrying out a home-building program; and while building operations have greatly improved since the panic, still there are over a million of our citizens formerly employed in the building industry who are today without jobs.

In the 7-year period from 1923 to 1930, inclusive, there was an average of 447,000 new homes constructed in cities of 25,000 inhabitants or over annually in this country; while in the 7-year period from 1930 to 1937, inclusive, the average number of homes constructed in this country was only about 74,000 a year.

So, in the pending bill, the aim is not only to help housing conditions of our low-income classes, but also to provide increased employment opportunities.

Those who have studied the question believe that there ought to be constructed each year in this country, for some years to come, at least 500,000 homes to fulfill the demand for new homes and also to take the place of the slum dwellings that should be eliminated from our housing picture.

The slum-clearance problem is not only a problem involving the furnishing of suitable living quarters for those of our citizens who are unable to provide such quarters for themselves, but it is also a health problem, a crime problem, and a financial problem for the cities involved.

The death rate from tuberculosis in slum areas is about 200 percent higher than in nonslum areas. Delinquency is about 100 percent higher in slum sections of our cities than where slum sections do not exist, and the areas in which slums are located cost the cities from 5 to 10 times more for the services rendered such slum communities than the cities get back in taxes.

To illustrate, a slum survey made in Cleveland in 1932 shows that 2.47 percent of the population of that city living in a slum area representing 0.73 percent of the total land area of the city paid taxes amounting to $225,035, while the city spent for maintenance in that area $1,972,000; or, in other words, the slums cost the city of Cleveland $1,747,000 a year.

In 1933 a study of a substandard area was made in South Boston, Mass. This area comprised 769 families. The tax receipts from the area were $27,093, while the expense the city was put to in maintaining the area, as regards city services, amounted to $275,113.

These figures are typical of the cost of slum areas in all cities of the country, and indicate that the cities that have slum areas can well afford to pay a substantial part of the cost of eliminating such areas.

The pending bill creates within the Department of the Interior a corporate agency known as the United States Housing Authority, with all the powers of the Authority lodged in an Administrator, to be appointed by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate. This Administrator will serve for 5 years and receive a salary of $10,000 a year. The Senate bill provided for an Administrator and a Board of three directors.

The bill also would bring into being an Advisory Board of nine members, to be appointed by the President, with due regard to representation of public housing, labor, construction, and other interests, and to the varied geographic areas of the country. This Board is to serve without pay, except for traveling expenses, and is to meet at the call of the Administrator.

The pending bill will decentralize the housing activities of the Federal Government by putting up to local housing authorities the task of working out their own housing problems with the aid and assistance of the Federal Government. Housing activities of the Federal Government up to date have all been centralized in Washington. Under this bill there will be no more construction of homes by the Federal Government, but there will be a non-Federal program to be worked out and operated by local housing authorities.

The bill provides for loans, annual contributions, and capital grants by the Federal Government to local housing authorities for the purpose of assisting the local housing authorities in providing low-rent homes for the lowest-income classes. The sum of $500,000,000 is provided for loans during the period of 3 years. This money is to be raised on the part of the Federal Government by the sale of United States bonds issued by the United States Housing Authority, said bonds to be guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States Government. These loans are to be repaid in full, with interest at not less than the going Federal rate of interest, plus one-half of 1 percent, and no loan is to be made in excess of 85 percent of the cost of the project, thereby requiring the local community or housing authority to stand 15 percent of the total cost of the housing project when there is no grant. The loans are to be secured by a first lien on the revenues of the projects of the local agencies and also by a pledge of the annual contribution to be paid to such agencies by the United States Housing Authority in the shape of annual contributions.

When a housing authority has secured a loan or entered into a contract for a loan it is also entitled to receive annual contributions from the Federal Government for a period of not to exceed 60 years. Annual contributions are limited to the sum necessary to make the housing project a low-rent project, and in no case can such contributions exceed a sum equal to the going Federal rate of interest on Government bonds plus 1 percent, which, according to the present Government bond rate of 2½ percent, would make the annual contribution not in excess of 3½ percent of the cost of the project.

When loans are made by the Federal Housing Authority to local housing authorities, the local housing authorities are required to pay 25 percent of the annual contribution required to make the project a low-rent housing project. This contribution can consist of cash, land, community facilities for services for which a charge is usually made, or general or special tax remissions or exemptions.

Under the bill, the local housing authority may receive a grant to finance a slum-clearance program. The grant is limited to 40 percent of the cost of the low-rent housing project—25 percent from the United States Housing Authority and an additional 15 percent under an order of the President transferring relief funds to assist in financing the project—but it is also provided that the local community must furnish 25 percent of the total cost of the project. Having made the contribution of 25 percent to the project and having received the grant of 40 percent, the local housing authority would still be entitled to a loan of 35 percent, upon which it would have to pay interest to the Government.

It is contended that the National Government has no interest in solving our slum-clearance problem and that it should not be expected to furnish funds for such purpose. Ever since the World War, and particularly since our panic broke in 1929, we are a new world—a new Nation. Our ideas of isolation and individualism have to a large extent undergone a change, especially since the passing of our unbounded West, that made it possible for the derelicts of our industrial and social system to find new homes and new opportunities. We have become one great family. Every one of our 48 States is now interested and concerned in the welfare of the citizens of all the States of the Union. That is the new idea upon which recent legislation is based, the idea of the general welfare of all of our people—of our whole country.

I take it, from the standpoint of crime alone, the Nation is interested as a whole in the elimination of the slums of our cities where criminals are bred. Criminals know no State boundaries, and it is of deep concern to all of our people whether or not the slums of our country are going to continue to produce criminals instead of law-abiding citizens.

The crux of this bill are those sections thereof that fix the financial responsibility of the National Government and the local communities in the financing of slum-clearance programs.

The Wagner bill, as passed by the Senate in the last session of Congress, did not provide for any local financial assistance in carrying out slum-clearance programs other than what the cities might see fit to offer. In other words, the whole financial responsibility for financing slum-clearance programs was put on the Treasury of the United States.

The Wagner-Steagall bill of the present session was very similar to the old Wagner bill, and left the financial burden of slum clearance upon the United States Treasury.

Under these bills, the Treasury would offer grants, provide loans, and also provide annual subsidies to housing projects in order to make low rents possible. In other words, the theory of housing legislation, up to this session of Congress, was that slum-clearance was a national problem, to be financed almost entirely by the United States Government.

I cannot agree with the theory that slum clearance is a national problem. The slum problem is fundamentally a local problem, and the cities that have slums should be required to make substantial contributions to the total cost of all slum-clearance projects.

The Senate amended the Wagner-Steagall bill so as to provide that local communities should pay 5 percent of the total cost of a slum-clearance project and 5 percent of the total annual contributions required to bring about low rents or rents within the reach of slum dwellers.

The bill now before the Committee provides that the local communities must make contributions up to 25 percent of the total cost of the project when grants are asked for; 15 percent of the total cost when loans are received; and in the case of loans, 25 percent of the total annual contributions required to make the low-rent projects possible.

This bill as now written recognizes that the slum-clearance problem is primarily a local problem, or at least more of a local problem than any housing bill heretofore has recognized.

If I had my way in writing this bill, there would be no requirement for a contribution by local communities toward the total cost of the project, except in the case of grants, unless the city was able to make such a contribution. In the case of loans I would loan money to build the projects up to 100 percent, but I would put upon the locality or the local housing authority the obligation of furnishing one-half of the annual contributions required to make a low-rent project possible.

The great drain on the United States Treasury under these housing bills is the annual contribution that will have to be made by the Treasury in order to bring the rent of these dwellings within the reach of the people that they are intended to serve. Only by requiring major local assistance or contributions will it be possible to hold down the unit cost of the dwellings in our large cities and thereby protect the Treasury. Under such a law no city would permit the construction of slum homes that would cost eight or nine thousand dollars per family unit; and I doubt if slum homes would be constructed on land that costs four or five dollars per square foot.

In many of the housing projects that have been undertaken by the National Government the past few years, the unit cost of homes has been as high as six, seven, eight, and nine thousand dollars and even higher. The pending bill will limit the cost of units to $5,000. This limitation of $5,000 was put in because of the fact that the cost of construction in large cities is higher than in small cities.

Our slum problem is a tremendous problem. Under the Wagner bill, if we were going to go the whole road, it would take probably $60,000,000,000 to wipe out the slums of this country. This amount would be required for capital grants, loans, and annual contributions, and all without any requirement that the local communities assume their fair share of the cost.

Under the pending bill the load will still be a heavy one for the National Treasury—too heavy, in my judgment.

I do not pretend to be an expert on slum housing; but it would seem that the houses for our lower-income classes should be built for less—much less—than the sum that was expended in constructing such homes in the past few years.

Cities of this country and the National Government are confronted with a condition and not a theory in solving their slum problems; and the building of homes that cost $8,000 or $9,000 for housing people who can only afford to pay $3, $4, or, perhaps, $5 a month per room is, in my judgment, to say the least, highly impracticable and all wrong. The great mass of the families of this country who own their own homes, or pay their own rent, live in homes that cost about $4,000 to build—land and all—and if this program is to be successful and the Treasury of the United States is not to become bankrupt, we must have a real low-cost housing program—a housing program that will build homes for our low-income classes such as they would build for themselves if they had a higher income.

Of course, construction costs will be higher in the large cities of the country than in the smaller cities, but I wonder if it is necessary to rebuild homes on old slum sites where the land costs $4 a square foot or about that price.

In England, where a very successful slum-clearance program has been carried out, only 1.7 of the low-cost homes were built on slum sites; and in London less than 13 percent of slum-clearance structures were built on the old slum sites.

I must confess that I do not know just what affect it is going to have on our unaided slum dwellers who are not taken care of under the slum-clearance programs when they learn that some of their more fortunate slum dwellers have been provided with magnificent homes by their State and National Governments.

Will not such a program have a tendency to make these unaided slum dwellers dissatisfied?

Of course, this bill, during the 3-year period when $500,000,000 will be loaned for constructing low-rent homes, will hardly put a dent in our huge slum-clearance problem.

I do not pretend to know, but I do feel that some way can be found whereby our low-income classes will not be provided with better homes than the great masses of our American people are able to live in.

I am not satisfied with this bill; I think it has not gone far enough in placing the financial responsibility for slum clearance on the cities; but legislation is the result of compromise; one cannot always have his way in the committee or on the floor of this House. While the bill has not gone as far as I would have it go in the way of protecting the United States Treasury, still, it is a great improvement on the original bill, and I am going to vote for it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON].

Mr. KNUTSON. A few moments ago it was announced over the radio that the Governor of Alabama had appointed his better half—and I use that term advisedly as it is based upon reliable information—to a vacancy which exists for that State in another body. It is also reported that the new Senator is flying to Washington so as to be sworn in this afternoon, thereby obviating any unnecessary leakage through loss of time.

St. Paul says, "But if any provide not for his own and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel." If that be the yardstick by which we shall judge the act of the chief magistrate of Alabama, we can but arrive at the conclusion that he is a fine, Christian gentleman.

I am sure that I speak for every Member of this body when I express the hope that it will not be necessary for the new Senator from Alabama to go outside of the immediate family for the help necessary to efficiently conduct the office upon which the new Senator is about to enter.

In this era of reckless spending by public officials, whose first concern should be the safeguarding of the public purse but who do not know the word "thrift", it is, indeed, refreshing to see one arise from the mesa of waste and extravagance and set for us an example that is without parallel in all the annals of American politics. If we had more men like the Governor of Alabama there would be no need for voting huge sums for relief, for then every American family would be on a self-sustaining basis. Should I say, "May his tribe increase." Perhaps we should leave that question to be decided by another body. [Applause.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I subscribe 100 percent to the sound American doctrine so ably expounded by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts who addressed the House on the rule this morning. I am definitely opposed to this measure. Instead of this being a housing proposition, it is a scheme whereby a preferred few may live at the expense of the taxpayers of the Nation through the instrumentality of Government paternalism.

If this class of legislation falls within the scope of the general-welfare clause of the Constitution, then our founding fathers utterly failed in their attempt to protect either individual or States' rights. The power to handicap and tax the individual is, indeed, the power to destroy. That abuse is camouflaged and subterfuged in this bill. Our founding fathers realized the strength of unity and to preserve unity they proposed a union of the States; however, the colonists refused to join that union until their local self-government and individual rights were amply protected. If the colonists had thought Congress might ever place any such construction upon the welfare clause as is clearly implied in the pending measure, there would have been no union. If we pass this legislation and the courts uphold it, then Congress shall have all power except that granted the Executive and the courts; and all other rights reserved to the individual and to the States will be of no avail, which in its final analysis means that the Constitution might as well be declared null and void and discarded.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am sorry; I do not have the time.

This legislation proposes to build homes for one group of individuals who have nothing to tax and then tax a second group of individuals, many of whom have a lower income than those who will be benefited, in order to subsidize and benefit the first group. And by reason of the fact that the third or remaining group can buy the tax-exempt bonds proposed in this bill the burden will be placed upon those least able to pay—all in the name of social welfare. The folly and stupidity of such legislation is appalling when you consider the fact that it is not proposed to build homes at a price that individuals of low income could buy and call their own, but rather to rent at a monthly rate for the remainder of their life, at a sum total that they could buy and own a home of their own and for less money. I am opposed to any such travesty in the name of social welfare.

While this bill purports to provide decent housing for those in the very lowest income classes, the language of the bill gives no such assurance. Experts of the housing authorities who appeared and testified at the hearings said that slum dwellers with incomes under $750 would not qualify under this legislation. They testified that those earning from $750 to $1,000 yearly were the ones who would receive the benefits. If this is true, the very purposes of the bill would be defeated by absolutely no relief being provided for those in the lowest-income brackets. In providing housing for those in the lowest-income group there would be no competition on the part of the Government, since those in that group could not possibly be able to buy a home or pay more than a nominal rental. But if the use and occupation of these homes are to be confined to the $750 to $1,000 group the Government will enter directly into competition with private industry. It is a well-known fact that private industry is today building low-cost houses for wage earners in that group.

While on the subject, Mr. Chairman, I again want to register my voice against the issuance of any more tax-free bonds. At a time when Congress is supposed to be busily engaged in trying to enact stop-gap legislation to plug income-tax loopholes, to propose to issue more tax-exempt bonds seems to me to be most ridiculous. The time has come to reduce our national obligations instead of creating more bureaus to find ways to spend more and more of the taxpayers' money.

The theory and academic objective of this legislation is ideal, but the manner and method of accomplishing it is nothing but pure pork and hocum. We have had commission upon commission to study the problem of slum clearance, and how many of their recommendations do we find in this bill? The sum total of this bill is to pay off a political promise of one faction of a political party to gain the votes of two particular segments of a great city, which should be able to clean out its own slums, if any city in America can.

What answer has the proponents of this bill as to the justice of building luxurious and expensive homes for slum tenants on the north side of the street, who pay no taxes, and refuse those on the south side of the same street, some of whom of a lower-income group are struggling, half starving, denying themselves the comfort of a bathtub, electric heat, water, and lights, and the pleasure of a radio in order to pay for a humble home of their own? What justice, pray tell me, under law, is theirs, when you propose to tax and take from these self-denying and deserving citizens their few talents and give to those whom some bureaucrat might choose to reward because they use cosmetics, keep their hair combed, and their pants pressed?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I am wondering, if we pass this bill, if there could be any hope of any building being constructed for anyone in my congressional district, with which the gentleman is acquainted.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Knowing the gentleman's district as I do, I can certainly assure the gentleman that it will receive no benefits whatever under this legislation, and neither will mine.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I understand that more than 90 percent of the homes of the United States cost less than $4,000. What is the sense, the reason, or the justice in taxing persons who have saved and economized in order to buy their own homes so that $5,000 homes may be furnished to those who pay no taxes?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. That is exactly what I am trying to point out.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am sorry, I do not have the time to yield.

Mr. BARRY. The gentleman has just yielded twice.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I have only 10 minutes, and I shall not be able to finish in that time. However, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BARRY. The gentleman claims this is legislation for a preferred class. Does the gentleman believe that any of the legislation we have passed to aid the farmers is justified, and, if so, wherein is any difference in principle involved?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. We did have some hope of recovery in that legislation, but we have very little in this.

Mr. BARRY. We gave $4,000,000,000 in subsidies to the farmers, but here you are going to get your money back.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I cannot yield further.

Does the Government proposed to observe the injunction of the Constitution to treat all citizens with equal justice?

If so, then when and how will homes be built for all citizens of the lower income group? If you build for some, will the others continue to sacrifice in order to build a home of their own, or will they surrender and wait for Uncle Sam to provide for them. What would you do—you who propose this class of legislation—were you of that group?

If the prices of building material are too high now and still rapidly rising, and building wage scales are frozen far above the average, as is claimed, then what inducement would there be for the owners of slum houses to rebuild, or what chance has an individual to build a better home, if the Government proposes to guarantee hundreds of millions of dollars of bonds to increase competition by subsidizing and increasing the demand for labor and materials? Let the proponents of this so-called housing bill answer that. If the Government fosters any such scheme as this bill proposes, it must be prepared to meet a crisis in the real-estate bond market. It must be prepared to take care of those now employed by private contractors and individual home builders. It must be prepared to care for the many thousands now employed by the durable-goods industries and the common carriers, who are now busily engaged as never before in time of peace and plenty. Oh, my friends, penny-wise and pound-foolish is certainly the philosophy of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, as an illustration of the fallacy of this sort of Government paternalism, I want to read you a dispatch by the Associated Press under an August 6 St. Louis date line:

Tenants of a 252-unit apartment, Neighborhood Gardens, built as a P. W. A. slum-clearance project, faced an unwelcome rent increase today and threatened a controversy that finally may be placed in the hands of Public Works Administration officials.

J. A. Wolf, managing director of the $742,000 apartment and one of the organizers of a limited-dividend corporation which constructed the housing project with the aid of a P. W. A. loan, said he was "sorry about it", but the rents, ranging from $18 to $38 monthly, "must be raised."

Wolf explained rent receipts thus far only have been sufficient to pay interest on the $640,000 Government loan and taxes. Nothing has been paid on the principal of the loan. Even with a 10-percent rent increase, he said, it will be years before the investors, who contributed $102,000, receive even a part of the interest on their money.

Indicating that the rent controversy may be submitted to P. W. A. officials, Wolf remarked: "The P. W. A. has the first mortgage and the last word."

The apartment was built to provide housing facilities for families with an income from $60 to $80 a month. The average monthly income of present tenants is $125 a month.

That, my friends, is a fair example of what you may well expect from this sort of paternalistic and so-called social-welfare legislation. Are we unmindful of the experiences of the Resettlement Administration? I believe it was in Houston, Tex., where about 300 houses were built and shortly after the tenants moved in the paper began to wrinkle, the plaster fell from the walls due to green laths, the floors shrunk, and holes appear all around the plumbing for the vermin to enter the houses. The roofs all leak on account of the lack of sufficient shingles. The tenants called a protest meeting and declared that they would neither move nor make any further payments on the purchase price. This is only one instance illustrating the folly of this sort of Government activity.

Another instance showing the wholesale waste and extravagance practiced in Government housing ventures is the Greenbelt project, better known as Tugwelltown. This famous, or rather infamous, experiment is located 15 miles from Washington in the State of Maryland. At the suggestion of Senator BYRD, I recently drove out to Tugwelltown to look upon this fantastic monument to Government folly. Tugwelltown was established for city workers, and yet the Government purchased 12,345 acres of land at a cost of $1,119,957.79, an average of $90.72 per acre, and also an average of 14 acres for each house. The acreage consists mostly of poor pine thicket forest. I have seen much better land sell in Tennessee for from $15 to $20 per acre.

The project comprises 880 units, at a cost of $16,182 per unit. According to a report from the General Accounting Office $456,603.50 was spent for landscaping, $120,819.81 for survey, and $198,850.17 for land preparation. Twelve architects were employed to design the buildings of this Utopian city at salaries of $12,000 per year each. Already a total of more than $14,000,000 have been spent on Tugwelltown, and so far none of the building, while completed, have been occupied, and I seriously doubt if a large part of it will ever be occupied. Mr. Chairman, what possible justification in common sense can there be for such a prostitution of the taxpayers' money?

My friends, I could give an example of a similar project near my own home, but what is the use? The story is always the same when the Government begins meddling in private business and private affairs.

Mr. Chairman, why should more than 10 percent of this money be spent in any one State? What assurance have we that the price of materials and wages will not be increased on each project after building is once begun? What assurance have we that defective materials used and resultant damages will be paid for by the contractor? Why are large families not provided for? They are certainly more in need. Then, Mr. Chairman, there should be some provision in this legislation, if it is to pass, forbidding the buying the land from option or lease holders. There should also be a provision forbidding anyone paying income tax to occupy such homes or apartments. Contractors should not be allowed to import labor from one State to another where wage scales are higher or lower. And finally, these homes should not be built for rent, but for sale, and upon no other condition.

Mr. Chairman, this legislation is unconstitutional. It is both paternalistic and socialistic. It will seriously jeopardize the real-estate bond market and is calculated to bring about the greatest crisis in the history of this country. It is a blow to private initiative. It places a burden upon those least able to pay. It is an unfair discrimination among honest law-abiding citizens. England, Germany, and Italy are today engaged in a terrible struggle to bear up under just such an impossible burden.

My colleagues, without any disposition to be presumptuous, I admonish you before you vote on this bill to consider the fallacy of giving to one group of our citizenship the privilege of enjoying at the expense of the taxpayers $4,000 homes equipped with every modern convenience, such as private bath rooms and sundry other conveniences, while many of your constituents live in small cottages which they are struggling to own, and in order to do so are making many sacrifices upon which this favored group would look with scorn and contempt. The sooner we get away from paternalism and get back to individual initiative and individual responsibility—call it rugged individualism or what not—the better for this great country of ours. [Applause.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I agree that this bill is meritorious. It seems to me if we spent more money for slum clearance and less money for the manufacture and sale of guns and bullets to be used to destroy human life, we would be making more human progress.

Give men and women employment and pay them an adequate wage and they will not be compelled to live in the slum districts.

Last year we spent approximately $15,000,000,000 to enforce the law against crime—if we were to spend one-third of that amount for slum clearance and other necessary projects we would eventually reduce that tremendous sum which we spend for the enforcement of law against criminals.

Slum districts are an abomination—they should be wiped from the face of the earth.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I regret that my views relative to this bill, in the form reported by our committee, is at variance with the views of a majority of my colleagues. As many Members of this body know, I have for several years ardently favored a genuine slum reclamation and low-rent-housing program. In early January, I introduced a bill to commence, in a modest way, such a program; but, as things go here, it has been pigeon-holed all these months. The present bill has been considered under the most difficult circumstances. We have been prodded and urged, for the past 10 days, to get out some kind of a housing bill, and that is about the best that we have done in presenting this measure. For the first week of our deliberations we were making real progress in the preparation of a housing measure which would really clear slums and assist in providing accommodations for the underprivileged, starting with the lowest-income groups. Then, almost suddenly last Friday afternoon, practically all of our work was set at naught by certain amendments proposed by the chairman at the request of the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration. The effect of these amendments could not be known until the bill was printed, for no member of the committee ever saw one of them, with the exception of the chairman, until the printed bills were available Monday morning of this week. Even at this hour, I venture the assertion that there is not a member of the committee who would stand here in the Well and tell you that he understood this bill in its present form. This is not intended as a reflection upon the intelligence of any member of the committee, but is merely related to emphasize the problem which has faced us in our desire to bring to the floor a sound and workable measure.

This bill is an entirely different bill from the bill which has passed the Senate. It is entirely different for the reason that the primary objective as stated by Senator WAGNER, to-wit, a bill to bring about slum clearance in America, has been sidetracked in behalf of a general housing bill. No longer does slum clearance go hand in hand with low-rent housing. A hurried reading of the bill may indicate that the purposes are alike, but if you will carefully analyze and digest its provisions you will immediately see that this bill makes slum clearance of secondary importance. For that reason particularly, and because of the high dwelling unit cost of $5,000, exclusive of land, I could not in good conscience support the measure unless certain amendments which I shall offer under the 5-minute rule are adopted. Throughout the hearings, and until Friday afternoon, it had been my earnest hope and sincere desire that I might stand here today and vigorously uphold this measure. We all know that its social and humanitarian objectives are laudable and in keeping with a Christian civilization. There is not a man here who does not want to see the good people of our land provided with decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings. But in matters of this kind, we must use our heads and our good judgment. In our family experiences, there are many things which we need and want for ourselves and our children but which, because of financial reasons, we must postpone. We must, as officials of the Government, remember that all we do for one class of our people is done at the expense of another class. We must also be mindful of the fact that there is a limit to Government spending and Government financing, regardless of how meritorious the objectives may be.

In considering this measure I laid down for myself six cardinal principles which I felt should be observed to insure the success of the program, and with your permission I would like to read them to you.

First, every reasonable limitation possible should be written into the bill to insure that public housing accommodations are made available to those in greatest need of assistance. The underprivileged can and should be taken care of in this great country, but no permanent socialistic housing schemes to accommodate half the families in the United States should be permitted.

Second, local collaboration and contributions in the form of cash, land, public utilities, services, tax remissions and the like, plus real acceptance by local authorities of the responsibility for demolishing unsafe structures, the preventing of overcrowding and the renting of insanitary quarters, and provision for zoning and planning activities. There is no point in spending money from the Federal Treasury in housing grants or annual contributions unless local authorities are willing to do their part in raising housing standards and taking care of their own underprivileged.

Third, definite restrictions should be laid down as to the type and cost of structure to be built by local authorities. There is no excuse for public housing accommodations being elaborate or pretentious or better than those occupied by the average home owner and taxpaying citizen. Further, by keeping such housing as is assisted by Government grants and subsidies of simple design and modest materials, each dollar provided by the Government can serve more families.

Fourth, demonstration projects, to be built, owned, rented, and administered by the Federal Government, should not be authorized in any way, shape, or form. Permanent Federal Government landlordism and janitorism should never be part of the policy of the bill.

Fifth, the housing program will be administered either by an independent agency, with a board of directors responsible to Congress, or, if a single administrator is used, there should be included a nonsalaried but statutory advisory body which will assist in the determination of policy and in restricting public housing to the field which it should properly occupy.

And, sixth, in assisting the lowest-income groups, proper rent relief must be made available to worthy underprivileged or unemployed families. Such rent relief must be coordinated with local housing activities and, if properly administered on a local basis, the underprivileged can then obtain decent, safe, and sanitary quarters either by renting properties now in existence or properties which may be built by local authorities with guidance or financial assistance from the Federal Government. It is proposed that one uninhabitable or slum unit be demolished or renovated for each new unit constructed with the aid of Federal funds.

Any man who is familiar with the provisions of the bill before us is obliged to admit that none of these objectives are substantially insured in this bill. I am hopeful, however, that before the day is over the House will adopt certain amendments, which I shall propose, to make the bill sound, fair, and workable.

At this point let me tell you that neither before the Senate committee nor the House committee has a single representative of the Treasury Department appeared to approve the financial provisions of this bill. Their absence can tell but one story, and I leave you to draw your own conclusions. I shall undertake to discuss these provisions later on, though in the limited time I am sure that I will not be able to do more than touch the high spots.

No one can truthfully say that this administration has not manifested a sincere and robust interest in housing, and particularly in slum clearance. The results, however, are disappointing, and we all know that up to now the program has been one of conflicting policies and administrative confusion. No man in the United States, in my opinion, is more keenly aware of our housing deficiencies than our great President. Adequate and decent homes for workingmen's families continue to constitute one of his leading objectives. But his hastily planned experiments in this field have produced disappointing results and, in some quarters, complete disillusionment. There are, however, perhaps extenuating circumstances for every major delay the program has encountered, and I am convinced in my own mind that unless this bill is materially amended the program will continue a conglomeration of incongruous schemes, practically all of which are unsound economically. The consequent bewilderment within the building industry and private financial institutions, from which the chief impetus for a real, extensive home construction movement must come, has partially offset the stimulating effect these demonstration projects might otherwise have had. Despite the miscarriage of numerous plans that have been launched in the name of low-cost and low-rent housing, I feel confident that the organization of a fresh attack upon these problems remains a most important step in our long-sought industrial renaissance.

No modern country can expect to attain a balanced economy while millions of idle men live in hovels and large sums of capital lie dormant in lock boxes. The administration's fumbling in this matter—and my criticism is intended to be constructive, and I also share my part of the blame—is no doubt a result of trying to solve a great social and economic problem by emergency technique. We all know that whenever a government plunges into a task of such complexity and with so many ramifications, financial and otherwise, without a well-defined objective or realistic planning, it is likely to make costly mistakes.

Though it may be strictly a local problem, I cannot but feel that the Federal Government should concern itself with slum clearance, and I am perfectly willing to see the Government make reasonable subsidies to get rid of these crime and disease-spawning areas. I do not believe, however, that the Federal Government is able to finance a low-priced housing program which would take care of one-third of our families frequently referred to by President Roosevelt as "ill-fed, ill-clothed, and ill-housed." I think it would be naive to suppose that all slum dwellers can be rehoused in new, municipally owned flats, financed by the Federal Government. It takes little sense to know that such a program would mean a heavy drain upon the taxpayers, many of whom cannot afford new homes for themselves.

I cannot but feel that simple equity suggests that a great many families in the very low-income brackets, as their disease-infested hovels are razed, will have to find quarters in decent, second-hand houses; and if we will stimulate and encourage home building through private finance an increasing number of such dwellings will be available and can be provided for families with moderate incomes. For each house built in this way the vacated home becomes available for those in the lower-income brackets, and in this way we can partially offset the shortage of low-cost housing. As I have heretofore stated, we have not so far had any public housing agency to demonstrate the practicability of a low-cost housing program.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Kindly let me finish my statement.

Mr. CURLEY. For just one question on that point?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. All right.

Mr. CURLEY. We have now a low-cost project in operation—the Harlem River project, where they only pay $7.50 rent per room per month.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. That is no low-cost housing or low-rent housing, either; and I venture the assertion that if you will examine the record carefully you will find that every dwelling unit in the project costs more than $7,000 per unit, excluding the cost of the land.

And may I ask right here, how any of you could justify appropriating public funds for building projects of this kind which are superior in advantages and facilities to 75 percent of the homes occupied by your constituents, which they built with their own money and by their own self-denial and frugality.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. And what about the 45-percent subsidy?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I venture the assertion that if my friend from New York will examine the financial structure of the project that he mentioned he will discover that before the rents could be reduced to what he considers "low" that the Government—or P. W. A., which is the same—was forced to write off 45 percent of the cost as a grant.

Now, Mr. Chairman, may I move along.

Under section 3 of the bill there is created in the Department of the Interior and under the general supervision of the Secretary, a body corporate of perpetual duration—for this is to be a permanent organization—the United States Housing Authority, who is to have sole control and power in the administration of this novel and gigantic undertaking. Though this Department is perhaps the best qualified agency of the Government for the administration of this bill, no one who has reviewed its record in housing could possibly be satisfied that it yet understands the housing game. A record of its accomplishments to date can be found on pages 11835 and 11836 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this session. Any agency can build fine dwelling units if the funds are unlimited.

I do not mean to leave the impression that there are not many competent and capable men connected with the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration, and in fairness to this agency I want to repeat that its work up to now has been of an emergency character, with the primary objective of putting men to work rather than building sound, low-cost, economical dwelling units.

For myself, regardless of the social-welfare aspects of such a program, I could never feel that I had done what was right, honest, and fair if I voted for any measure that authorized the Federal Government to furnish any particular class of our people homes of a superior quality and character to those built and owned by the frugality, self-sacrifice, and savings of the average citizen of America. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, this bill has no parallel in any civilized country in the world. Neither in England, Holland, Sweden, or any other country where the Government has aided its citizens in providing housing facilities, has the Government gone so far as our Government would be forced to go if this bill is enacted into law. Do you know that under this bill no tenant of any Government-financed project would ever have to put up a single penny of the capital cost of the dwelling in which he lives or where he and his family might reside over a period of 60 years? Do you also understand that under the provisions of this bill no tenant or occupant can ever hope to become an owner of such dwelling as he may occupy? Nothing in this bill even remotely encourages private ownership of the projects to be built!

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from North Carolina 5 additional minutes.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Not only does he not have to pay even a penny toward the capital cost of the shelter or home that has been provided for him, but under the provisions of this bill the Government pays a part of his rent and becomes obligated with the local housing agency to do so for a period of 60 years.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like information from the gentleman as to whether or not, in view of what he said about the price of $7,000 per unit, there is any likelihood, if this bill becomes a law, of people in the lower grades of income being able to pay the price that would have to be charged for occupancy in the units that will be constructed.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I think I know exactly what is in his mind. But it is necessary that we remember that one of the objectives of this bill is low-rent housing, and that only families who can pay some rent will be eligible. I am, of course, disappointed, from the testimony presented to our committee, that no family with an income of $700 per annum or less could possibly meet the rent requirement. My hope and aim has always been that a measure of this kind would first benefit those who needed it most, and that would include the 15 or 20 percent of our true American families who were in the lowest income brackets.

I think the membership of the House will be interested to know that of an estimated number of 6,000,000 non-farm-tenant families whose incomes were less than $1,000 in 1936, but 22 percent, or 1,300,000 families, had incomes between $700 and $1,000. If my understanding of the financial provisions of the bill is correct, these are the only families with incomes less than $1,000 per year who are financially able to live in the projects contemplated to be constructed under this bill, and they represent but 11 percent of all non-farm-tenant families. So far as I know, no one has disputed this calculation and conclusion. In other words, it means that 4,800,000 families in the lowest income group are excluded. Think of the injustice and unfairness of such a measure. If it is true—and I am sure that all of you know that it is true—that the lowest income groups live in the worst houses and have to pay the highest rent in proportion to their income, then of the estimated number of substandard houses of 12,500,000, all of them must be occupied by the 3,000,000 families whose incomes were less than $500 in 1936, and they will receive no benefits from this measure.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss very briefly what I consider to be absolutely essential to any program of this kind if it is to be successful in accomplishing the desired goal. I refer now to the question of local financial cooperation. No program of this kind can possibly succeed in any community unless the public-spirited citizens of that community are willing to back it with their time, energy, and money. Though the projects are to be nominally operated by the local housing agencies, we all know that the major rules and regulations will be prescribed by those who put up the money, and under this bill it means the Federal Government. When one of these projects is built and occupied, where is the local agency that would not be subjected to incessant political pressure to make concessions to different tenants from time to time? If the project is entirely financed by the Federal Government, what could the Government do in the event that the local housing agency failed to cooperate? Is it reasonable to suppose that the Government would at any time resort to eviction of a tenant? No, my friends, you know that unless the local communities have a financial stake in one of these enterprises it will sooner or later mean an outright gift on the part of the Government and the use of the building for providing fine housing facilities at low rent for a favored few.

If these slum areas, blighted areas, overcrowded, and congested tenements are so costly to the metropolitan areas or localities in which they are situate—and practically every witness before our committee testified that the cost of maintaining the slum areas was three or four times the amount received in taxes—then why should not the local municipal authorities be willing to contribute a part of the cost of the project and also a part of the annual subsidies? I know that the municipalities, under the leadership of Mayor LaGuardia, of New York City, make the claim that no city in the United States with a population of over 50,000 is able to make any contribution toward this program. My answer to that is that if they are not willing to dig down in their treasuries and bear a part of the expense of this program they should not come to the Federal Treasury and "holler" for help. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, let me explain, if I may, in a general way, the procedure for carrying out that program and especially financing it. Under section 9 of the bill an effort is made to limit the amount that the United States housing authority can lend on any project to 85 percent of its acquisition cost or development. In the committee I tried to limit the maximum amount that could be loaned to 75 percent of its cost, but the committee did not follow me. Later on I shall explain to you that this limitation, when applied to a project that is proceeding under section 11, would amount to nothing.

You realize that under this bill the maximum interest charged is 3 percent per annum, though today we are charging borrowers from the Federal land banks 3½ and 4 percent, and distressed home owners whose mortgages are held by the H. O. L. C. 5 percent. The local housing agency not only borrows the money at 3 percent for a period of 60 years, but under the terms of the bill a generous and charitable government makes a contract with the local housing agency to subsidize, through annual appropriations, the local housing agency up to 3½ percent on the amount it has loaned for the development of the project for a period of 60 years. In other words, there is nothing in the bill that requires the local housing agency to ever pay back to the Government one dollar of the amount it borrows as a loan. Unless you read the financial provisions carefully, you might get an impression that the local housing agency, through rents, would pay off the loan. To illustrate: Suppose a local housing agency borrows from the United States Housing Authority a million dollars to build a low-rent housing project. If the plans and specifications are approved, the United States Housing Authority makes a contract and puts out the money on a basis of 60 years at 3-percent interest. This is $30,000 per year in interest. In addition to this the United States Housing Authority, in order to insure that the project will be a low-rent housing institution, also contracts to subsidize the project up to 3½ percent per annum, or $35,000 per year. This 3½-percent subsidy is provided by an annual appropriation and must be made for 60 years, or so long as the project is maintained and operated in accordance with its instructions or regulations.

Let us take a more homely illustration, for I am satisfied that no other member of the committee will talk to you much about this feature of the bill. You will remember that I said a while ago that no member of the Treasury Department was apparently bold enough to try to explain it to us. Here is a good friend of mine who wants to engage in a worthy, humanitarian enterprise. He is bent on doing something good for humanity. He has the idea but he is not willing to back it with his own money. I am interested in what he wants to do, and I am in position to make some of his friends put up the money. So I say to him, "I will lend you $1,000 at 3 percent if you will use it in furtherance of this worthy enterprise." The contract is made, and I then say to my friend that if he will continue to use the project for which he has spent my money I will give him $35 per year to pay me the interest on the money I loaned him. That is a fair sample of the financial arrangement under this bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, there is not a man in the committee who will controvert that statement. It is true, however, that some effort has been made to require an initial local contribution up to 15 percent of the cost of the project; but I want to say right here that in its present form this provision requiring local financial assistance is under the capital-grant provision—an outright joker. I am also inclined to believe that the other provisions for local assistance toward provision for the annual subsidies amounts to little, if anything.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I could easily talk about the provisions of this bill all the afternoon without adequately and completely discussing them as they should be discussed. I take it to be the duty as well as the privilege of any member of a committee of this House to disclose fully and fearlessly every provision of a bill which we are called to pass judgment upon. I know that in doing this I may be charged with not being "regular" or failing to stand by the committee. I have always reserved the right to speak my convictions, and this I have tried to do today. I shall continue my effort this afternoon to perfect this bill in keeping with what I believe to be a sound, fair, and practical piece of legislation. I shall not, however, undertake to superimpose my views upon anyone. That is contrary to my conception of the proper function of a Member of the House.

And now, my friends, before I forget it, I want to tell you that out of several million families who have low incomes, this bill, if the per-dwelling unit cost of $5,000 is kept in it, will only benefit about 100,000 of them. Five thousand dollars divided into 500,000,000 gives you 100,000. This number may even be reduced if the $5,000 limitation on the per-dwelling unit cost does not include the cost of the land upon which the projects are located or built or the cost of demolishing the old structures or slums when and if they are required by the Authority to be eliminated or demolished. This is another phase of this measure that I want to expose at the proper time.

Our chairman has stated that this is the beginning, or first step, of a great program. That is perhaps correct, for we all know that it would take many years to do the job at which this bill is aimed. If the program is carried to its ultimate conclusion, so that all of our people in the low incomes will be treated like the fortunate 100,000 families which will benefit under this bill, the involvement of the United States Treasury, including loans, grants, and annual contributions, would run to astronomical figures. The acquisition or development cost alone would amount to 6,000,000 families times $5,000 per family, which amounts to $30,000,000,000. Then, if you figure an annual subsidy of 3½ percent on $30,000,000,000 for 60 years, you will see that the total involvement to the Federal Treasury would be $30,000,000,000 plus $60,000,000,000, or the staggering sum of $90,000,000,000. This, of course, may never happen, but it is surely a possibility and something that we should reflect upon in the consideration of this first step. I know that I am using, perhaps, the extreme limit, but I cannot believe that my Government wants to treat one family in the low-income bracket better than it treats another family in the same bracket. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the last speaker, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK] portrayed the effects of this bill so well that we may well pause and consider where we are going on this new subsidy road. This week our debt will probably amount to $37,000,000,000. The word "emergency" is not attached to this bill. We were to invest in more borrowed money $700,000,000 in the Senate bill now reduced to $500,000,000, but until it emerges from conference we do not know what the exact amount will be. The Treasury will sell these bonds to the public, tax exempt as usual. The Treasury will claim as assets the bonds of the various so-called housing authorities as they do the capital stock and securities of the other corporate devices. Perhaps next year they will tell you that they will try to balance the Budget by putting on the market such assets as these bonds of dubious value. Rather do I think they will have to be held by the Treasury indefinitely. One hundred years ago we loaned 26 States a lot of money. They still owe it, and we carry it as assets on the books of the Treasury, although we never have and never will ask for it.

We now have a large amount of these kinds of assets, and an unsuspecting public believes that they are real assets. Our contingent debt will now be $5,000,000,000, besides the direct debt of $37,000,000,000. I can think of many humanitarian things we could do if we had the money. After all these recent housing experiences and the sordid facts of resettlement experiments exposed, we should proceed very slowly in further operations in housing. Our apology or explanation under this bill is that we are to decentralize and let the local municipalities do it. Is there more morality and efficiency in a housing authority created by a State than there is in one created by the Federal Government? Is there not much more opportunity of political corruption in some States? In the Senate they did put on a limitation of cost, because it was argued that great scandals would follow unless they put a ceiling over the cost, and the limitation of $4,000 was written in the bill. Do not be deceived. Of course, this is a slum-clearance bill. It is and must be for the benefit of the cities. One of the witnesses said, "Of course, it is not for the farmer. Farm tenancy and the Department of Agriculture will attend to them, although it might be worked out in a village." Many cities and even villages have a large alien population which may or may not comprise the slums in those places. Why such sudden interest for the alien population? Recently you made the alien ineligible to W. P. A. assistance. The situation in England is interesting and should be fully explained. One of the witnesses before the committee made this statement. Listen to this:

> The British have made some progress in handling housing projects. They establish the rent, let us say, on a 4-room unit and they take contributions that have been made by the federal authority, and those made by their local authorities, throw them into a pool, and then they set a different rate per family. Families are given rebates based upon its needs and conditions and ability to pay, and in operation it becomes practically the same problem we have in administering relief associations to the family.

A man may have a job, and he moves in. When he loses his job, who is going to put him out? Nobody. It is to be low-cost housing, controlled by the municipality itself. Gradually people on relief will be transferred to these places. Of course they will. Gradually it must happen as it evidently has in England. People on relief whose rents are paid by the city itself will be transferred to the cheapest homes, and then you will have nothing but glorified alms houses. I want to make that emphatic. If stigmatized too strongly, ponder the more delicate language which I read to you as actually what they have in Great Britain. Of course a man afterward unable to pay will not be turned out. No. The relief authorities will keep him there at this low rent.

There are many other phases to this bill. Is it a safe financial investment as claimed? What do we have for security? In the bill it seems that we would have liens and mortgages. In the committee we were told that "We will simply buy the bonds of the local housing authorities running up to 60 years." People accustomed to living in slums, would not allow of a house to last 20 years. We should know that. The maximum life of most houses is limited to 33 years. This is a 60-year loan. Good-bye to that $700,000,000, as well as the nearly two billions yearly subsidy.

The two methods of subsidy to be adopted are indefensible in the expenditure of the people's money. The contributions by municipalities are credits for tax remission and services; they do not have to put up any cash. You give them 20 years to pay in those services, which may be even charges for playgrounds, use of parks, and similar privileges. Should they not remit the taxes, anyway? I see but little in the bill about real security for loans, although it implies a lien, represented by bonds purchased. It does declare that private organizations may foreclose and when so foreclosed, the Federal Authority will stop the yearly subsidy. This certainly implies that we give and loan money subject to prior mortgage.

A witness jocosely said, "It ought to be a good investment, because we ourselves put up 3½ percent every year. We have a first lien on that. We are sure to get our interest on our bonds." Think of it. Put up the money for the interest ourselves, so that we will be sure to get it.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. CURLEY. Does the gentleman figure money values greater than human values?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, no. However I might have to endure a toothache for a long time if I have no money to pay the dentist. And we have no money. Our credit is already too heavily drawn upon to embark further on these schemes of doubtful efficiency in their administration.

Again we have no money. Worse than that, we owe huge amounts that can and will not be paid for generations. As to human values, the same conditions will always exist as they exist now. One-third of the people will be relatively ill-fed, ill-clothed, and ill-housed always.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. Gladly.

Mr. HEALEY. Then the gentleman proposes to do nothing?

Mr. GIFFORD. Oh, no; I propose to do what we have done always. Does not the gentleman's city take care of its unfortunate? Wealthy New York and other cities are here today for largesses. We must know the beneficiaries of this bill. You farmers are not to be fooled into thinking you will receive benefits from it.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GIFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. HEALEY. The burden on my particular city has been so great during the depression that it has been impossible for it to take care of the people who need relief.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman lives in a prosperous bedroom of the city of Boston; but he comes from Massachusetts. Massachusetts can take care of its own. Your credit was good with the State of Massachusetts; you did not have to come here; but everybody else was coming, and, of course, your city came.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I understand the bill covers 60 years. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY] wish to convey the impression that the depression will continue 60 years? I though we were out of the depression.

Mr. GIFFORD. I do not think my friend from Massachusetts would want to buy any of the bonds we are to receive from these various housing authorities; if his city of Somerville had to come here for relief, how about the credit of other cities we might mention? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 6 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I take this brief time out of order to state that I am in hearty sympathy with the proposition of the President when he asked for $500,000 to move American citizens from the battle zones in China. This is money that is needed immediately for relief of our own citizens under stress and in a great emergency. On the other hand, I am bitterly opposed to the proposal of the President and of the Secretary of State as expressed in the press to send immediately 1,200 additional Marines into China. We already have some 2,500 troops in China, about 1,500 Marines and the rest Infantry. In addition we have 10 American gunboats parading up and down the Yangtze River, for what purpose I have never been able to learn. In addition we have also a whole fleet cruising up and down off the shores of China. It seems to me that if we do not want to be involved in an Asiatic war we should withdraw all of our troops, our marines, our soldiers, and our gunboats from China where they do not belong anyhow.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman think these forces should be removed before we give our people notice to get out and help them to get out?

Mr. FISH. Oh, no. I think we should help our own people to get out. We should serve immediate notice on them that they should leave the war zones. We should help them to leave the war zones; but if they insist on remaining they should remain at their own risk and not involve this country in war.

Suppose a few American soldiers doing their duty over in China under orders from this Government are wounded or killed by the Japanese troops. All of a sudden we have an incident that leads to war. Unfortunately there is bad blood between Japan and the United States due to our restriction upon their immigration into this country and due to the fact that we have bombarded them time after time in regard to purely Asiatic matters. If we leave our troops there and some incident arises, then we are more than apt to be involved in a war against our own will, for there is not a single American, Democrat or Republican, who wants war with Japan. There is nothing to be gained by it, and we would pay a terrible price in blood, tears, and treasure.

Furthermore, the problem in the Far East is an Asiatic problem involving Soviet Russia, China, Japan, and likewise Great Britain. I for one am not in favor of having the United States police China or any other foreign nation, or pull the chestnuts out of the fire for the British Empire.

Paraphrasing the well-known statement of George Washington, why forego the advantage of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Asia entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of Asiatic ambition, rivalships, interests, humor, or caprice?

Paraphrasing a famous British statesman, Great Britain expects every American to do his duty. That is what we are doing when we are policing China, as it is mostly for the British Empire. We do only $50,000,000 of trade there. We have less than 10,000 American citizens in China, but we probably have including those on board battleships 10,000 American troops, marines, and sailors in or near China to protect those few American citizens.

The time has now arrived to withdraw our troops from China and serve notice on our people over there that if they stay there from now on it will be at their own risk.

The CHAIRMAN. The time in which the gentleman is permitted to speak out of order has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, for years I have been advocating on the floor of this House and elsewhere slum clearance and low-cost housing legislation. If any country is worth living in it is our own. We are the richest and greatest Nation in the world. If Great Britain, Germany, Sweden, and other foreign nations can provide for slum clearance in their financial situation then we in America can well afford to provide slum clearance in the great industrial cities of America toward improving the living standards of our poorest citizens.

Mr. Chairman, I intend to support this legislation because it is the only low-cost-housing and slum-clearance bill that is before us at this time. You either believe in slum clearance or you do not believe in it. However, I confess I am heartbroken about this measure because it accomplishes so very, very little. I estimate in the great city of New York it will take care of only about 12,000 people. I would call this bill a 3-percent bill. It accomplishes so little it is hardly worth while bringing it up at the eleventh hour to be considered as a major issue. It will only take care of 3 percent or less of those who need to be taken out of the slums in the city of New York, and I assume that applies to all the great industrial cities of America.

Mr. FORD of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield at this time.

Of course, we Members of Congress are about to go home and tell labor how much we have done for them. We are going to tell the poor people how much we have done to provide low-cost housing for them. We will probably present for the time being a very good case. But the truth of the matter is that the bill will accomplish very little for labor and very little for slum clearance. It is only groping in the dark to solve a great problem, but at the best is only a mild experiment in slum clearance and low-cost housing.

Mr. CURLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CURLEY. What did the Republicans do for slum clearance prior to 1932?

Mr. FISH. I just told the gentleman I am for slum clearance and have been urging it for years. I am going to vote for the bill, but at the same time I believe it is my right and duty to state to the House what I believe should be done. With me it is not a question of $500,000,000. I would vote for $5,000,000,000 to be lent to American citizens in order to build their own homes, so that we might create home owners and not concentrate the population in large apartments and human beehives. We should try to take the population out of the cities and put them on land, with little homes of their own, where they may become property owners, taxpayers, and good American citizens. I believe that would do more to offset radicalism, socialism, and communism in America than any one thing that this Congress could do.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. Does not the gentleman from New York agree with the very able gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK], whose logic was irrefutable, that this bill absolutely prohibits individual ownership?

Mr. FISH. Absolutely.

Mr. SHORT. It regiments and communizes by throwing up army barracks in cities, such as you have out there at Tugwelltown and Greenbelt, and shacks that will be more collectivistic than anything I saw in all of Soviet Russia.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman believes in plain speaking. So do I.

Mr. SHORT. I do not see how my friend can support this atrocious and abominable measure.

Mr. FISH. I am supporting it because I am in favor of slum clearance, but I much prefer my suggestion to loan money at 3 percent to American citizens with which to build their own homes.

I know of no other way of clearing the slums of New York City except by legislation of this kind and this is the only bill before us. This is not what I would do for one minute if I had my way about establishing a constructive housing program.

Mr. FORD of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. FORD of California. The gentleman says he would vote for $5,000,000,000 to be turned over to insurance companies, trust companies, and so forth, to lend.

Mr. FISH. I did not say that. The gentleman suspects savings banks, insurance companies, and the building and loan associations, but if we could use existing agencies backed by the Government so much the better.

Mr. FORD of California. The gentleman said that to the committee repeatedly.

Mr. FISH. I would be glad to have private industry build if it could do so at a low rate of interest and on a long-term credit of 25 or 30 years. If that cannot be done, let the Government do it by lending the money at 3 percent through the National Housing Authority for a national housing program to put American citizens in their own homes. If England, Sweden, and Germany can do it, then the United States of America can do it. I believe we could work out a similar plan. [Applause.]

Mr. REILLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. REILLY. Does the gentleman not know that at the present time any American citizen who has 20 percent of the cost of his home may build a home under the insurance program of the Housing Division?

Mr. FISH. Yes; but he will have to pay 5 percent.

Mr. REILLY. But they are able to do that.

Mr. FISH. Not many of them can afford to pay 5 percent. The reason the program in Great Britain, Sweden, and Germany, as I understand it, has been successful is that the Government provides a subsidy in the way of low interest rates at 3 percent and a long-term credit of 25 to 30 years. If we would do that, then I think this would become the greatest bill the Congress ever considered and it would do more good in this country than anything else the Congress could pass in this or any other session to promote the general welfare.

Mr. CURLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CURLEY. The gentleman represents a district in New York and I also represent a district in the city of New York. He knows very well that under the State Housing Act of the State of New York, chapter 949 of the laws of 1920, the State of New York contributed something like $190,000,000 to provide for industrial speculators and builders.

Why cannot the Government come in now and help the poor fellow who does not have a dime? Certainly, human values are far greater than money values.

Mr. FISH. The gentleman knows perfectly well this bill is going through. It is going through because many of us believe in slum clearance and low-cost housing for our lowest income groups, and this is the only bill before us, and it is probably the only way to get the results we want in the near future. The plan and scope of the bill has been approved by practically every newspaper in New York City and I propose to support it, although it is far from perfect and does not carry out my ideas of what a real housing program should be, and I fear that the bill will be a disappointment to its most earnest well-wishers in failing to make much of a dent in slum clearance in the city of New York, particularly with the unfair and unfortunate 10-percent allocation limitation.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD] such time as he may desire.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, I note in the debate on this bill, S. 1687, otherwise known as the Steagall-Wagner housing bill, that some of my distinguished colleagues have been at great pains to assure us that they are in entire sympathy with its objectives but, because of certain features of the bill, that they cannot support it. This reminds me of one of the old rhymes:

Mother, may I go out to swim?
Yes, my darling daughter;
Hang your clothes on a hickory limb;
But don't go near the water.

Now, my friends, in my reasoned judgment, the Steagall-Wagner housing bill has two great objectives: First, it seeks to clear, demolish, or abolish those excrements on civilization which we have described as slum areas, areas that are apparently concomitant with great metropolitan centers; second, it seeks to establish, let us say for argument's sake, a yardstick for low-cost housing for people of limited means, which is, I believe, a laudable purpose. Now, referring back to slum clearance, let me say this: It has been argued on this floor, and I presume it will be further argued, that for certain reasons slum clearance is a local responsibility. To a limited extent I agree. But I must, if I am to exercise my prerogative as a national legislator, also insist that the existence of slum conditions is a national problem. It being a national problem, I am therefore convinced that it is the duty and responsibility of this Congress to direct the Federal Treasury to materially assist in the financial problem of eliminating, insofar as is humanly possible, slum areas in the United States.

I made reference in my early remarks to the establishing of a yardstick for low-cost housing. It is my judgment that, in view of the shortage of decent, safe, and sanitary housing for families of low income, that some steps should be taken to remedy this condition before this unfortunate group, which represents at least 40 percent of the population. This end can be obtained if the amendment which will be offered, not as a committee amendment but by a member of the committee, broadening the application of the Federal Housing Authority principle of insuring loans to insurance companies and other financial institutions. One of the important results of the adoption of this amendment would be the bringing out of hiding of billions of dollars of private money and putting it to work in the construction of low-cost housing units. This, in my opinion, would have three beneficial effects: First, it would create a tremendous amount of employment; second, it would bring into the normal financial economic stream a vast volume of private funds now lying idle; and, third, it would provide decent, safe, comfortable, sanitary housing conditions for millions of people of moderate income who are now forced to live in out-of-date, antiquated, and insanitary quarters that should not be permitted to continue as residential occupancy units.

Reverting back to the slum situation, permit me to make this observation. I am opposed to the existence of slum areas, because I believe that in those areas there is a constant menace both from a health and a social standpoint. The breaking out of an epidemic in a congested area in one of the large cities may seem at first glance to be a purely local problem. But suppose that 500 or 1,000 of the residents of this infected area should quietly slip away after having been exposed to the contagious disease which was epidemic there and, by reason of their being exposed, spread that disease over a wide area of the Nation. Would that not become a national health problem? I might further venture to assert that many of the criminal element are nurtured in the slum areas and are often given asylum when fugitives from justice in these areas. So that while the existence of slums may be said to impinge directly on, and increase the cost of local government, in the final analysis and in the long view they contribute directly to our national health and crime problem.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the statement made today by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK]. I think any of us who are responsive to the needs of this Nation will agree that slum conditions are a cancerous growth upon the body of our community life and should be removed. We want to be responsive and we must also be responsible. I am willing, in order to accomplish this purpose, which has not been accomplished thus far by other means, that we shall even go so far as to use the national taxing power—although I do not like that idea in principle—to treat this cancer upon these individual communities, provided we can do it with some evidence of practicability and provided we know that when we get through we are going to hit the target of low rent within the range of slum dwellers. Whether or not these things are accomplished by this measure depend upon changes which I hope will be made before the Committee rises. Unless they are made I cannot support the bill.

Under this bill there are two different methods of providing the money by the Federal Government.

One of the systems is what we call the plan of annual contributions. The other system is what we call the capital-grant plan.

Let me say right here that I congratulate the members of this committee for the way they have worked on this matter, because it has been approached in 10 all too short days entirely from a nonpartisan angle, although we have not agreed about every detail of the method to be employed.

I believe every member of the committee will concede the point that we might just as well toss the capital-grant system out of the window, because no one is ever going to take advantage of it. The reason they are not going to take advantage of it is indicated by the chart I have here, whereby it is shown that under the annual-contribution system the Federal Government will provide 72.7 percent of the money, as compared with the capital-grant system under which the Federal Government would only provide 28.4 percent of the money. Therefore it is obvious that any community would be plain, right down foolish if it chose the capital-grant system as compared with the annual-contribution system.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman does not mean to contend that the local agency could administer this law?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I do not understand the gentleman.

Mr. STEAGALL. The matter of choice will not be left to the local agency. The Federal authority will have something to say about that.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. To some extent, yes; but I cannot imagine any local authority that is going to qualify in any way, shape, or form and only get 28.4 percent capital grant when by the other system they will be able to get 72.7 percent, principal and interest.

Now, under the annual contribution plan, what happens? Let us take a $1,000,000 project and follow the formula of the bill through to see where we come out in the end. Let us set it up as a bookkeeping transaction with respect to a $1,000,000 project.

We find under section 10 of the bill it is provided that the Federal advance of money cannot exceed 85 percent of the development and acquisition cost of the project. Thereby the Federal Government can advance to the local housing authority $850,000 on a $1,000,000 project. So we are going to enter that as a charge or an advance that is going to be made to the local housing authority. Then according to the terms of section 9 of the bill we have got to add the interest charge and under this section of the bill it is stated that the interest charged against the local housing authority shall be the Federal going rate of interest, plus one-half of 1 percent, which means a total of 3 percent. The interest on that sum of money, $850,000, at 3 percent, over a period of 60 years, amounts to $1,090,950. So the advance on the part of the Government is figured by adding the principal, and the interest on only that portion which the local government has been able to obtain as a loan from the Federal Government, and it amounts to $1,940,950. This is one side of the picture.

Let us take a look at the other side of the picture. Under section 10 (a) and (b) of the bill, it is provided that there shall be allowed to the local housing authority an annual contribution which is equivalent to the Federal going rate of interest, plus 1 percent, making a total of 3½ percent. In other words, $35,000 a year is the sum of the annual contribution on a million-dollar project.

The bill in the same section provides that 25 percent of this amount of money must be put up locally either in the form of cash, tax exemptions, or tax remissions, but not in the form of any kind of community services.

Therefore, it is indicated that the local share of that $35,000 annual contribution will have to be $8,750 a year, which, deducted from the total annual contribution of $35,000, leaves $26,250 as the amount the United States must contribute every year under the annual contribution basis. That sum for the period of 60 years, 60 times

$26,250, equals the total Federal contribution over the period of 60 years, or $1,575,000. So there you have the other side of the bookkeeping transaction. Let us step down here to another table. The total amortization, according to a formula rule, if you have a debt of $1,000,000 and you have to pay interest on it at the rate of 3 percent, and if it is to be amortized within 60 years, will require the sum of $2,167,928, both Federal and local charge, to pay that debt—principal and interest.

Mr. McKEOUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. McKEOUGH. If you are going to amortize a debt of any amount in 60 years, it does not require 60 years at 3 percent a year. At that rate it would be amortized in 33⅓ years.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. No. I think the gentleman's question is based on whether this charge is based on diminishing sums.

Mr. McKEOUGH. If I have 60 years in which to amortize the debt, I would not have to pay 3 percent for that period. That would mean 60 times 3, or 180 percent.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. If you have a debt on which you have to pay 3-percent interest, and it is $1,000,000, and it is charged for 60 years, it will require $2,167,978 to pay the bill.

Mr. McKEOUGH. O Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has confused interest with amortization.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I shall ask the gentleman to disprove my figures in his own time. I have only 10 minutes and even now will have to omit many points I would like to make.

Mr. McKEOUGH. I am just calling the attention of the House to the fact that a debt payable in 60 years at 3 percent could be authorized 100 percent in 33⅓ years.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. You take 60 years at 3 percent and it will more than double your original loan. So that of that amount which must be paid, there is not only this $850,000 borrowed from the Federal Government, but also the $150,000 which must be added by the local community. With this included in here at the rate of 3 percent, assuming they could not get the $150,000 locally at any cheaper rate, you have to pay $2,167,978 to amortize $1,000,000 as outlined here. Of this sum the total Federal contribution over a period of 60 years is $1,575,000, which means that the local community will, therefore, have to pay $525,000, in other words 24.2 percent, whereas the total Federal contribution of the entire amount is 72.7 percent. The $67,978 to be paid by the tenants is equivalent to 3.1 percent. The sum and substance is that on a million-dollar project the Federal Government is going to provide every single penny of the million dollar cost of the project plus $575,000 on top of that, to be used in repaying itself for interest charges.

If this bill is not corrected; if its final form will permit this gift of $1,575,000 on a million dollar project—and if it will permit the construction of $8,000 and $9,000 dwellings, including land and nondwelling facilities, for slum dwellers, how in the world can we ask the citizens of all the communities of the United States to pay for this project when they themselves have bought and paid for homes of their own that do not average more than $4,000?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, objection has been made to this bill that it violates the fundamental principles on which our Government is founded, and that it is an improper function of the Government to invade State rights, going into communities to help the underprivileged. I am wondering who in America can object to that at the present time. In law there is the doctrine of estoppel, and men by their conduct can be estopped from taking certain positions. Certainly the railroads cannot object to it, the banks cannot object to it, the insurance people cannot object to it, the home owners in the cities cannot object to it, and the farmers cannot object to it. They have all been the beneficiaries of Government bounty. My opinion is that this bill subserves a very useful and very national and very governmental purpose. We must admit that it is experimental, that it is not perfect, that it will be perfected as time goes on, but the purposes of this bill, it seems to me, are purposes in which every man and woman in the United States should have a great interest. A slum not only involves a social and economic loss, but it involves a national peril. We sustain not only a national loss by reason of the maintenance of slums, but they are a malign influence that tend to undermine our Government. There we find the doctrine of communism and anarchy preached. That is not only my opinion. That is the opinion that has been recognized by the courts everywhere and I shall read from a decision of the court of appeals of the State of New York in the case of Adler v. Deegan (251 N. Y.), in which Justice Cardozo said:

> The Multiple Dwelling Act is aimed at many evils, but most of all it is a measure to eradicate the slum. It seeks to bring about conditions whereby healthy children shall be born, and healthy men and women reared. * * * The end to be achieved is more than the avoidance of pestilence or contagion. * * * If the moral and physical fiber of its manhood and its womanhood is not a State concern, the question is, What is? Till now the voice of the courts has not faltered for an answer.

In the case of City Housing Authority against Andrew Muller, Justice Crouch, of the New York Court of Appeals, said:

> Slum areas are the breeding places of disease which may take toll not only from denizens, but by spread, from the inhabitants of the entire city and State. Juvenile delinquency, crime, and immorality are there born, find protection, and flourish. Enormous economic loss results directly from the necessary expenditure of public funds to maintain health and hospital services for afflicted slum dwellers and to war against crime and immorality. * * * Concededly, these are matters of State concern. * * * Time and again, in familiar cases needing no citation the use by the legislature of the power of taxation and of the police power in dealing with the evils of the slums, has been upheld by the courts. Now, in continuation of a battle which, if not entirely lost, is far from won, the legislature has resorted to the last of the trinity of sovereign powers by giving to a city agency the power of eminent domain.

I live in a district far removed from these slums, but I realize the benefit that will flow to my country and to my people from the eradication of these great evils. They say that New York will benefit by this. Well, if we are going to attack an evil, we must go where that evil exists. We cannot attack an evil in New York, from the State of Kentucky or the State of Missouri, but there is a limitation of the expenditure that can be made under this bill of 10 percent, and that money will be expended by local housing agencies, men who are responsible locally to the people of the various communities who are vitally interested in the elimination of these slums, and who will expend this money, I have no doubt, in the most economical and expeditious manner in which it can be spent. I think we can trust those people if we give them this money, to see that the great thing they wish to be accomplished is accomplished by their local people and in a manner that will be as economical as possible. I have no fear that there is going to be any great waste of this money by these local people, because I know that the ultimate result is of more interest to them than it is to any other section of the country.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. McGRANERY. Is it not true that a large number of the cities of the United States and smaller communities will be benefited under the terms and conditions of this bill?

Mr. SPENCE. We all know this bill is general in its scope.

Mr. McGRANERY. I say to the gentleman that it has been said on this floor that only a small number of the larger cities will benefit. Has it not been the experience of the gentlemen on the committee that a number of the smaller communities were represented there, and the committee was urged to pass the bill?

Mr. SPENCE. That is absolutely true, and the bill in its scope and purpose is general. If the smaller cities do not benefit by reason of its passage, it is because the evil that the bill attempts to correct is not in the smaller cities. Any city that can qualify under this bill, that can establish a local housing agency, will receive the same treatment that the city of New York or the great centers of population will receive under the bill.

There is one other thing I want to say. You have heard that we are going to distribute national funds in local communities, to let them do as they please with the money that we contribute. To every dollar that is contributed by the National Government there will be one-quarter of a dollar contributed by the local agency. I believe that is a great saving influence, because if people will not be vigilant in the protection of the national money, they will certainly want to protect the money that they contribute for the elimination of these slums.

Mr. McGRANERY. Is it not true that the building and loan representative was one of the most vigorous opponents of the bill in the committee? I make no reference to any member of the committee, but the gentleman who appeared for the Building and Loan Association of the United States.

Mr. SPENCE. I have always been a great advocate of the building and loan associations. They built up my city. They have rendered great service to the people of my community. I would not do anything to hurt them, but I do not let any influence stand in the way of a great public purpose. [Applause.] I do not believe we will hurt the building and loan associations. I think when we make this country a better country for everybody to live in, when people are more happy and contented, the building and loan associations will do better than they are doing now. So I do not think we need worry about that.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. TERRY. Criticism has been made of this bill that it makes no provision for the ultimate purchase of small homes, but rather it tends more to making a community of tenants than of home owners, and that the Government should assist in the ultimate purchase of homes, rather than a continuation of the tenant status.

Mr. SPENCE. That is a very pretty theory, but how impractical it is. We are attempting to take people out of the congested areas in the great cities, where five or six of them live in a room. How are we going to give isolated homes to all of those people? How could we give any relief of that character to the people of New York or Chicago, where land values are high, where there are great numbers living in crowded tenements in the congested districts? How could we give relief in the method some of the gentlemen suggest? It is just impractical and it cannot be done. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE] has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 9 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, it is a long time ago that someone once suggested to Abraham Lincoln that there was no good reason why people should be educated out of public funds or why hospitals should be maintained out of public funds. His answer was this: That the Government shall do for the citizens that which they cannot do for themselves or that which they cannot do so well. That is the broad premise that was laid down by the Great Emancipator a long time ago. That, of course, provokes the question as to whether or not people can lift themselves out of slum conditions. My answer to that is "No", and I will tell you why. I think this country was developed chiefly through the operation of two powerful forces, one that we can call centrifugal and the other centripetal. When George Washington occupied the Presidency 3,000,000 people constituted our population. Then this centrifugal force started operating that uprooted families and spewed people everywhere, even to the Pacific seaboard. It is the force that sent Lieutenant Pike up Pikes Peak; it is the force that sent our people into the Northwest country; it is the force that sent explorers into California. When the frontiers had closed the centripetal force became operative and threw people to a common center instead of throwing them out. As a result it picked up these isolated family units dotting this country and threw them into the great beehives like San Francisco and Cleveland, like Boston and Chicago, like New York, and other large cities; and once they got there it was almost impossible to get them out again because the big city licks them. The big city licks the spirit; the big city so often licks the opportunity to better their conditions. So there they are, stagnating in cheap apartment buildings and tenement buildings that were built a long time ago, infested with cockroaches, provided with no plumbing on the inside, many of which have no hot and cold running water, some of which have no running water at all. There these people are bogged down, and I ask: How are you going to get them out? How are you going to improve their condition?

Here we are embarking upon an ambitious program to get them out of those conditions and to put them into new buildings or some other place that is more habitable than the one they occupy at the present time. Why is it necessary? What is the problem? Let me state it very briefly. I have examined these figures ever since I got interested in housing, and I want to compliment the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency on which I served a couple of years ago when we were first considering the housing bill. I think he has done a splendid job. He has worked on this a long time in the hope that a bill might come upon the floor.

Here is the problem: You have, for instance, the fact that about 33 percent of the families pay a rental of about $6 a month per room. Commerce Department figures given as the result of their study of conditions in 64 cities 2 years ago show that these people can pay about $6, but many authorities tell us that it costs $11 or more per room to build new housing. How are we going to make up that difference of $5 or more per room if they have not income sufficient to pay it? And yet we cannot provide new housing except at that additional cost. Who is going to bridge the gap between $6 a room that the family can pay and the $11 or more a room that it will cost? That is where the Federal Government steps in if you agree in the light of an evolved social conscience that we are experiencing in this country today that it is the proper function of the Federal Government to step into the field of housing. This bridge is provided for in this bill. It provides rental subsidies such as they have in Sweden; such as they have in England; such as they have in other places. That is, after all, a rather enlightening view of this matter. Or, if better suited, housing authorities can use a capital grant, also set up in this bill. Perhaps a loan will become necessary, which is also set up in this bill. While it may not be perfect in its financial ramifications, and while there may be some difficulty of administration, I am satisfied that with a lively sense of cooperation on the part of the people of the country and a sympathetic administration of this bill we can make some kind of start on the housing program. We have done nothing about housing up to this time except talk about it. It is a good deal like Mark Twain's statement about the weather. He said that much has been said about the weather but darned little has been done about it. We have until now done very little about housing. Here is the record: Since 1933 we established a P. W. A. Housing Corporation and give it $125,000,000. After the first 2 years there were few results. Then we established an Emergency Housing Corporation and gave them $100,000,000. They took a year to make examinations of one thing and another and after a year or so there was nothing to show for it. Then we started on a program of subsistence homesteads. Go down to Arthurdale, go down to Reedsville, and inspect exhibit A. I drove down there and looked at them. We built 190 houses there, these ready-cut affairs. They put in the foundations, but the houses would not fit the foundations, so they had to blow the foundations out. The windows would not fit, so they had to reconstruct all the millwork, and you will find from inquiry of the former director of the subsistence homestead project that we will lose about $4,000 a property on the 190 properties down there. They have abandoned 51 subsistence homesteads. Certainly it is not a very glorious record.

We have had a Resettlement program. Go over to Greenbelt and see that project. There we built 1,000 of these romantic-looking homes. I said they cost $14,000. The distinguished Senator from Virginia said recently that the cost is $16,000 each.

I tried to be charitable. He is closer to the truth.

How are they going to rent them? They are going to strike off anywhere from $6,500 to $8,500 per house and make that the basis for the rental. Do not take my word for it. Mr. Alexander, head of the Resettlement Administration, appeared before our committee and I quizzed him at some length. He had a nebulous, hazy, vague idea of what they were going to do. May I say they have not rented any of these $16,000 homes as yet but they intend to rent them to people in the income brackets from $1,200 to $2,000. Can you fancy $16,000 homes suited to $1,200 incomes?

In that housing field the Federal Housing Administration is the only bright and shining jewel in our housing activities. We did not expect too much from their administration of title I of the act for modernization purposes under which people put on a new roof or built a new bathroom or bought equipment of some kind. We knew we were going to have some losses. We knew there was going to be some bad paper that would have to be discounted. Their administration of title II, Federal mortgage and insurance, has been a pretty good job, and I take my hat off to the Administrator for that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, as we talk about the Federal Housing Administration and what they have done, I would make this suggestion: In view of what the P. W. A. Housing Division in the Interior Department has had to do by way of housing, speaking for myself alone, I would be quite willing to put the administration of this act under the existing Federal Housing Administration, because they have a tremendous backlog of experience and a considerable background. I think they would do a pretty creditable job. My approach to this venture is like that of a young lady who went into a stationery store to buy some stationery. When she made the purchase, she asked, "Is there any discount to members of a minister's family?" The clerk said, "Are you a minister's wife?" She said, "No; but I hope to become one." I approach this bill in pretty much that same light. I approach it with the feeling that there are some imperfections in it, but we are making a start upon this iniquitous, cancerous growth that has fastened itself upon the body politic of the country and if we do not do any more than enunciate the principle in the first year, I shall be satisfied and will overlook the first imperfections in its administration.

Anybody who has had an opportunity to visit the slum areas of large cities, see the slatternly manner in which our citizens live, see children playing in the streets, note the lack of air and sunlight, and observe the opportunities for crime and disease, must surely have questioned himself at such times and wondered why such conditions exist in a land that prides itself upon its culture, its enlightenment, its freedom, and its opportunities. Here, then, in the form of the pending bill is the first major offensive against these slums in the hope that through the years they may be abolished from American life.

It is a vast program with many implications. But we have precedent for vast programs. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation was a huge undertaking. There was something enormous about the Agricultural Adjustment Act. There was an amazing scope to the relief program, and while the housing program is a huge undertaking, it is not too big or too complex for solution. The essential thing is that we make a start.

Much has been said about the cost. Yes; it will cost money. Everything in this world costs money. The cost is the tax on human progress. It costs money to build battleships; it costs money to build and operate schools and hospitals; it costs money to build and operate parks and playgrounds; it costs money to undertake electric-power development. In a way it seems ironical that we have spent so lavishly that electricity might be cheaper, without giving proper regard to the habitations in which our people shall use that electric power. We could build 200,000 homes, costing $5,000 each, for what we spend on the Army and Navy. I make the comparison not because I do not believe in national defense or that expenditures for national defense are fruitless and wasteful but only to indicate that decent shelter for our people is also worthy of our best attention.

It has been said that to provide housing subsidies for distressed people is a kind of discrimination against that class who will receive no benefits from low-cost housing or slum clearance. In theory that is true, but is it not also true that money expended for relief for those who are in need is also discrimination against those who are not in need and cannot qualify. Might it not be argued that payment of old-age pensions is a discrimination against the younger people of our land? Yet few, if any, have raised their voices against these measures on the ground of discrimination. We recognize a public duty in these various fields and are carrying out that duty without a murmur. By the same token there is a duty toward those unfortunate people who are bogged down in unhealthy, squalid, and insanitary slums and dwellings and who in the nature of things cannot extricate themselves.

As time goes on I fancy that we shall take the housing function of Government for granted, even as we now take for granted the theory and function of social security. It is but another case of where our charitable impulses are on the march.

As a former member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I labored with the first housing bill that came to that committee. From that background and that experience I must confess dissatisfaction with some aspects of the pending measure. I feel certain, however, that when our housing venture is launched and the set-up made that many of the present objectionable features of the bill will be gradually softened and eliminated and the program established on a sound and workable basis.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 8 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, rather than speak directly to the bill, I desire to ask the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee two or three questions which are not clear in my mind. After having given additional consideration to the bill, may I ask the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency if he feels that the people with the lowest income, meaning by that income under $600 per year per family, can be accommodated under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. I may say to the gentleman we have heard considerable complaint about the burden put upon the Treasury by applying the provisions of this bill to those whose salaries are in excess of that amount. I would not say that the provisions of the bill would take care of the class to which the gentleman refers. However, in some communities perhaps it would.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If, under the terms of the bill, the slums are demolished and wiped off the face of the earth, where are we going to house that class of people with a family income of less than $600 and how are the means to be provided for their housing?

Mr. STEAGALL. There is no evidence they are in the slums now. They are being taken care of by other methods.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Through welfare relief, for illustration?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The reason I bring that up is because I personally feel that if the Federal Treasury must provide the means for the sheltering of these people, that shelter should be provided through a Federal housing project, so that we could round up the whole proposition under one head. The people would then know that the Federal housing project is going to take care of the lowest-income family as well as the low-income family. I wanted to develop that in this debate for the benefit of those who have not had the privilege of sitting on the committee and listening to the hearings that were held.

It is my understanding those families are to be provided for in this bill through what we term "welfare relief." I want to bring that out clearly in the debate so the RECORD will show the situation. If they are so provided for, that still comes out of the Public Treasury, does it not?

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, there will be those who have to be provided for by relief. It is not contemplated this bill is going to alleviate all of our difficulties.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is what I wanted to develop, so that the RECORD would show it.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not presume I can add anything to the discussion at this late hour. For the last few years there has been a rather insistent demand for some kind of a public housing program. We have had rather hurried hearings on this bill. We come on the floor of the House with a number of divergent views, which extend all the way from those who do not want any contribution locally and who believe it is entirely a national problem to those who believe it is entirely a local problem and the National Government should not make any contribution at all.

We have tried to compromise the matter. This bill is only the beginning. If we are going to carry through a Nation-wide slum clearance and a low-cost housing program, this is just the beginning. I was not quite able to understand the gentleman from North Carolina, one of the distinguished members of the committee, who has given very much study to the housing problem. I was not able to understand whether or not he is in favor of any public housing program, because it must be recognized if we are going to have a slum-clearance and a low-rent housing program, we cannot at the same time and by the same program have individual ownership.

Of course, it is desirable, and all of us, I am sure, are in favor of a program which will encourage private ownership of homes, which is an ideal situation. It would be un-American for any man to contend to the contrary. However, we must recognize the fact that in the slum areas, not only of New York and Chicago, but of any cities throughout this Nation of a population of 50,000, 75,000, or 100,000, there is the problem of providing safe and more decent dwelling places for those who are living in insanitary and unsafe quarters. This bill is but the beginning of a program which it is hoped will in the long run provide this class of people with quarters in which to live. We must recognize that there is a part of our population which can never be home owners, and, this being true, we must provide homes for such people through a public subsidy.

Mr. COLDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. Since this bill applies largely to slum clearance and the need of housing applies both to the city and the country, did the committee consider a plan of Government insurance which would encourage savings banks and banks which have savings departments to lend money direct to the applicants, thereby making the relief more widespread in its application than will this bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, the gentleman realizes that we already have such a system in operation by which the Federal Housing Administration insures loans which are made by banks, building and loan associations, insurance companies, and other private institutions. We already have such a plan in operation, which is designed to and is encouraging the building of individual homes.

Mr. COLDEN. Does that plan reach the farmer to any great extent?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely; it will reach anybody who can get money from his home institution under a mortgage insured to the extent of 80 percent of the value of the property by the Federal Housing Administration. This plan is already in operation, and has done a wonderful work. The bill now pending is designed to try to take care of the people in the congested areas of the cities who do not have, and never will have, any hope of becoming individual home owners. They are there, I think, forever, and we must recognize this problem.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Do I understand the gentleman does not concur in the statement made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], that there will be not exceeding 10 cities which will be the beneficiaries of this act?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not at all. There is absolutely no limitation in this bill.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. It will apply as well to the city of 100,000 as of a million population?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely. There is no limitation in this bill at all. The bill will apply to any city which has a congested slum area which must be cleared and replaced by modern quarters built for people who can pay a low rent.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Then what is necessary under the terms of this bill for a city of 100,000 to do in order to avail itself of the benefits of this act?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Such a city would make an application to the Federal Housing Administration, present its case, and show the necessity for relief. All you have to do is to convince them of the need and you will get the aid under this bill.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Are they clothed with absolute discretion in the matter of determining whether or not such a city of 100,000 can qualify in that it has slums which should be cleared?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. You have to place somewhere the authority to determine who will qualify for these loans, grants, or contributions, and this authority is placed in the Federal Housing Authority. I do not say this bill will apply to a city of 1,000 or 1,500, for perhaps it will not; but if a city of 50,000, 100,000, 150,000, or 200,000 has slum areas, it can apply for relief under this bill, and if it does not have such areas, it does not get the relief.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LANZETTA. I am pleased to see that the gentleman is interested in the problem of slum clearance in the various cities of the United States. May I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the limitation of $5,000 per family dwelling unit in section 15, subdivision 5, precludes the clearing of slums in most of the cities of the United States because of the high cost of labor and the high cost of the individual units in certain areas?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not at all. Why should the cost be any more in Pittsburgh, for instance, than in Wichita, Kans., or Kansas City, Mo.?

Mr. LANZETTA. I shall be glad to explain if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is, as far as the labor and the material are concerned. Then why should not any city be able to build for $5,000 a unit composed of four rooms, exclusive now of land, sidewalks, streets, and community service, when not 25 percent of the people of this country are living in houses which cost that much money?

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 additional minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. I, for one, want to say that I am in favor of this bill and in favor of giving all the liberal provisions possible to those who are living in the larger cities, but I am not willing to subscribe to any proposition of building for the low-rent-paying people of this country in the congested areas quarters which are far better than those in which 75 percent of the people of this Nation live.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LANZETTA. The gentleman asked the question as to the reasons for the difference in construction costs in the various areas of the United States. I might say to the gentleman that the labor costs in the cities of Philadelphia, New York, and other eastern and midwestern cities are much higher than the labor costs in the western and southern parts of the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is true to a certain extent; but, even granting that fact, I say again, coming as I do from a rural community, that while I am in favor of providing the subsidy which is granted under this bill in order to furnish low-rent housing to the people in the congested areas of the big cities of this country, I am not willing to subscribe to a plan which will build for them far better houses than those in which a majority of the people of this country live. [Applause.]

Mr. DEMUTH and Mr. LANZETTA rose.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DEMUTH. I wish to make this observation. Fifteen hundred dollars a room is $1 a cubic foot, and the very finest apartments in New York City were built for 60 cents a cubic foot, and under the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in Pennsylvania they are not permitted to appraise any home at over 25 cents a cubic foot. If these authorities cannot build these apartments for $1 a cubic foot, when a home owner can build his own home for not over 30 cents or 35 cents a cubic foot, I would say they should sharpen their pencils and become more efficient. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman is right.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK] is complaining about the cost. Of course, this is going to cost. You cannot have slum clearance or you cannot have low-cost housing units for people in the congested areas without somebody subsidizing them. You must do this.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. On the other hand, we have the gentleman from New York claiming that the cost is not high enough. Under this bill we have tried to strike a happy medium. The bill originally came to us without a cent of local contribution in it. The Senate put something in it and we have put in the bill provisions requiring the localities to contribute, to start with, 15 percent, and then, in addition to that, provide 25 percent of the entire contribution paid annually by the local authorities and by the Government. We have struck what we think is a happy medium on that. There are a great many people who want to make the local contribution higher, and there are those, on the other hand, who do not want to provide for anything in this respect.

This is nothing new. There is no new policy in this bill. We have subsidized the building of highways and we have gone on a 50–50 basis. We have required the localities in the flood areas to make a local contribution to provide for the damages caused by reason of the construction work in such areas. We have required that in the building of levees the local authorities shall put up one-third of the cost in order to accomplish such purposes, when it is primarily a local matter. While I think this is largely a local problem, at the same time I think the Government ought to help.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. CURLEY. Does the gentleman know that the United States Government subsidized over 1,120,000 home owners, not only in the cities but all over the country, and that they bailed out the mortgagees who held mortgages amounting in total to $16,000,000,000? The Government bailed them out to the extent of one-sixth of that amount or approximately $3,000,000,000, and this proposition not only affects the cities, but the entire country as well.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman refers to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation?

Mr. CURLEY. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not consider that as bailing them out; although the Government, no doubt, will lose something on those loans.

Mr. CURLEY. That is a subsidy also.

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is a subsidy on the part of the United States Government to help the local authorities; but I recognize there is a national aspect to this matter, otherwise the Government would not be justified in putting a single cent into it. On the other hand, there must be substantial local contributions, and this bill provides for that; and, so far as I am concerned, I am not sure that the local contribution is enough, but it is the best we could do in committee, and it is a compromise.

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. FARLEY. I would like to have the gentleman make it clear that there is considerable difference between the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act and this bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely.

Mr. FARLEY. There was an emergency, and we were saving homes, while in this instance we are undertaking to build new homes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely; and, in addition to that, we took a mortgage on their homes for 80 percent of their value; and it was the intention and the hope that the United States Government would not lose a cent on account of that transaction; while here there is a direct subsidy. There is no question but what money has got to be paid out of the United States Treasury under this bill to subsidize these projects. As to what the amount of this subsidy will be, there seems to be a difference of opinion; but I will tell you what I think it will be, and I believe the figures will bear out my statement. If the plan is carried out to the maximum, I believe the Federal contributions will not exceed something over $11,000,000 annually. This sounds like a whole lot, but that is what it will be. There is no use trying to fool ourselves, and we should not be deceived into thinking this is not an absolute subsidy. We are paying out the money for that purpose, and there is no doubt about it.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Is the gentleman satisfied with the cost limitation in the House bill of $5,000 as the maximum per unit?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Personally, I am not.

Mr. MOTT. What does the gentleman believe the maximum should be?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not believe the amount should exceed $4,000. Personally, I think that is what it ought to be.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will read the House substitute for the Senate bill. Under the rule, it will be considered as an original bill, and amendments will be in order at the end of each section of the House amendment to the Senate bill.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SECTION 1. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to promote the general welfare of the Nation by employing its funds and credit, as provided in this act, to assist the several States and their political subdivisions to alleviate present and recurring unemployment and to remedy the unsafe and insanitary housing conditions and the acute shortage of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income that are injurious to the health, safety, and morals of the citizens of the Nation.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STEAGALL: Page 35, line 1, after the word "income," insert a comma and the following: "in rural or urban communities."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, that is merely a perfecting amendment to make the preamble of the bill conform to the substantive provisions.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I am not opposed to the amendment, but I use this method to get an opportunity to speak on the bill.

I have been interested in the subject of low-cost housing and slum clearance for a long period of time. After making a broad and comprehensive survey of the subject I prepared a bill, H. R. 7399, and introduced it in the House of Representatives on April 10, 1935. A revised draft, H. R. 8666, was introduced by me on June 25, 1935.

At the opening of the 1936 session of Congress, Senator ROBERT F. WAGNER, of New York, and I combined and on April 3, 1936, we introduced a joint bill, H. R. 12164. Its fundamental principles and the financial structure which it proposed were the same as in my former bill. This bill received broad support throughout the United States. Outstanding national organizations of business, chambers of commerce, and large individual business concerns strongly supported it. Labor hailed it as the most important measure for social and economic recovery. The executive council of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. William Green, its president; Mr. John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers and now leader of the C. I. O., and hundreds of other labor leaders all over the United States openly and enthusiastically endorsed it.

CHURCHES SUPPORT THE BILL

The Pennsylvania House of Representatives and other State legislatures, a large number of city councils, the United Conference of Mayors, a large number of mayors from large and small cities, have all endorsed this bill. I could go on indefinitely, but I just want to add a few more endorsements of outstanding importance: The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the Unitarian Ministerial Union, the National Association of Housing Officials, the National Public Housing Conference, the National Urban League, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and the National Board of Young Women's Christian Association.

On January 5, 1937, I again introduced the housing bill, H. R. 1489. The bill which formed the basis of the hearing before the Committee on Banking and Currency is substantially the same bill which I presented, but since then many changes have been made by the committee. Some of these changes I cannot approve, because I believe that they are detrimental to the purposes of the bill and that they will seriously handicap the execution of the objectives of the bill.

The bill for low-cost housing and slum clearance constitutes a realization of the fact that families of low income are not able to pay rent which is economically required for decent housing. Decent, safe, and sanitary homes cannot be built at a cost which would permit the fixing of a rental which familes of low income can afford to pay.

UNITED STATES FACING HOUSING SHORTAGE

For several years I have warned the Congress and the country that a housing shortage of greater proportions than we have ever witnessed in the United States was impending. Before we had yet emerged out of the depression I presented figures to prove that it was necessary to build between 7,000,000 and 10,000,000 homes in the United States during the next 10 years if we are to avoid a serious housing shortage, a housing shortage which would weigh most heavily on the low-income groups. That housing shortage has now become a reality not only in Pittsburgh but in other large and small cities all over the United States.

I regret that the committee has made such important changes in the bill. When it came before the Committee on Banking and Currency it was not an emergency bill. It was a well-considered and well-planned bill, designed to meet the long-term needs and to wipe out long-standing evils.

MILLIONS OF FAMILIES LIVE IN SUBSTANDARD HOMES

Even before the depression 11,000,000 families, or about 40,000,000 people, were living in substandard homes. That group is now much larger. It still continues to grow. The reason is found in the fact that a substantial part of the American people have been unable to pay the rental required for decent housing.

Even in the prosperous 1929 fully 40 percent of the American families earned less than $1,500 a year. In 1936, 39 percent of the families had incomes of less than $1,000. Nearly 48 percent had incomes of less than $1,250 and 55.4 percent had incomes of less than $1,500. Not more than 20 to 25 percent of the family income should be expended for rent. Thus it is apparent that these families are unable to pay the rent which is required for sanitary homes. If we are to have decent housing, the Government must step in and make up the difference through subsidies; otherwise low-income families will be unable to secure proper housing, the congestion in the slums and blighted areas will increase, and disease and crime will be on the upgrade.

LET US STOP SUBSIDIZING SLUMS

Every student of the problem knows that slums are a great expense to the cities in which they are located. The municipalities must supply extra police and fire protection and spend much more money for dealing with criminals and delinquents in slum areas than in other sections. When the cost of these municipal services is deducted from the small revenue received from slum areas we find that it costs the average municipality much more to tolerate the slum area than it would to eradicate it and to replace it with modern, safe, and sanitary homes.

I shall cite only one example. A survey of the slum area in the city of Cleveland showed that the total tax assessment against it amounted to $225,035—most of which was uncollectible—whereas the expenditure of the city for police, fire, health, school, and other municipal service for that area amounted to $1,971,000. Therefore, even if the city collected all the taxes in that slum area, it would have an annual loss of $1,746,000, a loss which must be borne by the home owners living in the other sections of the city this year, next year, and every other year until we eradicate the slums. Similar conditions exist in Pittsburgh, in Philadelphia, and in hundreds of other cities in the United States.

SLUMS CAUSE DEATH AND BREED DISEASE AND CRIME

Early this year seven people were burned to death in a firetrap in the slum sections of Philadelphia. Nineteen met a similar fate in New York. Other examples could be given.

In the city of New York the number of deaths from tuberculosis is 220 percent higher and the deaths from spinal meningitis, 240 percent higher in the slum areas than in other sections of the city.

Juvenile delinquency in New York is 100 percent higher in the slum areas than in the nonslum areas.

No one can defend the condition which exists today. An examination of the situation from a purely business viewpoint will show that it would be much better to subsidize decent and sanitary housing than to subsidize the slums, which we are now doing.

RESTRICTIONS IMPOSED BY THE COMMITTEE

The low-cost housing and slum-clearance bill which came before the Committee on Banking and Currency was substantially in the form in which Senator WAGNER and I had drafted it, but it was reported by the committee in a very much restricted form.

HOUSE LIMITS ELIGIBILITY OF FAMILIES

In the limited period of time at my disposal I can only refer to a few of these restrictions. The bill as I drafted it made the low-cost homes which are to be built available to all families of low income. The Senate put limitations on that provision. It provided that no family was eligible to occupy any of the homes to be built under the provisions of this bill unless its income did not exceed five times the rental, or in the case of families of more than two minor dependents unless its income did not exceed six times the rental. The House committee in reporting this bill has carried this limitation to an even greater extreme by changing the 5- and 6-to-1 ratio to 4 to 1 and 5 to 1, respectively. That means that a family consisting of husband and wife and two minor children could not occupy a low-cost-housing project constructed under the terms of this bill if its income exceeds four times the rental charged for the low-cost-rental units. For instance, if rooms should rent for $5 each, and if such a family should want to rent a unit consisting of three rooms with a total rental of $15, it would be ineligible if its income exceeded $15 a week. In the example which I have given families with two dependent children would be ineligible to occupy such a unit if their income exceeded $720 a year. If you have families in your community with an income of $800, $900, or $1,000 per year, the limitation inserted in the bill by the House committee would eliminate them. This is a most severe restriction which will destroy the effectiveness of the bill, because a large number of the families who now live in slums will not be eligible. It must be eliminated from the bill, and I will offer an amendment to that effect, unless a member of the committee will do so.

Another restriction was written into the bill by the Senate. It limits the amount which may be spent in constructing low-cost housing to $1,000 per room, or $4,000 per unit. The committee of the House has improved this provision by increasing it to $1,250 per room, or an average of $5,000 for the construction of a unit. The House version of this provision is better than the Senate version, but even it is properly subject to criticism, and will make the bill unworkable in many cases.

Both the Senate and House committees have inserted provisions requiring local contributions which were not originally in the bill. This will delay the construction of projects in a large number of cities for a long time and may entirely prevent it in other cities.

DISTINCTION BETWEEN LOW-COST HOUSING AND SLUM CLEARANCE

Before I conclude I want to point out that there is a real and significant difference between slum clearance and the construction of low-cost housing. We can have slum clearance without constructing low-cost dwellings by dedicating the slum area, after it has been cleared, to some public use such as parks or playgrounds. We can construct low-cost housing without simultaneously clearing the slums by erecting these new homes on vacant lands. It is important to keep in mind the distinction between low-cost housing and slum clearance. These two terms are not synonymous. They may or may not occur at the same time.

The elimination of slums, the tearing down of dilapidated buildings, and the condemnation of the necessary land present very complicated problems. I for one hope that at the beginning of the operation of this bill much of the construction of low-cost housing will be done on vacant land in order to avoid the problems inherent in slum clearance and in order to speed up the erection of safe and sanitary dwellings at low cost. I hope that the administrator of this bill will not deviate from the purpose of this bill, which is the construction of low-cost homes, and that he will not insist that the construction be had in slum areas.

The fact that we are discussing this bill on the floor of the House of Representatives means a great victory for those of us who have fought for low-cost housing and slum clearance against terrific odds; but while I rejoice in the opportunity to pass a much-needed piece of legislation for which I fought for many years, I cannot help but express my deep disappointment in the many limitations and restrictions which have been inserted in the bill and which will make the bill unworkable and impractical in many cases. However, we have achieved one thing. We have achieved recognition by the Congress that it is the responsibility of our National Government to wipe out the slums and to assure decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income; dwellings in which the children of America can grow up amidst light, air, and sunshine, and in which the parents of America can live among clean and healthy surroundings. If the bill passes in the form in which it now is or in a similar form, Congress must take the responsibility of removing the restrictions and limitations which render the bill unworkable. When this is done at some later session hundreds of thousands of American families who are now living in slums or blighted areas will be rehoused. Then we can have a better, a more decent, a more abundant life for those among us who are not blessed with worldly goods.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman if he will not be content to extend his remarks from where he stopped, in view of the peculiar situation that exists. We are proceeding here with word passed around that we are to finish this bill tonight. In view of those circumstances I ask the gentleman and others please not to ask for an extension of time.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Can I not have 1 minute more?

Mr. STEAGALL. I will not object to 1 minute.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CURLEY. Mr. Chairman, I listened very attentively all day to the debate on this very important piece of legislation. I did not hear one person who took the floor mention anything at all about the building collapse in this country since 1933. We have something like 66,000 tenement houses in the city of New York. Thirty-seven thousand of them are what they call old law tenement houses. There are about 1,500,000 people tenants of those houses.

I do not believe anyone could object when we go back to 1933 and see what this great country did for the bankers of this country when we bailed them out. If you get the report of the Federal Home Loan Bank in Washington you see there were over $16,000,000,000 of mortgages on the homes throughout this country. I am talking about dwellings now, and they are not in the big cities, either. They are out in the rural sections. They are not in New York, not in San Francisco, not in Detroit, not in any of the other big cities, but all over the country. The fourth report of the Federal home loan bank in Washington states that they bailed 16⅔ percent, or one-sixth of the total of $16,000,000,000, which makes it pretty close to $3,000,000,000 that Uncle Sam put up to help those people out.

The paralyzing effect which the crisis of the depression produced between the years 1929 and 1933 in the building industry alone is colossal when you take a view at the statistics. Here they are: In 1929, in one-family dwellings, there were 98,164 buildings erected. In 1933, one-family dwellings, 14,000; 1929, two-family dwellings, 27,000; in 1933, two-family dwellings, 2,000; in 1929, three-family dwellings, 183,000; in 1933, 9,000. Then an estimate of building construction in 120 cities in the United States is given as follows: In 1929, $2,489,553,000; in 1933, $262,942,000 was spent.

Now, there is a picture for you. I hope that the gentlemen in considering this proposition today will take into consideration that terrible catastrophe which we had only a few days ago at Staten Island, where 19 lives were lost in that appalling accident. We have a situation in New York City that is somewhat different than anywhere else. I think, in view of the fact that the city of New York pays something like 37 percent of the taxes that go into Uncle Sam's Treasury, they should be given some consideration in the matter of effective slum clearance.

Between 1918 and 1929 there were 15,660 fires in old-law tenements as against 4,413 fires in new-law tenements. The former caused 448 deaths; the latter only 56 deaths. In other words, with four times as many fires in old-law as in new-law tenements, there were eight times as many deaths. This ratio becomes even more startling for the year 1934. Up to April 15, 1935, there have been 46 deaths by fire in old-law tenements in the city of New York. Only four deaths occurred in new-law tenements. It is important to observe the increase in fires after 1929. The swing upward seems correlated to the economic depression and the fall in real-estate values, according to Charles Abrams, consultant to the New York City Housing Authority. Slums must go, and this bill is a step in the right direction and should be adopted.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this bill opens with a very commendable statement, that its purpose is to promote the general welfare of the Nation. I have sat here all day, from the time the rule was presented until this moment, I hope with an open mind, and I hope casting aside any sectional prejudice or any thought of the fact that the only opportunity my district would have to share in this program would be to help pay the bill. I wanted to see if I could go along with those who proposed this particular remedy as the appropriate solution. I must confess that after listening to all the debate, I cannot see how we can say this proposal will—certainly in its present form—promote the general welfare of the Nation. I was glad to hear our distinguished committee member from Missouri, Mr. WILLIAMS, say that he did not favor the $5,000 limitation placed in this bill upon the individual unit. As a matter of fact, if you will look at page 56 of the bill near the bottom of the page, you will find that is not a definite maximum. That is but the average. It may be $2,000 in one section and $8,000, exclusive of a thousand or more for the land, in another section, whereas the average value of the farm houses of the Nation is only $1,100. The average value of all farm houses and outbuildings is only $2,020. Certainly I hope this committee will support the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. HANCOCK, who made a wonderful exposition of the real facts of this bill, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. WILLIAMS, in adopting the so-called Byrd amendment that was turned down, in the committee, I understand, by only one majority, in actually limiting this expenditure to $1,000 a room or $4,000 per unit.

You heard the gentleman from Pennsylvania tell you he was an appraiser for the H. O. L. C. in Pennsylvania, and he was limited, in appraising houses in that industrial State, to 25 cents per cubic foot, which would figure for the average home less than $500 a room. We cannot promote general welfare if we are going to take just a few of those who are underprivileged and put them into better homes and circumstances than the average self-supporting American citizen.

The distinguished Republican leader from New York [Mr. FISH] said that this bill would reach but 3 percent of the slum dwellers in the United States. With his usual novel approach to public issues he complained because the bill did not appropriate $5,000,0000,000 instead of half a billion; $5,000,000,000 of tax-exempt securities, when he has not lost an opportunity at this session to condemn this administration for what he termed a loose fiscal policy. He stood on this floor only last Monday and condemned our tax-loophole bill by saying that the real loophole had not been touched, the issuance of tax-exempt securities. But Mr. FISH need not worry because the bill does not immediately commit us to a $5,000,000,000 program. Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina assured us it would ultimately commit us to a $50,000,000,000 program. [Applause.]

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, there has been considerable discussion here, and there probably will be more, of the cost per room on slum-clearance projects. I wish I had more time than the brief 5 minutes I get on a pro-forma amendment to tell from actual experience on a slum-clearance project what it costs per room in a city of 50,000 people in the metropolitan area of New York, what the demand for the rooms is, and how the whole project is working out. With the indulgence of the House I shall extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein the facts and figures in this connection.

I have before me the cost over the United States, room for room, of various completed slum-clearance projects. For example, at Techwood, Atlanta, Ga., on a 2,124-room development the cost per room was $1,027. At University Heights, also in Atlanta, Ga., a project of 2,343 rooms the cost was $961 per room. At University Heights, Montgomery, Ala., 324 rooms, the cost was $1,210 per room. According to this table, the greatest cost per room was at Meeting Square Manor, a white project, and Cooper River Court, colored, both in Charleston, S. C., $1,793 per room, with some 700 rooms. The lowest cost project within the continental limits of the United States is the William D. Patterson Courts in Montgomery, Ala., 524 rooms, at $872 per room.

As I say, I wish I had time to break down these figures and show from actual experience as mayor of a city of 50,000 people, with nearby communities of several thousands, totaling in all 70,000 people, our experience with Fairfield Court, a United States Government slum-clearance project in our community. The newspaper in that community is a Republican paper, the Stamford Advocate. I have known it a great many years, but have never seen it very extensive in its praises of Democrats or the Democratic Party, yet the editor of this newspaper has been on the housing committee of Stamford, Conn., from its inception and supports this project 100 percent.

On my data sheets here the break-down shows that in the metropolitan area of New York it cost us some $1,601 a room, and, Mr. Chairman, there was no waste. The job was efficiently done.

In the final analysis, now that it is done, what is the average rental cost per room? It is $5.82 plus the utilities; that is, electricity, heat, water, and so on, making a total of $8.77.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I am sorry; I cannot yield.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. What is the subsidy?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I shall be pleased to answer if the gentleman can get me more time. There are 18 two-room units at $23.50 a month rent, including utilities. These are scaled to an annual income bracket of $1,320. And so it goes up to $36.40 for five-room units scaled to income brackets proportionately.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

Mr. STEAGALL. I shall be forced to ask the gentleman to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BEVERLY M. VINCENT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Chairman, after the rather discouraging experience of the past few weeks, it is especially gratifying to know that a start is about to be made on at least a third of the President's program.

We have heard that phrase "ill-fed, ill-clothed, and ill-housed", and apparently most of us gave at least lip service to the correction of these three evils. It seems that now we are about to take the first step in the direction of putting a roof over the heads of those who, because of the inadequacy of our national wage scale and the unequal distribution of the national wealth, have been in the past unable to provide proper housing for themselves.

I want to compliment the committee on their ability to report out a bill of this character in the face of opposition that knows how to be intense when it comes to providing for the needs of the less-favored one-third of our population. I am glad that this committee has seen the wisdom of broadening the base of home ownership. Why, as long ago as 1841, the immortal Charles Dickens grasped the true significance of home ownership when he wrote:

The ties that bind the wealthy and the proud to home may be forged on earth, but those which link the poor man to his humble hearth are of the truer metal and bear the stamp of Heaven. The man of high descent may love the halls and lands of his inheritance as a part of himself: as trophies of his birth and power; his associations with them are associations of pride and wealth and triumph; the poor man's attachment to the tenements he holds, which strangers have held before, and may tomorrow occupy again, has a worthier root, struck deep into a purer soil. His household gods are of flesh and blood, with no alloy of silver, gold, or precious stone; he has no property but in the affections of his own heart; and when they endear bare floors and walls, despite of rags and toil and scanty fare, that man has his love of home from God, and his rude hut becomes a solemn place.

Oh, if those who rule the destinies of nations would but remember this—if they would but think how hard it is for the very poor to have engendered in their hearts that love of home from which all domestic virtues spring, when they live in dense and squalid masses where social decency is lost, or rather never found—if they would but turn aside from the wide thoroughfares and great houses, and strive to improve the wretched dwellings in by-ways where only poverty may walk—many low roofs would point more truly to the sky, than the loftiest steeple that now rears proudly up from the midst of guilt, and crime, and horrible disease, to mock them by its contrast. In hollow voices from workhouse, hospital, and jail, this truth is preached from day to day, and has been proclaimed for years. It is no light matter—no outcry from the working vulgar—no mere question of the people's health and comforts that may be whistled down on Wednesday nights. In love of home, the love of country has its rise; and who are the truer patriots or the better in time of need—those who venerate the land, owning its wood, and stream, and earth, and all that they produce, or those who love their country, boasting not a foot of ground in all its wide domain? (Ch. 38, pt. 2, The Old Curiosity Shop (1841), Charles Dickens.)

Now, Mr. Chairman, I campaigned in 1934 and 1936 on the same kind of a program that our beloved President and the whole Democratic Party adopted in the campaign that ended so successfully last November. Once I tasted the dregs of defeat and once mounted to the heights of victory. And candor makes me say that the reason I am here today is because the policy I advocated was the one which met with the approval of the 300,000 people in my district.

I said and we said that the ills which continue to afflict our country must be obliterated and the way we proposed to do that was by retiring our old people, outlawing child labor, and giving to our working people wages commensurate with a truly American standard of living. What did that mean? Simply that we had to provide the cost of production plus a fair profit to our farmers, and to those who labor in other walks of life, a wage and hour condition above the minimum that decency demands. The President, in carrying out his promise to the people of America, has done his part. Some of us here, who try to act in a representative capacity for our people, have tried to do our part. But a whole program has been sabotaged by the work of those who, bent upon denying to the people the rights they possess, are using every means at their disposal to obstruct the principal points of that program. Let me explain. Some 15 bills were introduced providing a better pension for our old people. The authors of these bills were even denied a hearing before the committee. The chairman of another committee took the floor and promised that a certain bill would never see the light of day from his committee.

Relief for agriculture was denied because it was said that the Representatives of some of the farming groups have not been able to unite on a program. It might not be inopportune to remark, at this time, that perhaps one of the reasons the farming groups could not get together may have been that they were engaged like one of them admitted, in lobbying against another bill in no way connected with agriculture. The Agricultural Committee made a start in the direction of farm tenancy. Yesterday we saw the pitiful spectacle of another committee sitting as a court of last resort, and attempting to deny funds for the proper prosecution of even this small and totally inadequate beginning of a noble experiment. And last but not least, we see a majority of the Rules Committee aiming a death blow at the basic policy of the Democratic Party—a death blow at the hopes and aspirations of millions of the downtrodden of the Nation. My friends, I can view this only as a deliberate attempt to sabotage the New Deal. I denounce it as such. I shall not be a party to it, and I shall continue to strive for the enactment of wage and hour legislation, farm legislation, and low-cost housing legislation until the philosophy of the New Deal has been vindicated and the program consummated.

But I warn these opponents of real democracy to sail hereafter under their true colors. They are sowing the wind but they will reap the whirlwind. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro-forma amendments will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. When used in this act—

(1) The term "low-rent housing" means decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings within the financial reach of families of low income, and developed and administered to promote serviceability, efficiency, economy, and stability, and embraces all necessary appurtenances thereto. The dwellings in low-rent housing as defined in this act shall be available solely for families whose net income does not exceed four times the rental (including the value or cost to them of heat, light, water, and cooking fuel) of the dwellings to be furnished such families, except that in the case of families with three or more minor dependents, such ratio shall not exceed five to one.

(2) The term "families of low income" means families who are in the lowest income group and who cannot afford to pay enough to cause private enterprise in their locality or metropolitan area to build an adequate supply of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for their use.

(3) The term "slum" means any area where dwellings predominate which, by reason of dilapidation, overcrowding, faulty arrangement or design, lack of ventilation, light or sanitation facilities, or any combination of these factors, are detrimental to safety, health, or morals.

(4) The term "slum clearance" means the demolition and removal of buildings from any slum area.

(5) The term "development" means any or all undertakings necessary for planning, financing (including payment of carrying charges), land acquisition, demolition, construction, or equipment, in connection with a low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project, but not beyond the point of physical completion. Construction activity in connection with a low-rent-housing project may be confined to the reconstruction, remodeling, or repair of existing buildings.

(6) The term "administration" means any or all undertakings necessary for management, operation, maintenance, or financing, in connection with a low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project, subsequent to physical completion.

(7) The term "acquisition cost" means the acquisition cost of a low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project to the Authority or to a public housing agency, as the case may be.

(8) The term "average family-dwelling-unit cost" means the average construction cost, in a fiscal year, of a dwelling unit based on all the dwelling units in all the projects for which the Authority has made loans, grants, or annual contributions during said fiscal year. The date of the first allotment of funds for a project shall be used to determine within which fiscal year such project is to be included for the purpose of ascertaining said average. In computing the family-dwelling-unit cost, there shall be excluded the cost of the land, demolition, and nondwelling facilities. The term "nondwelling facilities" shall include site development, improvements and facilities located outside building walls (including streets, sidewalks, sanitary utility and other facilities), and administrative, educational, recreational, and commercial facilities in the project.

(9) The term "going Federal rate of interest" means, at any time, the annual rate of interest specified in the then most recently issued bonds of the Federal Government having a maturity of 10 years or more.

(10) The term "public housing agency" means any State, county, municipality, or other governmental entity or public body (excluding the Authority), which is authorized to engage in the development or administration of low-rent housing or slum clearance.

(11) The term "State" includes the States of the Union, the District of Columbia, and the Territories, dependencies and possessions of the United States.

(12) The term "Authority" means the United States Housing Authority created by section 3 of this act.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CROWTHER: Page 36, line 4, after the word "area", strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "and embraces the adaptation of such area to public purposes, including parks, parking areas, or other recreational or community facilities."

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman, this is a very slim and incomplete definition of what slum clearance is. As defined in the House bill, it means demolition and removal of buildings from any slum area. As I read the Senate bill, which language is stricken, it reads:

And may embrace the adaptation of such area to public purposes, including parks, parking areas, and other recreational or community facilities.

May I say there may be a great many instances in which it may not be desirable to build houses after the present buildings are razed, but the property may be useful for other purposes, such as recreational or as a playground or as a parking space, which will bring in revenue and tend toward a lessening of the financial burden of the Government and of the local housing authority. I hope the language may be retained in the bill.

Mr. REILLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. REILLY. Does the gentleman expect that the Housing Authority will purchase a slum area on which it does not build?

Mr. CROWTHER. That might be possible.

Mr. REILLY. They have no business doing so under this bill.

Mr. CROWTHER. Why not?

Mr. REILLY. They have only the right to purchase the land on which they are going to build.

Mr. CROWTHER. There are slum areas in many sections that ought to be wiped out completely, as not being a decent place on which to build houses. It may be over behind a railroad track. It may not have the proper environment. But the property may be useful for a parking place in the business district that may bring in revenue.

Mr. REILLY. That is a matter for the city to decide if it wants to make a parking place out of it.

Mr. CROWTHER. I think it might be left discretionary. Before the project is started it might be a good idea to give some thought to what may be done with the land, if it is not feasible to build in that immediate locality.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I was under the impression the gentleman intended to offer an amendment which would include the exact language of the Senate bill. The gentleman has offered an amendment which does not include all of the language of the Senate bill. The definition in the Senate bill is: "And may embrace the adaptation of such area to recreational purposes", and so forth, which would leave discretion in the Federal Housing Authority to do that work and accomplish that purpose in cases where it is found to be practicable and desirable. But according to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER], the Federal Housing Authority would be required so to use the area formerly occupied, whether it was practicable or not, and that might prevent the establishment of a project for the reason they could not comply with this paricular provision. The language used in the amendment makes it mandatory that they employ such area in that way.

If the gentleman will examine the bill, he will see that there is a requirement where slum clearance is needed and a new project is put in to take the place of the old slums which are to be removed. There is a mandatory requirement in the bill that that be done if satisfactory arrangements can be made. We are going to offer a committee amendment to the effect that the Housing Authority may defer the time when that shall be done, so that it may take care of the varying conditions in each locality as they involve each particular district. If the gentleman will read the provisions of the bill as they now stand, including the amendment we are going to offer, he will find the amendment he has offered will hamper the Federal Housing Authority in carrying out this law.

Mr. Chairman, for the reasons indicated, I ask that the amendment be defeated.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT to the amendment offered by Mr. CROWTHER: Before the word "embraces" in the first line, strike out the word "embraces" and insert "may embrace."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my amendment is to make the Crowther amendment read as the Senate bill read when it came to us. There has been a great deal of discussion concerning the advisability of the local housing authorities being allowed to construct parks, playgrounds, and so forth, in connection with these projects. I think it is most desirable that these vacant pieces of land which, we believe, may exist between the units be utilized. If this amendment is not adopted, the bill contains a prohibition against the use of this land for any purpose incident to the clearing of slums and making these places of decent habitation.

I believe the intent of this House should be expressed to the Authority which we set up here in that in addition to making these decent, sanitary places in which to live, that we give the youngsters who are compelled to live under these conditions a fair chance for their lives and limbs. We are spending in all municipalities millions of dollars for playgrounds to keep the children off the streets. The W. P. A. has spent thousands of dollars, perhaps millions of dollars, helping municipalities keep the children off the streets and has aided the various cities in constructing playgrounds, kindergartens, and so forth, the things that are desirable as appurtenances to these projects.

I hope the House this afternoon will just be a little humane as well as charitable and allow the Authority, if it sees fit, to utilize whatever vacant space there is between units for the purpose of constructing playgrounds, and that is all the Crowther amendment, as I have amended it, means. I hope the committee will agree to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment to the amendment.

It is very evident that the purpose of this amendment is to place upon the National Housing Authority the burden of subsidies for the cities' playgrounds, parking spaces, kindergartens, and other things, which is not the purpose of this bill. This amendment means that after these places are cleared of the slums you shall turn them into playgrounds, swimming pools, municipal operas, or other community activities, services which the cities themselves ought to perform for the people and which they are now performing. This amendment will relieve the cities of that burden and place it upon the Housing Authority, and the United States will pay for it. This is all the amendment means, and it should be voted down. Otherwise, the money could be used not for housing purposes, which is the purpose for which we are passing this bill, but to build playgrounds, swimming pools, or kindergartens, which is a function the city itself should and must perform.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that this amendment be voted down.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There are no financial provisions in the bill to take care of the cost of this operation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No. I should say no, however, if you put in this amendment, these activities would be carried on at the expense of the Authority.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If we now insert this provision there is no appropriation provided in the bill for building these playgrounds and places of amusement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I should not think so.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So the money we would intend to be used for housing would then have to be used for these projects.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Absolutely. You will simply take the funds we are proposing to use in building low-rent housing for the people who need it and with these funds perform a community service which the city itself ought to perform if such service is necessary. This is all the amendment means.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] to the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 36, lines 18 and 19, after the word "project", strike out "to the Authority or", and after the word "agency" strike out "as the case may be."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, this bill nowhere contemplates that the Authority referred to in this section shall acquire any land, so, of course, there will not be any acquisition cost charged to the Authority. Undoubtedly, this provision was put in because when the bill was originally drawn it provided that the Authority might set up demonstration projects, and, of course, in the construction of these demonstration projects land must be acquired. It is in order that there may be no inference that it is our intention that the Authority may acquire land or build these projects itself, and to keep the bill consistent with this idea, that my amendment is offered.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is only a clarifying amendment, and there is no objection to it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. This amendment merely clarifies the language and brings this particular section of the bill into line with all the other provisions.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina: Page 36, strike out all of subsection 7 and insert a new section reading as follows:

"The term 'acquisition cost' means the amount prudently required to be expended by a public-housing agency in acquiring or developing a low-rent housing or slum-clearance project."

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, this amendment clarifies the section as it is now. The language in the section now, "The term 'acquisition cost' means the acquisition cost", does not mean anything. This is a clarification of the section, and I think carries out the purpose for which this section is intended.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, there is no objection to the substitute proposal of the gentleman from North Carolina, as far as we are concerned.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to accept the substitute and ask unanimous consent that I may withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. As I understand this bill, it is not essential that the proper sort of an organization set up in a municipality have slums to clear. I do not think that in my city of Los Angeles we have slums, but we might desire the use of this method of subsidy to take care of low-rent housing.

Under the terms of this bill, would it be possible to have a project for low-rent housing for the use of Government employees? There are about 26,000 sailors aboard the United States fleet at Los Angeles Harbor, and many of them live on land with their wives and children. They are paid an average of $35 to $50 a month. Could the municipality of Los Angeles, in setting up the proper organization to seek these subsidies, build a low-rent housing project for the housing of these Government employees?

Mr. STEAGALL. Undoubtedly, they could.

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CASE of South Dakota: On page 35, line 11, after the word "families" insert "of citizens of the United States."

LET US START WITH CITIZENS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, it has been clear in all of the debate that whatever the cost of these projects is it involves a subsidy for the benefit of a particular project. Under some figures that have been presented, the eventual cost to the Government will exceed the original outlay, counting the rent subsidies that will come in the years that are to follow. The cost so far as an individual project is concerned for a family is limited to $5,000. The cost of the land will increase the cost so that the individual unit cost will be about $6,000. My amendment is designed to provide that if we are going to start on this program—and a program of slum clearance is undoubtedly a worthy aim—we shall start with citizens of the United States.

The more you think of it the more you will realize there can be little objection to this amendment. One-third of the people of this country may be underhoused, but, certainly, far more than two-thirds of them do not live in houses that cost $5,000. Yet, without such a limitation we shall have a proposition whereby people who do not live in houses costing $5,000 will be taxed to subsidize both the building and the rent of houses costing $5,000 which can be occupied by people who are not citizens of the United States. In any proposal for charity it is a perfectly good rule that charity begins at home. Let us start with citizens.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Not now, as my time is limited. The gentleman can rise in opposition to the amendment if the gentleman wishes to do so.

More than this, it is a good proposition to require that in starting this enterprise, it shall be limited to citizens of the United States or to families of citizens. This will put a premium upon citizenship and encourage citizenship.

Personally, I think the rule adopted by an industrial concern in my district that when they put on new employees they require that they shall have taken out their citizenship papers, is a perfectly good rule. I may say, incidentally, that this company experiences no great labor trouble, because they do put a premium upon citizenship and they treat their employees as good citizens. It helps both ways.

I doubt if any Member of this House can go home to his district and justify voting for a proposal that starts the building of housing units costing $5,000 or $6,000 for people who are not citizens of this country. Once in a while I think it is a good time for somebody to look at the needs of the citizens of the country.

I do not see how there can be any objection to an amendment requiring that—

The dwellings in the low-rent housing as defined in this act shall be available solely to families of citizens of the United States whose net income—

And so forth. I urge your support of the amendment, which inserts the words "of citizens of the United States."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments to this section do now close.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN and Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina reserved the right to object.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to the fact that I have an amendment that goes to a vital part of this bill, and I would like to have an opportunity to explain it for a few minutes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the request for the moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we may have the amendment read again. A doubt arose in my mind as to whether, under the terms of the amendment, a man who is a citizen of this country but whose father or mother is not a citizen could get the benefit of such housing.

The Clerk again read the Case amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ELLENBOGEN) there were—ayes 76, noes 64.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 37, line 4, after the word "the", insert the word "average."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, this is merely a perfecting amendment, and undoubtedly the word was left out by inadvertence.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

Page 37, strike out lines 4 to 10, inclusive.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the effect of the amendment which I have offered is twofold but has the same general objection. First, it would make the land cost and demolition cost a part of the per dwelling unit cost. It is my purpose a little later on in the bill to offer an amendment which limits the per dwelling limit cost to an average of $4,000 and the per room cost to $1,000, whichever is lesser. In addition to that, this amendment cuts out the provision which would enable the United States Housing Authority or the local housing authority, in determining the cost of the dwelling unit, to include the cost of the nondwelling facilities. In other words, if you adopt this amendment, the recreational, educational, commercial, and other outside appurtenances which the committees should provide, cannot be included as a part of a project for loans, grants, or annual contributions.

This amendment has been supported within the past 20 minutes by the distinguished gentleman from Missouri, Mr. WILLIAMS, and I do not believe any man who understands its purport will vote against it. There can be no possible justification for talking about building $5,000 dwelling units for people who live today in the slums and also authorizing the Federal Government to finance nondwelling facilities which may under the present amendment in this bill run the per dwelling unit cost in some instances up to $8,000, for the only limitation in the bill now is that the average cost shall not exceed $5,000 not including the cost of land and demolition. In addition to that, under the language of section 15, subsection (5), the authorities will never know what the average cost of dwelling units in a project would be until the last project during the fiscal year has been let. It really means nothing so far as a restriction. It is, however, quite similar to many other provisions in the bill. I hope this House will join with me in restricting the per dwelling unit cost to $4,000 and strike out the authorization for nondwelling facilities such as playgrounds, nurseries, kindergartens, and things of that kind, which every man here knows is surely a problem for the local authorities. [Applause.]

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. There is no doubt in my mind that there is a definite effort made here to emasculate this bill. I notice that the gentleman who preceded me was opposed to the bill. I have been reliably informed that this housing cannot be extended to the cities and the slum areas eliminated if you cut the per room cost down to $1,000. If you do not want a bill, if you do not want low-cost housing, if you do not want this bill to be successful, then vote in favor of this amendment, but if you want this bill to be successful, vote against the amendment. I notice that the amendments that have been presented to this bill have been presented from the Republican side of the House, and you Democrats have sat over here and voted along with those who want to emasculate the bill. It is about time that we Democrats join together to fight the Republican organization and do not sell our great President down the line. Let us cut it out and vote down this amendment and hereafter show our appreciation of what our great leader has done.

The time has come to tell the truth about the opposition that is now waging its bitter last-ditch fight against our great President—Franklin D. Roosevelt. Every Democrat in this House knows full well what is behind this opposition. Every Democrat—yes, and every Republican—knows that it is the aristocracy of entrenched wealth fighting for its very life—battling against the great objectives of the most progressive Democratic administration we have had in the whole history of our Republic.

This Nation could not long survive as a democracy if the greedy, grasping hand of gloating wealth should succeed in its efforts to crush the President of the United States. Make no mistake, my friends, this fight is a fight to a finish. Either we are going to win and go forward or we are going to lose and sink back into that bog of utter despair that engulfed and was slowly but surely crushing the life out of the Nation. But we are not going to lose.

Franklin D. Roosevelt entered the White House March 4, 1933, facing the most confused, distressing, desperate social and economic situation any President has had to confront in times of peace. We all know, the world knows, with what courage, with what infinite God-given vision, with what fortitude, and with what success President Roosevelt met that situation. We all know how President Roosevelt raised this Nation and our people out of that seemingly hopeless situation. At that time there was none too proud, too strong, too humble to give him credit.

And now what has happened? The very men who in 1933 were begging the President for help, the very men whose fortunes he rescued, raised again to the high pinnacle of arrogant and aristocratic wealth, are seeking to destroy the man who gave them back their lives. They are the men who are striving to array class against class, who are seeking to create caste, who are desperately fighting to preserve their domination and to make peasants of half the population.

I cannot go into detail as to what has been accomplished by the Roosevelt administration; that would take too long; but I can recite briefly what objectives the opposition is trying to destroy, and which objectives must be realized if the New Deal program is to be rounded out so that that third of our population ill-clad, ill-fed, and ill-housed may be given their right to live as they should live, and so that 5 percent of the population shall not control the other 95 percent.

I have already spoken somewhat in detail about the wage and hour bill. We know that the same forces who are opposing this bill are the forces that are opposing effective Federal programs for agriculture; the same forces that gloated when the Supreme Court declared the N. R. A. and the A. A. A. unconstitutional; the same forces that defeated the President's judiciary reform bill; the same forces that opposed the confirmation of Senator BLACK as a member of the Supreme Court. They do not want any man on that Court who has any sympathy with the New Deal. Does any Member of this House believe that the men who opposed the confirmation of Senator BLACK would have opposed the confirmation of Senator BURKE or Senator CLARK or Senator O'MAHONEY? No; the Tories, the economic royalists, the aristocracy of wealth want a Court that is against the New Deal. I believe that the selection of Senator BLACK has met with the general favor of a vast majority of the people of the Nation. With deliberation, the President found and recommended for appointment a man whose record has always been for the people and against the over-privileged. It is a blot on the escutcheon of America that those who opposed the nomination of Senator BLACK first whispered, and then brought the charge that in some way he was supported by the Klan.

The unfairness of false accusations of this kind is made apparent by his achievements. They are made by leaders of the Republican Party, which is at present dominated by powerful interests centering in my own State of Michigan. These same political interests did not hesitate several years ago to ally themselves with the Klan. They did not hesitate in 1936 to aline themselves closely with the Black Legion, referred to in my address in the RECORD of April 29. The partnership between the Wolverine Republican Club of Detroit and the Black Legion was proven in court trials that sentenced 18 Black Legion killers guilty of murder. It was at this club in Findlater Hall School that former Gov. Wilber Brucker, stalwart G. O. P. leader of Michigan, announced his candidacy for the United States Senate, against the incorruptible Senator James M. Couzens, well beloved throughout Michigan and the Nation. In Jackson County, where the Republican Party was formed; Oakland County, and Genesee, counties where the automobile industry centers, the Black Legion flourished hand-in-glove with Republican political clubs, frequently using the club headquarters as a blind for their wicked activities. In fact, the political connection with the Black Legion was so close that at the Republican State convention at Grand Rapids, it is reported the leader of the Wayne County delegates took the talisman of the Black Legion, a silver bullet, from his vest pocket and flicked it from hand to hand on the platform in order to indicate to other Black Legion delegates attending the Republican convention how they should vote in nominating Wilber Brucker as a delegate to go to the Cleveland convention, there to endorse for the Presidency of the United States a favorite Michigan son of the G. O. P. This favorite son was not nominated. He did not comment on the endorsement; nor has his voice, so vigorous in criticisms of constructive features of the New Deal, been raised at any time to my knowledge in criticism of this Black Legion connection with his party—so well known in Michigan that the 1936 Republican convention is known as the "silver bullet convention."

In addition to their being killers, the courts of Michigan found that these Black Legion members were also guilty of aiming to overthrow our very Government by armed resistance, and a half dozen or so of the flower of their membership were bundled off to jail on this proven charge.

The opposition to President Roosevelt and the New Deal care not what methods they use to accomplish the defeat of the President. How ghastly it is now to witness Republicans in high places trying to summon against a man charges that he was a Klansman, when as we all know those same Republicans welcomed with eager, open arms the support of the Klan in the campaign of 1928.

I repeat, the forces fighting President Roosevelt do not want a Court that will give the New Deal a square deal. I grant you that there appears to have been somewhat of a change in the Court in its attitude toward New Deal legislation. But in the light of the decision in the Hoosac-Mills case, what assurance have we that any legislation providing real equality for agriculture will be declared constitutional? Two members of the Supreme Court have the fate of all New Deal legislation in their hands. If they should change their minds again all the progressive legislation that Congress may pass—the wage and hour bill, farm legislation, and everything else—would be thrown out the window.

Today we are faced by the same conditions in agriculture that preceded the depression. Unless the Federal Government has adequate power to cope with surpluses, the return of years of normal weather means inevitably that farm prices will drop. We now see that the agricultural conservation program, basically sound insofar as soil conservation is concerned, does not and cannot keep the production of basic commodities in line with the needs of our domestic market and the limited export markets now open to our trade.

Mounting surpluses of cotton demand the attention of Congress or cotton prices will again collapse in the grip of depression. The potato growers of the North are equally concerned with a tremendous crop in the making, that without Federal assistance, will so depress prices that potato growers throughout the Nation will face a lean, hard winter.

Another corn crop such as the one we have is sure to reduce the price of corn unless we have adequate Federal farm programs, and the Corn Belt, the greatest market of this Nation, will have little money with which to buy needed things.

The Farm Board at a cost of over $350,000,000 net loss, proved by its failure that in the case of mounting surpluses properly guided crop control is essential to our agricultural and national prosperity. The Farm Board was well worth what it cost, if we heed its lesson, but we cannot and must not be forced to continue the same Farm Board program that helped substantially to throw this Nation into the chaos of the recent depression. In cooperation with approximately 4,000,000 farmers, President Roosevelt has shown the way to meet and conquer farm depression, and to return this Nation to prosperity. It is our duty as statesmen to spend this summer until called into session again in careful consideration as to the most effective way in which we can support our President and best serve our people by continuing and not impeding the program of recovery.

President Roosevelt rescued agriculture from the worst depression the farmers and laborers of the United States ever experienced.

In 1932 the gross returns to agriculture totaled $5,337,000,000. The gross income for 1937 apparently will approximate $10,000,000,000. As never before, the people of America have been made aware that farm prosperity and national prosperity go hand in hand. As a direct result of the return of prosperity to the farmer, the automobile factories of Michigan increased their output, and the mines of my State were reopened. Business throughout the Nation was quickened following each successful attack on the farm problem by the A. A. A.

Are we going to take chances on a return to the conditions that engulfed agriculture in 1932? We all know how imperative it is that we pass a farm bill and a wage and hour bill that will prevent a return of those conditions. But some of us apparently do not realize that the farm problem and unemployment problem is still an emergency problem. We are close upon the time when the farmers must figure out their plans for next year—they are already making their plans. Shall we defer action? I say no. I fervently hope that President Roosevelt will summon Congress back to Washington early this autumn for the special purpose of enacting a general farm bill, wage and hour bill, and other controversial legislation. With this legislation out of the way, Congress, when it meets in regular session in January, can speedily dispose of routine business and adjourn early so we can all go back home and find out whether our constituents are satisfied with the way we have represented them.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I had hoped that somebody on the Democratic side would oppose this amendment, because if it is adopted, as far as New York City is concerned, the bill is dead. We may as well face the facts. If the Members on the Democratic side who are responsible for legislation deliberately want to sabotage the bill, vote for the Hancock amendment, because under this amendment we cannot build any projects in New York City for slum clearance. I am not so enthusiastically in favor of this bill, but I want to be fair, and I shall vote against the amendment, because this is the only slum-clearance bill before us.

I do not propose to sabotage it, and that is what you are doing, whether knowingly or unknowingly. I had hoped somebody on the Democratic side among those trying to steer this bill through would get up and oppose the amendment and tell the truth as to what it would do to the bill. All I have got to say is this: If you want the bill sabotaged, vote for this amendment; otherwise vote it down and help enact the only slum-clearance and low-cost housing bill presented to the Congress. I do not claim it is perfect, nor does it represent my own views of what should be done, but I believe it is a much-improved bill over that which passed the Senate, and the New York Times editorially this morning takes the same view of it in the following words:

> But if the better features of both measures are retained, a great step forward will have been taken in improving the living standards of our poorest groups and ending the evils of the slum.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet at the time the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] obtained recognition. I rose to say exactly what the gentleman from New York has stated to the Members of this House. This is a direct attempt to sabotage and scuttle this housing bill. I say, Mr. Chairman, that we in the committee have sat for 10 days, and there was no man or no woman who appeared before that committee and demonstrated to us that this plan could be carried through under the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK]. The lowest possible cost that we could get in the evidence before that committee was the one that the committee finally adopted with some elasticity, giving it a maximum of $5,000. I say to the Members of this House, take the Hancock amendment and then you can move to adjourn, because you will have no housing bill at all.

I cannot urge on the membership of this House to vote down the amendment too strongly; by so doing give to the poor of our cities an oppotrunity to rear their families under conditions that will insure to these sturdy, hard-working citizens some sense of security, which, after all, is only an equal opportunity.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment again reported.

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, of course it is difficult to know just where we are going when we undertake to deal with the matter of details, and we know that ought to be left and entrusted to the administration of this act; but we cannot fail to recognize that in some of the metropolitan areas of the country the cost of construction projects necessarily exceeds that to be incurred in many other localities throughout the country.

In recognition of that fact we have undertaken to place two limits in this bill, one being $5,000 as the cost of construction, excluding the land and other things that enter into the project itself. The other limitation is that the Authority may not go beyond the cost of similar projects in the localities where the project is undertaken, the measure being the cost incurred in such construction by private enterprises. If this is to be a workable bill and is to accomplish the primary purposes contemplated by those who are responsible for it, the safe thing to do is to leave this language in the bill with the limitations that are set up, and put some little trust in the common sense and fidelity of the men who will administer this law.

I hope the amendments will be voted down.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will limit it to this amendment because I have an amendment that I believe to be of importance.

Mr. STEAGALL. I will withdraw the request for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina) there were—ayes 59 and noes 77.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. ELLENBOGEN: On page 35, line 11, after the word "exceed", strike out "four" and insert "five"; in line 16, after the word "exceed", strike out "five" and insert "six."

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment restores the language of the Senate amendment. That amendment was offered in the Senate as a restriction on the bill, as originally introduced, but the House amendment goes even further than the Senate amendment. The amendment which I have offered restores the Senate version of the bill.

I want to say this is a matter of vital importance. Whether or not this bill is workable depends to a large extent on what you do on this amendment. Under the definition, as it is now in the bill, any family head who earns eight or nine hundred or a thousand dollars would not be eligible to live in these places in many cases. Let me give you an example. The bill as reported by the committee says that the occupancy of the dwelling shall be limited to families whose income does not exceed four times the rent. So that if a man has a wife and two children and rents a dwelling of three rooms in one unit at a rental of $5 a room, the total rent will be $15. Four times 15 is 60, which means that no family would be allowed to occupy that unit if it has a yearly income in excess of $720. Any man earning in excess of $720 would not be eligible to occupy such units. To put such a limit in the bill is to destroy its usefulness. Let us be more liberal; let us be just to families who need decent and sanitary housing. Let us at least be as liberal as the Senate was. Let us make it at least five times the rental. In the case of a man who has three minor dependents or more, the proportion of income to rental will be 6 to 1. This is a vital point.

I want Members of the House to realize what they are voting on. I hope that you will increase the number of people who can live in these dwellings. Are you going to go back into your districts and say to the head of a family making $16 a week, who has a wife and two children to support, that he cannot live in such a low-cost housing project? That is exactly what the committee version says.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Yes; gladly.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Does not the gentleman think it would be fairer to strike out any limitation?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. That may be so; but then the bill could not pass this House. Let us go back at least to the Senate version and not destroy this bill entirely. Why pass it at all? Why not say you are not in favor of it? If you are in favor of the purpose of the bill, you must be in favor of this amendment.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I regret, indeed, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania seems so concerned about this proposition, inasmuch as he has given a great deal of thought and consideration to slum clearance and low-cost housing.

If the bill means anything, it means that we are going to provide dwellings for those within the extremely low-income brackets, because we think at least that those dwellers in slums, these slums which we want to clear up, are in the very lowest-income brackets. I felt when we passed upon this provision in the committee, and I like to feel now, that we are helping no class of citizens outside of the class within the very lowest-income brackets. I do not know that there is very much justification for building homes under this bill for people who can afford to provide themselves with better quarters.

It was thought that there might be people with low income who did not live in the slums, and that by giving them a break, giving them the opportunity to move into a little better character of home, we might be able to take care of many of the people who lived in the slums. That is why low rentals were put into this bill, to insure to the people of the country that the people in the lowest-income brackets instead of those who were able to pay for better accommodations would be taken care of.

We followed, I believe, the advice of the distinguished Senator from New York, the author of the bill in the Senate, in adopting this amendment to reduce these figures to four and five, respectively. I understand that on the 2d of August Senator WAGNER introduced an amendment. What happened to it I do not know; but if I read this bill correctly, although I cannot speak for him, it was Senator WAGNER'S purpose to keep this within the low-income bracket and to give this relief to the people with the lowest incomes.

If we are going to keep this a low-cost housing bill, a slum-clearance bill, we have got to keep it down. Do you want to subsidize people who can afford to move into better accommodations, or do you want to subsidize the people who, because of their unfortunate condition, are compelled to live in the slums? I have felt that this was a bill to help those people who had to live in the slums because of their extremely low incomes. I do not want to vote for a bill to subsidize a better place to live to those who can afford to pay for it. I do not want to give a subsidy of the Federal Government to people who can afford better accommodations.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I appreciate the gentleman's views, but the thought occurs to my mind whether or not by making it four instead of five the gentleman is not accomplishing the direct opposite of his desire. We know that costs are a great deal more than $6 or $7 per month a room; that if we did not provide a 45-percent grant it would run as high as $10 or $11 a room. Suppose a man made a salary of $15 or $18 a week—and there are lots of families in the slum districts that have an income of just about that amount—how can these people pay $6, $7, or $8 per month per room?

Mr. WOLCOTT. We are only kidding ourselves. A lot of people who live in these slums that we are going to clear up are on W. P. A. now; we are subsidizing them anyway.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania simply means that we raise the income standard to where the benefits of this legislation in the one instance goes to those who earn five times the amount of the rent as against four times as now provided in the bill, and in the other instances the standard of income would be raised from five to six times the annual rent.

The purpose of the legislation is to extend benefits to those of as low-income standard as it is possible to reach. The gentleman's amendment defeats this purpose.

I express the hope that the Committee will vote down the amendment.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to take a minute to repeat the argument I tried to make this afternoon. Why all this fuss in trying to determine this rent matter by simply the income? It is the expense which the man may be up against that determines his ability to pay. He may have sickness in the family; he may have a large family to support. All sorts of other conditions enter into ability to pay the rent. You cannot measure his ability by four or five times the income he receives. Why place so much reliance on that phase of it?

Mr. Chairman, I said something today about aliens. I shall now lose about all the chance I ever had of getting any of the slum-clearance aid. I mention this because of the recent vote against families of aliens. Your attitude of liberality toward the alien suddenly changed. Where are you going to place them? They usually have very large families. You have now deprived them of this aid even as you did the W. P. A. assistance.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I want to ask the gentleman a question, because on this question very largely determines my vote on the bill. Is it the gentleman's understanding this bill which we are now considering is so drawn that those with family incomes of $600 or less per year can be accommodated under the provisions of the bill?

Mr. GIFFORD. That is the attempt in the bill, but his ability to pay cannot always be measured by the exact amount of his income.

Mr. CRAWFORD. A few moments ago I asked the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency if he felt that way about it and, if I understood him correctly, he does not take that position on this bill at all.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Is it not true that the effect of the Ellenbogen amendment would be to reduce the number of very low income families that would be benefited by the bill?

Mr. GIFFORD. Of course, many would take advantage who should not be included in this attempt to aid those now living in slum areas. It will take years of experimentation to determine who should be the beneficiaries under this plan.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES HOUSING AUTHORITY

SEC. 3. (a) There is hereby created in the Department of the Interior and under the general supervision of the Secretary thereof a body corporate of perpetual duration to be known as the United States Housing Authority, which shall be an agency and instrumentality of the United States.

(b) The powers of the Authority shall be vested in and exercised by an Administrator, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Administrator shall serve for a term of 5 years and shall be removable by the President upon notice and hearing for neglect of duty or malfeasance but for no other cause.

(c) The Administrator shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year, shall be eligible for reappointment, and shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Neither the Administrator nor any officer or employee of the Authority shall participate in any matter affecting his personal interests or the interest of any corporation, partnership, or association in which he is directly or indirectly interested.

(d) An Advisory Board is hereby established in the Authority, which Board shall consist of nine members to be appointed by the President. The Board shall make recommendations to the Administrator on matters relating to the policies of the Authority, and shall meet upon call of the Administrator. The members of the Board shall receive no annual salaries for their services on the Board but may be paid necessary traveling expenses and reasonable per-diem compensation for services performed. In selecting members of the Board, the President shall have due regard to representation of public housing, labor, construction, and other interests, and various geographical areas of the country.

SEC. 4. (a) The Administrator is authorized, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States, to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, experts, and employees as may be necessary for the proper performance of the duties of the Authority under this act.

(b) The Administrator may accept and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services and with the consent of the agency concerned may utilize such officers, employees, equipment, and information of any agency of the Federal, State, or local governments as he finds helpful in the performance of the duties of the Authority. In connection with the utilization of such services, the Authority may make reasonable payments for necessary traveling and other expenses.

(c) The President may at any time in his discretion transfer to the Authority any right, interest, or title held by any department or agency of the Federal Government in any housing or slum-clearance projects (constructed or in process of construction on the date of enactment of this act), any assets, contracts, records, libraries, research materials and other property held in connection with any such housing of slum-clearance projects or activities, any unexpended balance of funds allocated to such department or agency for the development, administration, or assistance of any housing or slum-clearance projects or activities, and any employees who have been engaged in work connected with housing or slum clearance. The Authority may continue any or all activities undertaken in connection with projects so transferred, subject to the provisions of this act.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 39, line 10, strike out "Sec. 4", beginning with the word "The", down to and including the word "act", in line 16 of same page, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The Administrator is authorized, subject to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to appoint and fix the compensation of such employees as may be necessary for the proper performance of the duties of the Authority under this act, except that without regard to the civil-service laws he may appoint and fix the compensation of attorneys, and, under regulations to be prescribed by the Civil Service Commission, of such officers and experts as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act: Provided, That employees transferred pursuant to paragraph (c) of this section or drawn from any department or agency of the Government where they have been engaged in work connected with housing or slum clearance shall not thereby acquire a permanent or civil-service status, but after 90 days such of them as the Administrator desires to retain may be included within the civil service upon certification by the Administrator to the Civil Service Commission and upon passing a noncompetitive examination given by such Commission."

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] yield to the gentleman for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman for the purpose of propounding a parliamentary inquiry provided it is not taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be taken out of the gentleman's time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield.

Mr. Chairman, much to my surprise the House Committee on Banking and Currency had the effrontery to strike out section 4 of the Senate bill which my amendment seeks to put back into the bill.

In substance the committee provided that notwithstanding the provisions of the laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States under the civil service or the Classification Act, the administrator could without limitation, except as to appropriation, employ whatever clerks he saw fit without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act.

I want to refer you to section 3 (a) of this bill. You will find in this act that we create in the Department of the Interior and under the general supervision of the Secretary thereof a body corporate of perpetual duration. In section 4 of this act we provide that the employees of that body corporate of perpetual duration shall be outside of the civil-service laws and outside of the Classification Act.

Mr. Chairman, we understand and you understand that the only purpose of this action on the part of the majority members on the Committee on Banking and Currency is to give somebody an opportunity to appoint under the spoils system. You will have the ironical situation in the Department of the Interior of a stenographer in one of the existing departments under the civil service, after having passed a competitive examination to get the position, working alongside of another stenographer sent down there through the patronage of some Member of Congress or somebody down in the Post Office Department or somewhere else and drawing any salary which the Administrator might set.

Let us be sensible and let us be fair and honest with ourselves if we cannot be fair and honest with the people who sent us down here. I hope as you gentlemen will read the Bible tonight before you go to bed that you will take up your platform upon which you were elected to this Congress and read it. The inference was carried in that platform that you believed in the perpetuation of the principles of the civil service. If you vote to set up this perpetual corporation to be used as a patronage grab bag, that is your responsibility; but I do not think you should do it without either myself or someone else over here calling attention to the fact that you are doing it.

This bill contemplates the employment of thousands of clerks, stenographers, engineers, experts, architects, and so forth.

This will constitute the biggest patronage grab that you on that side will have had since you have been in this Congress. Take it if you want to. It is your responsibility.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to restore to this bill the provision that not only requires all employees, in the performance of their duties under the act, to be subject to civil-service rules, but goes beyond any provision of which I have any knowledge of ever having been adopted by the Congress. This provision requires that all experts and officials, exclusive of attorneys, experts, and officials of the type which have always been exempted from civil-service rules, as far as I am informed, shall be selected under regulations prescribed by the Civil Service Commission.

The Committee on Banking and Currency thought it ought to expedite the organization of the Federal Housing Authority and has left that provision out of the bill in order that the Authority might not experience unnecessary delay in the initiation of its duties and activities. We hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I say to the gentleman——

Mr. STEAGALL. I did not yield for another speech, if the gentleman will permit. If the gentleman wants to ask me a question, I yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; I just want to make this observation and a request.

The gentleman from Michigan will accept any amendment to his own amendment which the gentleman approves and which will put the employees of this organization on the same basis as the other employees in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. STEAGALL. It so happens that I have all the duties I am equal to carrying right now, and more, too, and I decline to accept the responsibility suggested by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WADSWORTH) there were—ayes 85, noes 59.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAMSPECK as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT:

Page 39, line 10, after the comma following the word "authorized", strike out the words "without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States."

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that, despite the action just taken, in courtesy to our colleague, the chairman of the Committee on the Civil Service, he may be given 5 minutes to explain his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. HILL of Oklahoma. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEAGALL. As I understand the language of the amendment, it is in effect and meaning a repetition of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman cannot make an argument under the guise of stating a point of order. The gentleman would not let me make an argument. If the gentleman wishes to make a point of order, he should state it.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am undertaking to make the point of order that the effect of this amendment is the same as the effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is not a point of order. The gentleman is taking an unfair advantage under his own motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must respectfully remind the gentleman that the Chair cannot rule upon the effect of language submitted. As the Chair caught the reading of the amendment, it is certainly couched in language different from the language used in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan. Therefore the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, is it not the custom when the death of a Member occurs to conduct some memorial or pay a tribute to that Member? I should think it ought to be in order to pay tribute to the death of a great committee. I have the honor of serving on the Committee on the Civil Service, of which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] is chairman, and that committee is dead. It has been choked to death. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The substitute amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 63, noes 103.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina: Page 39, line 1, after the word "meet" and before the word "upon", insert the words "at least twice a year."

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this section has been passed, and therefore the amendment comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that the section to which the amendment is offered has already been passed. The Chair sustains the point of order. Section 4 is now under consideration.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAWFORD: Strike out all of section 4 (a) and insert:

"The Administrator is authorized, subject to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to appoint and fix the compensation of such employees as may be necessary for the proper performance of the duties of the Authority under this act, except that without regard to the civil-service laws, but subject to such regulations as the Civil Service Commission might prescribe, he may appoint and fix the compensation of attorneys and experts as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act."

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the contents of the amendment are identical with the amendments just voted on a moment ago, offered by the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair has stated, the Chair cannot pass upon the effect of the language employed. As the Chair heard the reading of the amendment, it is couched in different language from that employed in the previous amendments considered by the Committee, and, therefore, the Chair overrules the point of order.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. (a) The principal office of the Authority shall be in the District of Columbia, but it may establish branch offices or agencies in any State, and may exercise any of its powers at any place within the United States. The Authority may, by one or more of its officers or employees or by such agents or agencies as it may designate, conduct hearings or negotiations at any place.

(b) The Authority shall sue and be sued in its own name, and shall be represented in all litigated matters by the Attorney General or such attorney or attorneys as he may designate.

(c) The Authority shall have an official seal, which shall be judicially noticed.

(d) The Authority shall be granted the free use of the mails in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government.

(e) The Authority, including but not limited to its franchise, capital, reserves, surplus, loans, income, assets, and property of any kind, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority. Obligations, including interest thereon, issued by public housing agencies in connection with low-rent-housing or slum-clearance projects, and the income derived by such agencies from such projects, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States.

Mr. WILLIAMS (interrupting the reading of the section). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the section be dispensed with.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the section.

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. AMLIE: Page 41, line 17, after the word "States", insert:

"Subsec. (f). The Authority may engage in research, studies, surveys, experimentation, and experimental constructions, and may publish and disseminate information pertinent to the various aspects of housing: Provided, That not more than 2 percent of the funds expended by the Authority shall be for this purpose."

Mr. AMLIE. Mr. Chairman, what I have done in proposing this amendment is to insert a provision that was stricken from the Senate bill and to add a limiting proviso to the effect that not more than 2 percent of the funds to be expended under the provisions of this act is to be expended for experimental purposes. In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, there was a real justification for the inclusion of this item in the Senate bill, and it is extremely unfortunate that the House committee should have stricken this provision from the Senate bill. This provision was inserted in the Senate bill as a result of the experience which has been gained by Government architects in attempting to administer various Federal functions having to do with the subject of housing, particularly as a result of the building activities of the Rural Resettlement Administration.

During the past half a century there has been a tremendous advance in practically all fields of technology. Only in the field of housing has this not been true. With the exception of work in the field of housing using structural steel, the art of house construction has been at a standstill for decades. This is not due to the fact that there has not been a great deal of thought devoted to this subject by architects and inventors. As a matter of fact, the intellectual atmosphere of engineers and architects is filled with hundreds of plans for revolutionary changes in the field of construction. But unfortunately these plans remain in the realm of theory. There is no field in which they can be tried out experimentally. Individual contractors cannot afford to spend money for experimental work in this field in the manner that one of the great corporations might try out in their laboratories some idea in which they might be interested. There is an obvious reason for this.

If General Motors learn about some idea in the field of internal-combustion engines, the corporation is safe in spending money on the problem. The company has its laboratories. It will own the idea if it works. But the individual contractors cannot afford to experiment. If a small contractor discovers anything in the construction field, he cannot control it. The discovery will promptly be taken over by the building industry. Besides, the small contractor is not financially able to experiment. If the ideas that have been floating around for years in the engineering world regarding new and radically different methods for the construction of houses are to be brought down to earth and tried out, the Federal Government must provide the means for doing so.

In my opinion, it is quite likely that exhaustive research in this field will outweigh in importance the main benefits which we expect from the enactment of this measure. It is quite possible that methods of construction will be demonstrated or perfected that will make it possible to build adequate housing units at a cost that will be far less than anything that is now considered possible. At least this is the belief that is entertained by many of my friends who are engineers and architects. Since it is obvious that we shall not have the benefits of scientific experimentation and research in the field of housing unless it is financed by the Federal Government, I feel that in the exercise of sound discretion we ought to reinsert the provision from the Senate bill that has been stricken from this measure. I urge upon the committee that, with a limitation of 2 percent, the provision that was in the Senate bill ought to be retained in the House bill.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I do so for the reason that notwithstanding the worthy objectives which the gentleman probably has in mind, there was a provision in the Department of Commerce appropriation bill for the Bureau of Standards, providing an amount of $300,000 to carry on research and experimental work in housing problems. This would be but a duplication.

There is absolutely no need of our taking a part of this money for the same purpose, especially in view of the fact we are going to have to use about $1,000,000,000 over a period of 60 years in subsidies for this program and then fall far short of reaching that group of our families in the lowest-income brackets. Every dollar you take away from this fund means raising the income level of the group that can occupy the so-called low-rent housing projects. For this reason the amendment, in my judgment, should not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. AMLIE].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. (a) The Authority may make such expenditures, subject to audit under the general law, for the acquisition and maintenance of adequate administrative agencies, offices, vehicles, furnishings, equipment, supplies, books, periodicals, printing and binding, for attendance at meetings, for any necessary traveling expenses within the United States, its Territories, dependencies, or possessions, and for such other expenses as may from time to time be found necessary for the proper administration of this act. Such financial transactions of the Authority as the making of loans, annual contributions, and capital grants, and the acquisition, sale, exchange, lease, or other disposition of real and personal property, and vouchers approved by the Administrator in connection with such financial transactions, shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government; except that all such financial transactions of the Authority shall be audited by the General Accounting Office at such times and in such manner as the Comptroller General of the United States may by regulation prescribe.

(b) The provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 41, sec. 5) shall apply to all contracts of the Authority for services and to all of its purchases of supplies except when the aggregate amount involved is less than $300.

(c) The use of funds made available for the purposes of this act shall be subject to the provisions of section 2 of title 3 of the Treasury and Post Office Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1934 (47 Stat. 1489), and to make such provisions effective every contract or agreement of any kind pursuant to this act shall contain a provision identical to the one prescribed in section 3 of title 3 of such act.

(d) No annual contribution, grant, or loan, or contract for any annual contribution, grant, or loan of funds under this act shall be undertaken by the Authority except with the approval of the President.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. WHITE of Ohio: Page 41, strike out section 6A and insert:

"SEC. 6. (a) The Authority may make such expenditures, subject to audit under the general law, for the acquisition and maintenance of adequate administrative agencies, offices, vehicles, furnishings, equipment, supplies, books, periodicals, printing and binding, for attendance at meetings, for any necessary traveling expenses within the United States, its Territories, dependencies, or possessions, and for such other expenses as may from time to time be found necessary for the proper administration of this act. Such financial transactions of the Authority as the making of loans, annual contributions, and capital grants, and the acquisition, sale, exchange, lease, or other disposition of real property shall be subject to preaudit by the General Accounting Office acting under the authority and powers conferred upon it by the act of July 31, 1894 (28 Stat. L. 162) and the act of June 10, 1921 (42 Stat. L. 20) as amended."

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, section 6 (a) as it stands in the bill, as reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, provides for an audit by the General Accounting Office, with the power of disallowance of all vouchers covering expenditures for purchases of supplies, vehicles, furnishings, books, and so forth, but when it comes to the major expenses of the United States Housing Authority, that is, the making of capital grants, annual contributions and loans, and the acquisition and sale and exchange and lease of real property, the General Accounting Office merely has the power to audit the vouchers in the same way that an outside auditor audits the vouchers of a corporation. The Comptroller General would merely report to the Congress expenditures that he did not believe to be legal, but he would have no power to disallow an illegal expenditure. Where large sums of money are involved in the case of loans and grants and annual contributions, the purchase and sale of property belonging to the Authority, it seems to me that expenditures should be subjected to audit with the power of disallowance, and that to be really effective, such audit must be a preaudit.

The limitations in this bill will not mean a single thing unless we place power for somebody to check the expenditures as they are made and as we go along and make sure that they conform to the limitations imposed by Congress itself, and I ask the Committee on Banking and Currency to accept this amendment and the Committee of the Whole to accept the amendment.

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. REILLY. Does the gentleman's amendment provide for an audit of loans and grants?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. That is correct. This is included with audit of expenditures.

Mr. REILLY. That would be absolutely impossible and impracticable.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I do not think it would. They are doing more complicated things at the present moment.

Mr. FORD of California. Does the Comptroller General audit loans and grants made by the R. F. C.?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. They are not expenditures. I do not think he does.

Mr. FORD of California. That is the same principle.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. No; these are expenditures where all the money does not come back. In other words, expenditures, and not merely loans, in the ordinary sense of the word.

Mr. REILLY. But it does come back on loans.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Only a portion of the money comes back under this bill.

Mr. REILLY. All of the money comes back on loans.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. It is frozen away from the Federal Treasury, at first, and it comes back only in limited measure. The money can go out in a certain expenditure, be expended at a certain cost per room, and you can only do certain things. Anybody in the world would want a check by the responsible agency of the Government, which in this case is the Comptroller General, to make sure that what you have written into the bill will be done, and nothing else.

Mr. EBERHARTER. If the bill is enacted as written by the committee, in other words, if the Housing Authority will expend more than $5,000 per unit, that would be all right, there would be no check upon it. The only thing the Comptroller General could do would be to come in and report that too much money had been expended; whereas if the gentleman's amendment is adopted the Comptroller General could stop the Authority from spending more than the law allows.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. That is correct.

Mr. SHORT. Under the gentleman's amendment we lock the stable before the horse is stolen.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Yes, and if you do not have this sort of limitation in the bill you do not have any check on expenditures authorized under the bill; no safeguards on the average cost of $5,000 per unit or any of the other provisions of the bill, except administrative expenses as outlined a moment ago.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, under the provisions of this section or subsection, all the financial transactions are audited as the Comptroller General of the United States may by regulation prescribe, and in addition by another provision in the bill all of the loans and all of the contributions and grants are subject to the approval of the President of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WHITE of Ohio) there were—ayes 43, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GIFFORD: Strike out, beginning on page 43, line 1, all of subsection (d).

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I will not take the 5 minutes. I think everyone realizes how ridiculous it would be to impose upon the President of the United States, with the heavy duties he has to perform, that he shall inspect and approve all these items. I realize too fully that they will simply be referred to somebody else. Already we hear rumors which seem well founded; that in my State of Massachusetts all matters are referred to a certain room in the White House, so that certain people close to the President may take full responsibility and credit for anything affecting Massachusetts being released from that building. Not only are the present duties altogether too onerous, but this offers a splendid field for favoritism by those who are trying to build themselves up for high office by granting or withholding favors.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. On the many P. W. A. projects dealing with housing, is it not true that the President has had this same authority of check?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes; and ugly rumors persist about those people on whom he depends and on whose advice he acts, as to whether largesses be granted or withheld.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Furthermore, is it not true that under these projects the cost of what are supposed to be low-cost housing projects has run as high as $20,000 per dwelling unit, in face of that kind of a check? So it is not any kind of a check at all.

Mr. GIFFORD. As far as the gentleman's remarks go, there are many smelly things happening lately without any shame exhibited on the faces of those who are responsible. We cannot investigate because our Rules Committee will not let us investigate. So book sales to corporations roll merrily on and anything goes with this administration, no matter how unsavory. I think by voting this amendment you would relieve your President of a great burden and also relieve some of us from the punishment we might receive in some of our congressional districts by withholding what might be our due and share of funds allocated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GIFFORD) there were—ayes 27, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words of section 6.

Mr. Chairman, the last two words which I have moved to strike out as a pro-forma amendment are "the President." On three separate occasions the President of the United States, who is the titular leader of the Democratic Party, has sent messages to this Congress, urging the Democratic majority in two instances to not put agencies created by it outside of the civil service, and in the other instance urging the Congress to give him authority not only to bring in those who were outside the civil service, but to reorganize the civil service itself. Yet this afternoon we have the spectacle of the chairman of a great committee on our own side of the House, who claims to be a follower of that distinguished President whom we all love and admire, shutting off the chairman of the House Civil Service Committee and permitting the Republicans in this body to make political capital out of the fact that his committee brought in a bill here exempting all these employees from civil service. [Applause.] He denies to the chairman of the Civil Service Committee of this House the right to take the floor and present to our membership on this side of the aisle statements which the President has sent here and requests he has made of the Democratic majority, and the right to have considered properly a substitute amendment for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan, which would have left to the President of the United States the right to say whether employees under this agency should be under the civil service or not.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. Unfortunately, the RECORD will not show it, but it is a statement of fact that not over 10 Democrats voted for the amendment which the gentleman from Georgia offered this afternoon.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am sorry if that may be true.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not yield further at this time, Mr. Chairman.

I have no quarrel with any Member of this House who does not agree with me about civil service, but I do quarrel with any man who takes what I consider to be unfair advantage of a member of his own party, the chairman of a committee, representing the subject matter under consideration, and puts his own party in the hole, and denies to his own President the right to have considered properly on this floor the requests he has made regarding civil service. [Applause.] I resent that.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment and I do not propose to strike out the President on the question of civil-service requirements. I wish to make some comments, however, about the tactics of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency in cutting off debate on the civil-service section and his statement. I have the highest regard for him. If I did not I would denounce him vigorously for his tactics here this afternoon. I think he was carried away by his enthusiasm for the patronage he saw just around the corner. He got up and told the Members of the House an entirely different version of the meaning of the text of the bill. Striking out the civil-service requirements opens the bill wide for a paradise of spoilsmen and for a huge patronage grab of offices without the merit system at all.

He told you an entirely different story and then cut off debate. You Members on that side followed him, you did exactly what Members on our side would have done, followed your chairman, but you followed him up a blind alley and he gave you misinformation. You followed him up a blind alley against your own President who has come out in the public press demanding that the civil-service system be maintained in these bills. Here you are giving lip service to the President but actually you are knifing him in the back. Is there a conspiracy here of silence, or is there a conspiracy between the Democratic majority in the House to do one thing and have the President say the other? Is the President only shadow boxing with the merit system and giving lip service to it?

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. No; I cannot yield in these few minutes.

As a matter of fact you are absolutely denying your own party platform which is most explicit about the merit system and which I have put into the RECORD before and therefore will not read now. But it is here in black and white, and I ask unanimous consent to insert it again in the RECORD so that you can once again have an opportunity to read your own party platform, but I know perfectly well you will not live up to it anyhow.

THE MERIT SYSTEM IN GOVERNMENT

For the protection of Government itself and promotion of its efficiency we pledge the immediate extension of the merit system through the classified civil service which was first established and fostered under Democratic auspices to all nonpolicy-making positions in the Federal service. We shall subject to the civil-service law all continuing positions which, because of the emergency, have been exempt from its operations—Democratic platform of 1936.

There is no excuse whatever and there is no reason for your flaunting your President and party platform. You are simply slipping this thing through hoping to get away with it without anybody saying a word about its being contrary to the Democratic platform or about its being a betrayal of the expressed wish of the President. It will not be surprising if you lose some votes on our side for this bill. I propose to vote for it anyhow. I am committed to it, but I shall not blame any Republican for voting against this bill as long as you use tactics of that kind, cutting off debate and preventing consideration of an amendment which would restore the merit system.

Either you stand with your President and by your party platform or you are against your President and your platform. Evidently you are against them. I hope you are satisfied to make this a spoilsman's bill and defeat the nonpartisan purposes of the bill providing for slum clearance and low-cost housing. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say to the gentleman from New York that if he and the Members of the House will support the bill that the Reorganization Committee reported today, regardless of what is carried in the pending bill the President will have the power to put this agency under Civil Service.

Mr. FISH. I do not know anything about that. I know that this bill without the merit system will become a political racket and a political football to be kicked around by Democratic spoilsmen and job hunters. [Applause.]

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to enter into this controversy between the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency and the chairman of the Committee on the Civil Service, but I happen to be one of those Members on this side of the aisle who thinks that the civil service is no longer a merit system. [Applause.] I resent the statement coming from our brothers on the other side of the aisle that in entertaining that view and expressing it I am knifing the President in the back. No one can say, surely, that there has been any stealth or any sneaking tactics by me in voicing my opposition to civil service, and I reserve the right at all times, as I hope every Democrat in this House reserves the right, to differ with the President on any proposition when I think that my proposition is as sound as his.

I hope that the Democrats in this House will continue to insist that agencies shall be no longer put under civil service until the civil-service provisions are rewritten, until the Civil Service Commission is reorganized, until the civil service is made to be a merit system as it was intended to be, instead of a system that in my judgment throws the cloak of protection around inefficiency.

So that, while my Republican friends have great fun calling it the spoils system, I am one of those who believes that, call it what you will, if you put a man on his own merit, and you make him hold his job based upon what he does and not let him hold the job simply because he has been given a lifetime position under the protection of the civil service, you will have better departments in the whole Government. [Applause.]

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I am not taking sides as between these two gentlemen, because both are my good friends, but, as far as the present provisions of the bill are concerned, I am strong for them.

The charge has been made by the other side that this is a question of spoils. It is not a question of spoils. The Republicans over on that side are getting as much "spoils" out of these agencies as we do, and they have but 89 Members on the floor of the House.

Mr. Chairman, we went along for quite awhile recognizing this merit system in which actually there was not any merit. We are still for civil service in the permanent and main departments. We found in one department of the Government that through inefficiency 45 Republicans whose names nobody could pronounce were let out, but every one of them were reemployed in the social security division of the Government because they had a civil-service status.

None of you Democratic Members on the floor of the House have received any recognition either because of your own influence or because of the influence of your constituents in that department. It is the most inefficient, the worst hated, and detested of any governmental department, and we cannot understand why the President does not realize these facts. We passed another law with reference to the Railroad Retirement Board, which was also placed under the civil service. What happened? They had an examination and a lot of college boys passed the examination. Then they had to hire railroad employees who had previously been working for the Board to stay there 6 months in order to teach these new college boys how to run the department. The deficiency appropriation bill carried an item of $300,000 for teaching these civil-service employees how to run that department.

Mr. Chairman, this department should not be under the civil service at any time. We want men who are experienced in this particular line of business. We do not want a criminal lawyer to be a lawyer in the department. We want an architect who has had some experience. We want men who know the ways of the business world, men who can save money for the Government, instead of going out and getting a boy who has just graduated from school and can pass an examination better than the old timers. There are mighty few lawyers in this House today who could pass the bar examination in Washington, D. C., if they were to have a test. Yet we have had experience. We know the law and business methods but have forgotten definitions.

Mr. Chairman, this department should not require very many people. Of course, there will be some stenographers and there will be some clerks, but for the positions of experts and for the legal division there should be only those appointed who have had experience in the game. There is as much difference between the building game and other departments as there is between a criminal lawyer and a lawyer who has never tried a criminal case.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I do not know whether the gentleman has ever taken a civil-service examination, but if he will get some of the examination papers and see the silly questions they include in the examination for custodians and janitors, he will realize what a ridiculous thing it is.

Mr. FULLER. Why, may I say to the gentleman, we now have these hifalutin babies who have included psychological questions in the examination given our rural-route men and in the examination given our postmasters. The questions are filled up with a lot of psychological brain-trust ideas and the ordinary people of our community cannot pass the examination, and nine times out of ten there is a Republican or two on top of the eligible list, the papers having been graded by Republican civil-service employees of the Hoover regime. [Applause.]

Oh, you gentlemen over there on the Republican side make much ado about civil service. You want some more jobs. But let me tell you, you have all we are going to give you. We have made up our mind you are not going to have any more because you have taken all the spoils. [Applause.]

You have received more political positions in the last few years than Democrats received under Republican administrations in the last 75 years. In the Alcoholic Unit of the Treasury Department there is not a Democrat holding a key position. [Applause.]

This so-called merit system is owned, controlled, and dominated by Republicans—no wonder you holler for the merit system. They play the game and give us no chance in the world and cut our throats every time they get an opportunity. [Applause.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I realize the obligation that the chairman of the Democratic patronage committee has so far as the members of the majority and the patronage he can get are concerned; so I do not blame him as an individual; neither do I blame the gentleman from Oklahoma as an individual for reciting what they believe should be the views of the Democratic Party.

The provision by which we eliminate the Civil Service and Classification Acts has to do not only with the attorneys and experts, but it specifically says "employees." I stated earlier this afternoon it was contemplated putting hundreds and possibly thousands of employees to work. If you study this bill carefully you can see I have not overestimated it, because we expect these agencies to be set up in every large community in the United States. After all, the point I want to make is that I know now how to answer a certain gentleman of Democratic extraction in one of my little towns up north of Port Huron. I speak up there occasionally and I say to the audience, "Events in Washington convince me that the Democratic Party is not in favor of civil service."

This individual, an ardent Democrat and a very much respected and honored citizen of the community, pulls out of his pocket a little brown covered book, which it was my pleasure to give him. In that book is contained the platforms adopted by the two conventions of 1936. He takes particular delight in heckling me and reading from the Democratic platform these words, and he sits me right back on my haunches, because what he reads he believes and what the people of the United States read and heard last November from you gentlemen they believed.

The Democratic platform provided in part as follows.

> The merit system in government.
> For the protection of government itself and promotion of its efficiency, we pledge the immediate extension of the merit system through the classified civil service—which was first established and fostered under Democratic auspices—to all nonpolicy making positions in the Federal service. We shall subject to the civil service laws all continuing positions which because of the emergency have been exempt from its operation.

Apparently a majority of the good, law-abiding, God-fearing, Bible-reading citizens of the United States believed you when you said you believed in the civil service, and this is what prompted me to say that when you go home tonight, put that little book alongside your Bible and reconcile its words with the words of Christ himself, when he admonished you not to lie, especially to your neighbor.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, this debate brings back to me vividly an afternoon, I think it was 4 years ago, when about this time of day I took the floor as a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency in behalf of the amendment proposed by Senator NORRIS, of Nebraska, which had passed the Senate by a margin of one vote. This amendment was designed to keep politics and partisanship out of one of the trio of housing bills in the preparation of which I had an active share. The committee voted to strike from the pending bill a provision keeping politics out of the home loan bank system. An interesting debate took place on the floor, and gentlemen just as sincere in their hostility to civil-service reform as some who have spoken today then addressed the House. The Speaker of the House at that time was against the merit system. The Democratic House voted overwhelmingly against it.

The House paid no attention to the fact that the President of the United States had addressed a letter to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency asking that the Norris amendment be placed in the bill. The President had committed himself in writing, asking the very committee which is now engaged on this subject to support the Norris amendment and so keep politics out of the housing bill.

What had preceded and what followed? There had been appointed, as chairman of the board in question, a man we knew well, a fellow Member whom we respected and admired, and I say no word in derogation of him. But he thought, just as the speakers on the Democratic side this afternoon have thought, that it was more important to pay attention to a man's politics than to his capacity. What resulted from that system? The newspapermen declared that the board had become the spoilsmen's paradise. It was so crowded with inefficient and incapable men that the President himself had to demote the chairman and replace him with a man who paid some attention to the desirability of efficiency in the public service.

With that behind you, go ahead, if you please, and once more thwart your President; once more deny your platform. But you will one day have occasion to remember that the speeches you have made this afternoon have been of great value to us on our side. I pray that my chairman, in consideration of the welfare of the Democratic Party, may at once ask that all debate be closed, in order that no more ammunition may be given to those of us who believe in the gospel of the President of the United States. So I ask that the chairman do this, else his colleagues will have occasion some day to remember that "whom the gods would destroy they first make mad."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

> SEC. 7. In January of each year the Authority shall make an annual report to Congress of its operations and expenses, including loans, contributions, and grants made or contracted for, low-rent-housing and slum-clearance projects undertaken, and the assets and liabilities of the Authority. Such report shall include operating statements of all projects under the jurisdiction of or receiving the assistance of the Authority, including summaries of the incomes of occupants, sizes of families, rentals, and other related information.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from Massachusetts offers a motion which the clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I am going to leave out any political references whatsoever. We are not always consistent on our side. I know we have many what may seem faults to you. I am just going to make a plea for the workers who are now under the civil service, the workers who have given their lives to the service of their Government, the workers who went into the Government service believing that they were taking up a life work. I assure you, Mr. Chairman, many of those workers are living in dread today of dismissals. Mr. Chairman, I am making a plea for the workers who were under civil service, but who have lost their positions in the Federal employ. I am making a plea that they may be taken back under civil service. I am also making a plea for the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. Chairman, I think no one upon the floor, unless it be the very great chairman of our Committee on the Civil Service, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], has defended the work by the civil service. He has fought day and night for the merit system, and for the workers in the Government service. He deserves their undying gratitude, because he has worked under a tremendous handicap I know, because I have seen it. There is not a Government worker in the United States who ought not to thank him.

Mr. Chairman, in the last year the Civil Service Commission has been given a tremendous task to perform. With a very small amount of money they have done more than I had supposed was possible. They are courteous, and they do the best they can under the circumstances. Imagine, Mr. Chairman, how difficult it is for the Commission to operate when another governmental department tries to force the Civil Service Commission to qualify people unfit for positions. This is what the Civil Service has had to face day after day and day after day, from more than one governmental agency.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'MALLEY. It seems to me the action we have taken today and have taken at other times in the past would do a lot to relieve the Civil Service Commission of their duties.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I think, if the gentleman will allow me to say so, that if we would give the Civil Service Commission an adequate amount of money and give it a chance to operate with that money, we would see a wonderfully fine service. I am making a plea for the men and women under civil service in your own districts, and there are hundreds of such employees all over the country. I know what they think, because they write to me.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield further?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am sorry; I have only 5 minutes.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I know the lady is a sincere friend of civil-service employees and of the Civil Service Commission, and she ought to do something to stop the arrogance of that Commission that even refuses Members of Congress the information they ask for.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I have not found the Civil Service Commission arrogant. I have found them very willing to give any information they can; but does the gentleman realize the small personnel they have and the great amount of work it has to perform in these unusual times? For instance, it has taken the Commission 1 year to hold examinations for informational service employees of the Social Security. It took them 1 year to hold the examination and to rate those men because their work was so heavy and such an enormous number of people took these examinations. The Civil Service Commission employees are working overtime day after day.

I wonder how the Members of Congress would like it if they were put out or furloughed without pay, as has happened in the past years to the civil-service employees.

Again, Mr. Chairman, in closing, I make my plea for the workers now in the Government under the civil service. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

The motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. The Authority may from time to time make, amend, and rescind such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

LOANS FOR LOW-RENT HOUSING AND SLUM-CLEARANCE PROJECTS

SEC. 9. The Authority may make loans to public housing agencies to assist the development, acquisition, or administration of low-rent housing or slum-clearance projects by such agencies. Where capital grants are made pursuant to section 11 the total amount of such loans outstanding on any one project and in which the Authority participates shall not exceed the development or acquisition cost of such project less all such capital grants, but in no event shall said loans exceed 85 percent of such cost. In the case of annual contributions in assistance of low rentals as provided in section 10 the total of such loans outstanding on any one project and in which the Authority participates shall not exceed 85 percent of the development or acquisition cost of such project. Such loans shall be secured by a first and a paramount lien against such projects and the revenues derived therefrom, shall bear interest at such rate not less than the going Federal rate at the time the loan is made, plus one-half of 1 percent, and shall be repaid within such period not exceeding 60 years, as may be deemed advisable by the Authority.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina: On page 44, line 7, after the period, insert:

"The State or political subdivision in which the project receiving an annual contribution or grant is located shall contribute to the acquisition cost and development of such project not less than 15 percent of such cost in the form of land or cash or both."

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is intended to clarify the limitation with respect to the loan as set out in section 9.

The evidence before our committee was to the effect that the cost of upkeep of slums is exorbitant. We had a number of instances related to us, one particularly in a Cleveland slum area, showing that the cost of the health service, police service, and other necessary community services to these slum areas is nearly always two, three, or four times the amount of taxes which the community receives. I therefore feel that every local community which is able to participate in this program should be willing, as a matter of fairness and sound public policy, to contribute a reasonable amount toward the cost of acquisition and development. Surely they should be made to furnish the site cleared and ready for building.

Under the language of section 9, which provides that in no event shall loans exceed 85 percent of such costs, there is an ambiguity. Let me explain. If a local housing agency comes to Washington and applies to the United States housing authority for financial assistance and it is shown and demonstrated that the particular community to be served is better suited to receive a capital grant than to proceed along the annual contribution plan, they can receive a 25 percent cash capital grant. In addition to this, the President may allot from relief funds an additional 15 percent to be used for labor. It is quite apparent to anyone who reads the section carefully that any community or any local housing agency that receives a 25 percent grant no longer need more than a 75 percent loan. Therefore, the 85 percent maximum is inoperative unless the grant was less than 15 percent. To think of being that low is absurd.

In addition, this provision is the heart and the main safeguard of this bill. If you require communities to come in and put up either in cash or in land or both 15 percent of the capital cost you thereby insure 100 percent local cooperation in the way of supervision, maintenance, and other proper community services. Under the provision in the bill without this amendment if a local housing agency proceeds to the capital grant route and gets a 25 percent grant, then they can come in and borrow 100 percent of the balance of the cost up to 75 percent. The only way that the provision, as it is now written, would be effective as I just stated, would be for a community to apply and receive less than 15 percent. For instance, if they received only a 10 percent grant they would have to put up 5 percent, but if they received a 15 percent grant, they could receive the entire balance in the way of a loan.

This is absolutely essential if your low-cost housing and slum-clearance program is to be a success. Nothing else can insure it.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, and I shall try to take less than 5 minutes.

From experience with a municipal housing project, may I say, therefore—not talking from a blueprint but talking from experience—I am absolutely opposed to making municipalities put up one cent in contribution, thus sharing the cost of a local housing project. Therefore I am against this amendment. Municipalities do not have to put up money to show good faith. If one of them sets up its own housing authority and gets facts and figures to convince the national housing group that a housing project should be built in that municipality, they are showing good faith there without having to put up more funds to demonstrate good faith. Realize this: The municipalities of this country have been hard hit financially. They have had to contribute a lot of money in supplementary relief on top of what the United States Government has given them. Give the municipalities a chance to have local housing projects without putting up a cent, much less what the gentleman says. I am against the amendment and hope it is defeated.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Again my distinguished friend on the committee [Mr. HANCOCK] has said that we have reached the heart of this bill. This is its second heart. To enact this amendment would be again to destroy the bill. We have sat on that committee and, as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. PHILLIPS] has said, met with many suggestions that there should be no contribution made, but after considering the matter carefully the committee finally wrote into this bill a contribution of 15 percent. The mayor of the city of New York, representing the mayors of all of the cities of the United States, said that if they were to be required to make a contribution, he would not be representing the cities, because there again he could make appeal to private capital; but this is not a private housing program; this is a public housing program; and if you write this amendment into the bill, you can again tear up the bill.

The requirement in the present bill is a burden greater than the cities can carry, and the amendment proposed by Mr. HANCOCK would clearly make it absolutely impossible for any city to carry out a slum-clearance program. There is nowhere in the minutes taken before our committee a single statement that points to the possibility of the ability of any city to meet the requirements of this amendment; and I urge the membership of this House to vote it down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina) there were—ayes 51, noes 82.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOORHIS: Page 44, lines 1 and 2, after the words "such capital grants", strike out "but in no event shall such loans exceed 85 percent of such cost", and on page 44, line 6, after the word "exceed", strike out "85 percent of."

Mr. VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, first, may I say that I believe that we are doing in the House this afternoon a truly great thing. I want to thank the committee which reported this bill, and say that, although all of us know it is not perfect and that a lot of experience will be required in this great undertaking, yet, after all, America is today embarking on the great task of doing away with slums. A long struggle must ensue, as we all know; the slums will not be easily done away with. My amendment is one in which I think those who sincerely desire low-rent housing can all agree. Certainly those who voted against the amendment just voted down, of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK], should agree with this amendment. It restores the provision in the Senate bill which permits loans by the housing authority up to 100 percent of the acquisition or development cost of the project. The amendment has to do only with loans. It has nothing to do with grants or subsidies or annual contributions. I am in favor of local contributions. I believe they should be made. I have no quarrel with the requirement that local communities be required to furnish annual grants or subsidies equal to 25 percent of the annual subsidies furnished to the local public-housing agencies by the United States Housing Authority. But I do not believe you can expect a locality to make a 15 percent capital grant, 15 percent of the original cost of construction of the project. I know that is not what the bill says; but, in view of the fact that the loan from the United States Housing Authority is limited to 85 percent, and that a first lien must be given on the project in order to secure that loan, I do not believe that it would be possible for the State, county, or municipality to be able to borrow money on a second lien on such property.

Therefore, the only practical possibility would be a capital grant from the locality. I do not believe that very many localities can contribute 15 percent of the construction cost of projects. Certainly the poorer cities cannot do it, the very cities which have been in the minds of many Members this afternoon, the cities about which they have been wondering whether they would get any good out of this bill. They are the ones that will be affected if you limit these loans to 85 percent and fail to adopt this amendment. Security for these loans is ample. The very first charge against annual subsidies is to be payment of amortization cost on these loans. They are secured further by having a first lien on the value of the property. It seems to me, therefore, that while we stand to the principle of requiring local contributions on the annual basis, we should not require, as in effect the provision of 85-percent limitation seems to do, a 15-percent capital grant of the original cost of the project by the localities.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. Does the gentleman think we have got a lien? We pay all the costs of condemnation, all the expenses of acquiring, tearing down one set of buildings and that sort of thing before we even start on the new project.

Mr. VOORHIS. I do not understand the bill that way. I understand that this loan is to be limited to the development or acquisition costs of the project. These loans are, after all, guaranteed by the Government itself, as many Members have pointed out, since the annual subsidies granted by the Authority are to be used to repay the loans.

Mr. GIFFORD. Acquisition means condemnation and it means the demolition of the old buildings and all those things, which will amount to perhaps 125 or 140 percent. That is much more than 100 percent. The gentleman would like for us to put it all up. Is that right?

Mr. VOORHIS. I am anxious to have this housing plan go. I am anxious to have it do good. I am anxious for it to be liberal enough so that the cities who need help can get it for their people. I think all America has an interest in getting our people out of slums—especially the children. And I think our bill here should be framed not so as to present stumbling blocks to the work, but so as to insure its going forward promptly.

Mr. GIFFORD. It does not matter about the Treasury?

Mr. VOORHIS. Of course, it does; but, as I have pointed out, the loans are perfectly well secured. My amendment does not affect grants or subsidies. It merely restores the loan provisions in the Senate bill. There are many people who have advocated it, among them some of our ablest authorities on housing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This is the very proposition about which I spoke a while ago. We have a proposition here now as to whether or not the Authority established by the United States Government shall make the entire loan or whether we shall have some responsibility placed on the local authorities. There are many people, a number of them on the committee and a great many people who appeared before our committee, who were in favor of making this contribution by the local authorities more than 15 percent. It is just a question now of whether we are going to have the Government put up 100 percent or whether we are going to require the municipalities to make at least an initial contribution of 15 percent. By doing so we will place the responsibility on the local authorities. To say that the great cities of this country cannot contribute 15 percent is to my mind ridiculous. I have more faith and confidence in the credit and ability of the cities of this Nation than to say they cannot contribute 15 percent. If they are not willing to contribute that much to do away with their slum areas and thereby save millions of dollars in court costs, in criminal and delinquent cases and in crime and in health, then they are not entitled to have the Government come in and pay the entire amount. By making this contribution it will be a saving to them from a financial and economic standpoint.

By all means, I ask that this amendment be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DEMUTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEMUTH: Page 44, line 13, after the period, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 10. (a) The United States Housing Authority shall make loans to construct individual detached dwellings—the loan to be secured by a mortgage against said lot and dwelling and other appurtenance thereto.

"(b) The interest on said mortgage shall be 3 percent per annum and also shall be amortized annually by an amount equal to 1 percent of the original mortgage.

"(c) The United States Housing Authority may loan 80 percent of the appraised value of the real property.

"(d) The United States Housing Authority may advance, if necessary, 80 percent of the acquisition cost of a lot; 70 percent of the value of the building may be paid promptly or semimonthly estimates of labor performed and material erected.

"(e) The United States Housing Authority shall make a character loan up to $300 to enable the applicant to purchase a lot to initiate this program. This loan shall be paid on the basis of $5 monthly plus 4 percent interest.

"(f) No person shall be eligible who is not a citizen of the United States.

"(g) The value of a lot shall not exceed $1,100 nor $35 per foot, including paving, and the value of no dwelling constructed under the terms of this act shall exceed $5,000.

"(h) The annual income of the applicant shall be at least four times the annual charge. By annual charge is meant a sum of all annual interest, fire insurance, and taxes on the lot."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment—that it is not germane to the bill or any section in the bill. This is a public housing bill, and the amendment proposes to loan money to a private individual to build a home.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DEMUTH. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I do.

Mr. Chairman, I offered this amendment to make a better rounded housing program. This amendment will develop more contented and better citizenry by making home ownership possible for many of those now ill-housed. It will provide more work and more income for labor per dollar expended than is provided under the main part of this bill. It will benefit a much larger number of those now ill-housed.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to be heard on the point of order, not on the merits of the amendment, but on the point of order, as to whether or not the amendment is germane to the bill?

Mr. DEMUTH. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the point of order, in that this is a public housing bill and my amendment is aimed only to help the public secure better housing facilities, I contend that my amendment is germane to the purpose and intent of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. COOPER). The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment to the pending bill to which the gentleman from Missouri makes a point of order. The pending bill provides financial assistance to States and political subdivisions thereof. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania seeks considerably to change the purpose and scope of the bill in that it would make loans directly to individuals and provides for character loans and various other matters which, in the opinion of the Chair, are not germane to the bill.

The point of order is sustained.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague from Pennsylvania may extend his remarks on the amendment he offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill may be dispensed with.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with, that amendments may be offered to any part of the bill considered as read.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, that motion is not in order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that that could be done only by unanimous consent and sustains the point of order.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

ANNUAL CONTRIBUTIONS IN ASSISTANCE OF LOW RENTALS

SEC. 10. (a) The Authority may make annual contributions to public housing agencies to assist in achieving and maintaining the low-rent character of their housing projects. The annual contributions for any such project shall be fixed in uniform amounts, and shall be paid in such amounts over a fixed period of years. No part of such annual contributions by the Authority shall be made available for any project unless and until the State, city, county, or other political subdivision in which such project is situated shall contribute at least 25 percent of the annual contributions herein provided in the form of cash or tax remissions, general or special, or tax exemptions. The Authority shall embody the provisions for such annual contributions in a contract guaranteeing their payment over such fixed period: Provided, That no annual contributions shall be made, and the Authority shall enter into no contract guaranteeing any annual contribution in connection with the development of any low-rent housing project involving the construction of new dwellings, unless arrangements satisfactory to the Authority are made for the elimination by demolition, condemnation, and effective closing, or the compulsory repair or improvement of unsafe and insanitary dwellings situated in the locality or metropolitan area, substantially equal in number to the number of newly constructed dwellings provided by the project.

(b) Annual contributions shall be strictly limited to the amounts and periods necessary, in the determination of the Authority, to assure the low-rent character of the housing projects involved. Toward this end the Authority may prescribe regulations fixing the maximum contributions available under different circumstances, giving consideration to cost, location, size, rent-paying ability of prospective tenants, or other factors bearing upon the amounts and periods of assistance needed to achieve and maintain low rentals. Such regulations may provide for rates of contribution based upon development, acquisition, or administration cost, number of dwelling units, number of persons housed, or other appropriate factors: Provided, That the fixed contribution payable annually under any contract shall in no case exceed a sum equal to the annual yield at the going Federal rate of interest (at the time such contract is made) plus 1 percent upon the development or acquisition cost of the low-rent housing project involved: And provided further, That all such annual contributions shall be used first to apply toward any payment of interest or principal on any loan due to the Authority from the public housing agency.

(c) In case any contract for annual contributions is made for a period exceeding 20 years, the Authority shall reserve the right to reexamine the status of the low-rent housing project involved at the end of 10 years and every 5 years thereafter; and, at the time of any such reexamination, the Authority may make such modification (subject to all the provisions of this section) in the fixed and uniform amounts of subsequent annual contributions payable under such contract as is warranted by changed conditions and as is consistent with maintaining the low-rent character of the housing project involved. In no case shall any contract for annual contributions be made for a period exceeding 60 years.

(d) All payments of annual contributions pursuant to this section shall be made out of any funds available to the Authority when such payments are due, except that its capital and its funds obtained through the issuance of obligations pursuant to section 20 (including repayments or other realizations of the principal of loans made out of such capital and funds) shall not be available for the payment of such annual contributions.

(e) The Authority is authorized, on or after the date of the enactment of this act, to enter into contracts which provide for annual contributions aggregating not more than $5,000,000 per annum, on or after July 1, 1938, to enter into additional such contracts which provide for annual contributions aggregating not more than $7,500,000 per annum, and on or after July 1, 1939, to enter into additional such contracts which provide for annual contributions aggregating not more than $7,500,000 per annum.

Without further authorization from Congress, no new contracts for annual contributions beyond those herein authorized shall be entered into by the Authority. The faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment of all annual contributions contracted for pursuant to this section, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated in each fiscal year, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amounts necessary to provide for such payments.

Mr. SPENCE (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of section 10 be dispensed with.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk concluded reading the section.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: Page 45, line 15, before the period, insert a comma and the following: "except that such elimination may in the discretion of the Authority be deferred in any locality or metropolitan area where the shortage of decent, safe, or sanitary housing available to low-income families is so acute as to force dangerous overcrowding of such families."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, the bill provides that for every new unit erected an existing unit shall be destroyed. This is a committee amendment and merely provides that the elimination may, in the discretion of the Authority, be deferred in any locality where there is such an acute shortage of decent, safe, and sanitary housing as to force dangerous overcrowding.

The bill as originally drafted would result in some instances in puting into the new unit as many people as were in the old unit. The great evils of the slums come from overcrowding. The sordid and degraded conditions are due to the fact that great numbers of people in these congested areas have to live together in one room. The same conditions may recur in the new units; they may become as crowded and the conditions as insanitary as those in the slums.

We offer this amendment in the belief that it will remedy that condition and make more effective the provisions of the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman should say this is a committee amendment which we hope will be adopted.

Mr. SPENCE. Yes; I did say that. This is a committee amendment.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. This will relieve a situation where there is overcrowding now but where there are no buildings to be torn down. Is that correct?

Mr. SPENCE. Yes; where the conditions would still remain if people were merely to be transferred from an old building to a new building.

Mr. DONDERO. I have a tent city in my district but no building to be torn down if a new building is built. This amendment is designed to reach that situation.

Mr. SPENCE. It will reach that situation; yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

It was our purpose as I understood it to make that applicable to slum clearance. I called the Committee's attention to the fact that this proviso has to do only with low-rent housing and that what the gentleman from Kentucky has said applies to this particular section. This is primarily a slum-clearance bill. The reason for clearing the slums is to get rid of these areas which are insanitary, which breed disease, which are unsafe, and because of the fact that buildings collapse and cause loss of life. Any slum-clearance bill must, of necessity, carry with it the thought that there shall be a like number of buildings demolished for those which are erected as new projects.

I am willing to leave some of this to the discretion of the Authority, because overcrowded conditions sometimes cause slum conditions. It is with that understanding that we go along with the committee amendment. I know that no great harm can come from the adoption of it because changes will be recommended to us before the first of the year which will clarify the situation.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has been limited in so many respects that it is very questionable whether it will be useful at all. However, this is one of the amendments that restores some sanity to the bill, and I hope it will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SPENCE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina: On page 45, after the word "area", in line 13 and before the comma, insert the following words: "within a period of 2 years after the development of the low-rent housing project."

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is intended to require that within a period of 2 years after the completion of a low-rent housing project a substantial number of unsafe, insanitary dwellings of slums shall be demolished. I think it is quite apparent to all of us from the discussion here today and from the debate in the other body, as well as from utterances from the White House and statements made by the original author of this bill, Senator WAGNER, that its primary and chief objective is to get rid of these deplorable and inhuman slum areas wherever they exist. I admit that there must be some latitude and flexibility in carrying out this demolition program in order not to suddenly increase the shortage of homes. My amendment takes care of this.

If this amendment is adopted, we will have in this bill not only a low-rent housing but a slum clearance. It will be a unified program as a part of it. Under the language on page 45, if you will read it carefully, there is no mandatory provision providing for the demolition and elimination of the slum areas.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STEAGALL. Does the gentleman insist on the accuracy of that statement? Does not the language of the bill require of the local agency a satisfactory arrangement for the demolition or repair of slums existing at the time the project is undertaken?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I insist on the accuracy of my statement and I also say that the statement of the chairman is absolutely correct; but even with that the only thing that is required is that the local housing agency shall make satisfactory arrangements—nothing mandatory and nobody could question "what was satisfactory to the Authority."

Mr. STEAGALL. And under the amendment they would be permitted to defer that act.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Under the present language of the bill nobody can question whether the arrangement providing for demolition will be in 1 year, 2 years, 10 years, or 50 years. You will not question that statement, I know.

Mr. STEAGALL. But it does require it.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. It looks toward the requirement of demolition at some future date.

Mr. Chairman, under the language appearing on that page, the entire amount of $500,000,000 could be loaned before a single slum in America is cleared and the main purpose of this bill would be absolutely destroyed, its social objectives defeated, and we would still have in the congested areas of this country these crime and disease-breeding slums for which this Government will, before the program is finished, if every citizen of low income is treated equally, have spent billions of dollars. Remember again under this bill the loans will be $500,000,000; in addition the United States Government is going to subsidize every family that qualifies for a low-rent house. It means under this bill each family over 60 years gets $10,500, or $175 per family per year. Think of this, and then have no requirement that slums be eradicated and the social menace removed.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Why does the gentleman fix 2 years? How did he come to the conclusion that 2 years will do the job?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I think that within 2 years the congestion in housing in the metropolitan area or locality might be solved. I certainly hope it would be partially relieved. My amendment does not provide for demolition until 2 years after the low-rent housing project has been developed, which means physical completion.

[Here the gavel fell]

Mr. REILLY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. Chairman, the committee was informed that there are some slum areas where you would have to erect three times the home units in order to close a dwelling in said slums. There will be two kinds of slum projects. One project will be built in the slum area and, of course, all of these dwellings will be demolished. Other projects will be built in new areas, and in some cases you would have to construct three times as many buildings to permit you to destroy a slum building in the old slum area. The evil of the slum situation today lies in the overcrowded condition of slum dwellings; that is, four or five families living in each house.

I submit that should the gentleman from North Carolina be one of the men designated to execute the provisions of this bill, he would destroy slums just as soon as it was practically possible to do so, and no sooner. Instead of making it obligatory and imperative on the Authority to destroy slums, as provided by the amendment, the pending bill makes it permissive. The Authority will demolish or close up slum residences when the housing situation in the community permits.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK] be rejected.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina: Page 46, line 14, strike out "twenty" and insert in lieu thereof "ten."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 45, line 12, after the word "unsafe" strike out the word "and" and insert the word "or."

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, there is no objection to that correcting amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 45, line 8, after the word "housing", insert "or slum clearance."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that throughout section 10 wherever the words "low-cost housing projects" appear the words "or slum clearance" may be inserted between the words "housing" and "projects."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

CAPITAL GRANTS IN ASSISTANCE OF LOW RENTALS

SEC. 11. (a) As an alternative method of assistance to that provided in section 10, when any public housing agency so requests and demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Authority that such alternative method is better suited to the purpose of achieving and maintaining low rentals and to the other purposes of this act, capital grants may be made to such agency for such purposes. The capital grants thus made for any low-rent housing project shall be paid in connection with its development or acquisition, and shall be strictly limited to the amounts necessary, in the determination of the Authority, to assure its low-rent character: Provided, however, That no capital grant shall be made for the development of any low-rent housing project involving the construction of new dwellings, unless arrangements satisfactory to the Authority are made for the elimination by demolition, condemnation, and effective closing, or the compulsory repair or improvement of unsafe or insanitary dwellings situated in the locality or metropolitan area, substantially equal in number to the number of newly constructed dwelling units provided by the project.

(b) Pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, the Authority may make a capital grant for any low-rent housing project, which shall in no case exceed 25 percent of its development or acquisition cost.

(c) All payments of capital grants by the Authority pursuant to subsection (b) of this section shall be made out of any funds available to the Authority, except that its capital and its funds obtained through the issuance of obligations pursuant to section 20 (including repayments or other realizations of the principal of loans made out of such capital and funds) shall not be available for the payment of such capital grants.

(d) The Authority is authorized, on or after the date of the enactment of this act to make capital grants (pursuant to subsection (b) of this section) aggregating not more than $10,000,000, on or after July 1, 1938, to make additional capital grants aggregating not more than $10,000,000, and on or after July 1, 1939, to make additional capital grants aggregating not more than $10,000,000. Without further authorization from Congress, no capital grants beyond those herein authorized shall be made by the Authority.

(e) To supplement any capital grant made by the Authority in connection with the development of any low-rent housing project, the President may allocate to the Authority, from any funds available for the relief of unemployment, an additional capital grant to be expended for payment of labor used in such development: Provided, That such additional capital grant shall not exceed 15 percent of the development cost of the low-rent housing project involved.

(f) No capital grant pursuant to this section shall be made for any low-rent housing project unless the public housing agency receiving such capital grant shall also receive, from the State, political subdivision thereof, or otherwise, a contribution for such project (in the form of cash, land, or the value, capitalized at the going Federal rate of interest, of community facilities or services for which a charge is usually made or tax remissions or tax exemptions) in an amount not less than 25 percent of its development or acquisition cost.

Mr. KELLER (interrupting the reading of the section). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of this section may be dispensed with.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the section.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: Page 48, line 21, before the period insert a comma and the following, "except as such elimination may, in the discretion of the Authority, be deferred in any locality or metropolitan area where the shortage of decent, safe, or sanitary housing available to low-income families is so acute as to force dangerous overcrowding of such families."

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, this is a perfecting committee amendment, exactly the same as the amendment we adopted to the previous section. I ask that this amendment be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as folows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 48, line 9, after the word "housing" insert "or slum clearance."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that wherever the phrase "low-cost housing projects" appears in section 11, the words "or slum clearance" may be inserted between the words "housing" and "projects."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. SEGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do this to ask a question of the chairman of the committee, which may have been answered in my absence. If a low-salaried tenant is occupying a low-rental unit, and his salary is increased 50 percent or more, what happens?

Mr. STEAGALL. He goes out.

Mr. SEGER. He goes out and goes into a higher-grade tenement?

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman is correct. This bill is to apply to the occupants of low-grade tenements.

Mr. SEGER. Is that provided in this bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

DISPOSAL OF FEDERAL PROJECTS

SEC. 12. (a) It is hereby declared to be the purpose of Congress to provide for the orderly disposal of any low-rent housing projects hereafter transferred to or acquired by the Authority through the sale or leasing of such projects as hereinafter provided; and, in order to continue the relief of Nation-wide unemployment and in order to avoid waste pending such sale or lease, to provide for the completion and temporary administration of such projects by the Authority.

(b) As soon as practicable the Authority shall sell its Federal projects or divest itself of their management through leases.

(c) The Authority may sell a Federal project only to a public housing agency. Any such sale shall be for a consideration, in whatever form may be satisfactory to the Authority, equal at least to the amount which the Authority determines to be the fair value of the project for housing purposes of a low-rent character (making such adjustment as the Authority deems advisable for any annual contributions which may hereafter be given hereunder in aid of the project), less such allowance for depreciation as the Authority shall fix. Such project shall then become eligible for loans pursuant to section 9, and either annual contributions pursuant to section 10 or a capital grant pursuant to section 11. Any obligation of the purchaser accepted by the Authority as part of the consideration for the sale of such project shall be deemed a loan pursuant to section 9.

(d) The Authority may lease any Federal low-rent housing project, in whole or in part, to a public housing agency. The lessee of any project, pursuant to this paragraph, shall assume and pay all management, operation, and maintenance costs, together with payments, if any, in lieu of taxes, and shall pay to the Authority such annual sums as the Authority shall determine are consistent with maintaining the low-rent character of such project. The provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 40, sec. 303b), shall not apply to any lease pursuant to this act.

(e) In the administration of any Federal low-rent housing project pending sale or lease, the Authority shall fix the rentals at the amounts necessary to pay all management, operation, and maintenance costs, together with payments, if any, in lieu of taxes, plus such additional amounts as the Authority shall determine are consistent with maintaining the low-rent character of such project.

GENERAL POWERS OF THE AUTHORITY

SEC. 13. (a) The Authority may foreclose on any property or commence any action to protect or enforce any right conferred upon it by any law, contract, or other agreement. The Authority may bid for and purchase at any foreclosure by any party or at any other sale, or otherwise acquire, and may administer, any low-rent housing project which it previously owned or in connection with which it has made a loan pursuant to section 9, annual contributions pursuant to section 10, or capital grants pursuant to section 11.

(b) The acquisition by the Authority of any real property pursuant to this Act shall not deprive any State or political subdivision thereof of its civil and criminal jurisdiction in and over such property, or impair the civil rights under the State or local law of the inhabitants on such property; and, insofar as any such jurisdiction may have been taken away or any such rights impaired by reason of the acquisition of any property transferred to the Authority pursuant to section 4 (c), such jurisdiction and such rights are hereby fully restored.

(c) The Authority may enter into agreements to pay annual sums in lieu of taxes to any State or political subdivision thereof with respect to any real property owned by the Authority. The amount so paid for any year upon any such property shall not exceed the taxes that would be paid to the State or subdivision, as the case may be, upon such property if it were not exempt from taxation thereby.

(d) The Authority may procure insurance against any loss in connection with its property and other assets (including mortgages), in such amounts, and from such insurers, as it deems desirable.

(e) The Authority may sell or exchange at public or private sale, or lease, any real property (except low-rent housing projects, the disposition of which is governed elsewhere in this act) or personal property, and sell or exchange any securities or obligations, upon such terms as it may fix. The Authority may borrow on the security of any real or personal property owned by it, or on the security of the revenues to be derived therefrom, and may use the proceeds of such loans for the purposes of this Act.

Mr. KELLER (interrupting the reading of the section). Mr. Chairman, I ask that the further reading of this section be dispensed with.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the amendment.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of this section may be dispensed with.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I may say to the gentleman from Illinois that I gave notice to the Chairman of this committee when he cut me off from debate that this bill was going to be read, and it is going to be read. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. Subject to the specific limitations or standards in this act governing the terms of sales, rentals, leases, loans, contracts for annual contributions, contracts for capital grants, or other agreements, the Authority may, whenever it deems it necessary or desirable in the fulfillment of the purposes of this act, consent to the modification, with respect to rate of interest, time of payment of any installment of principal or interest, security, amount of annual contribution, or any other term, of any contract or agreement of any kind to which the Authority is a party or which has been transferred to it pursuant to this act. Any rule of law contrary to this provision shall be deemed inapplicable.

SEC. 15. In order to insure that the low-rent character of housing projects will be preserved, and that the other purposes of this act will be achieved, it is hereby provided that—

(1) When a loan is made pursuant to section 9 for a low-rent-housing project the Authority may retain the right, in the event of a substantial breach of the condition (which shall be embodied in the loan agreement) providing for the maintenance of the low-rent character of the housing project involved or in the event of the acquisition of such project by a third party in any manner including a bona-fide foreclosure under a mortgage or other lien held by a third party, to increase the interest payable thereafter on the balance of said loan then held by the Authority to a rate not in excess of the going Federal rate (at the time of such breach or acquisition) plus 2 percent per annum or to declare the unpaid principal on said loan due forthwith.

(2) When a loan is made pursuant to section 9 for a slum-clearance project the Authority shall retain the right, in the event of the leasing or acquisition of such project by a third party in any manner including a bona-fide foreclosure under a mortgage or other lien held by a third party, to increase the interest payable thereafter on the balance of said loan then held by the Authority to a rate not in excess of the going Federal rate (at the time of such leasing or acquisition) plus 2 percent per annum or to declare the unpaid principal on said loan due forthwith.

(3) When a contract for annual contributions is made pursuant to section 10, the Authority shall retain the right, in the event of a substantial breach of the condition (which shall be embodied in such contract) providing for the maintenance of the low-rent character of the housing project involved, to reduce or terminate the annual contributions payable under such contract. In the event of the acquisition of such project by a third party in any manner including a bona-fide foreclosure under a mortgage or other lien held by a third party, such annual contributions shall terminate.

(4) The Authority may also insert in any contract for loans, annual contributions, capital grants, sale, lease, mortgage, or any other agreement or instrument made pursuant to this Act, such other covenants, conditions, or provisions as it may deem necessary in order to insure the low-rent character of the housing project involved.

(5) With respect to housing projects on which construction is hereafter initiated, the Authority shall make loans, grants, and annual contributions only for such low-rent housing projects as it finds are to be undertaken in such a manner (a) that such projects will not be of elaborate or expensive design or materials and economy will be promoted both in construction and administration and (b) that the average construction cost of the dwelling units (excluding land and non-dwelling facilities) in any such project is not greater than the average construction cost of dwelling units currently produced by private enterprise, in the locality or metropolitan area concerned, under the legal building requirements applicable to the proposed site, and under labor standards not lower than those prescribed in this act. The Authority shall determine, in making loans, grants, or annual contributions for projects hereafter initiated, that, in each fiscal year, the average family-dwelling-unit cost (as herein defined) shall not exceed $5,000.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina: Page 56, line 24, strike out "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,000, and the cost per room shall not exceed $1,000, including in either case the cost of the land and the cost of renovating old buildings, less value of salvage."

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is similar to the amendment which was adopted in the Senate, with this exception: In the Senate amendment the per-dwelling-unit cost was limited to $4,000 and the per-room cost to $1,000, excluding land and the cost of demolition. Under this amendment $4,000 is the limit placed upon the dwelling cost and $1,000 upon a room, whichever may be the lesser, including cost of land and demolition cost, but there is left in the language of this particular provision the word "average", so that some latitude and flexibility can be given to the local housing agency to meet peculiar conditions similar to those described to us by our friends from the larger centers.

Mr. Chairman, if we will stop, use some common sense, and seriously consider what we are trying to do under this bill, I know the House will vote favorably upon this amendment. The objective of this bill is to provide for those in the low-income brackets and who live in slums without sunshine or air safe, decent, and sanitary housing facilities. I think it can be truthfully said that not 50 percent of the American families today occupy dwellings that cost in excess of $3,000. We must remember that this unfortunate group of people to whom the benefits of this bill are directed are those who have been living in squalor conditions, within incomes ranging from $700 to $1,200 a year. You cannot afford to jump them up to $6,000 dwellings.

We must not only consider the cost involved, but I want you to consider the question of such a procedure on the morale of the men and women in this country who, through self-denial, self-discipline, and frugality, have been able to earn for themselves their own little modest homes. I want you to consider the attitude of the citizen who has, through years of sacrifice and from meager wages been able to build for himself a safe, decent, and sanitary dwelling costing from $2,500 to $3,000.

Did you know that about 38 percent of the homes which have been insured under title II of the Federal Housing Act—and they are doing some fine work—have been erected at a cost of less than $2,500?

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. I cannot yield right now.

Think about the man or woman, the working man or woman, who is living today in a $2,000 or $2,500 or $3,000 little home, built with their own money, and you let them see these structures go up. How do you reckon they will feel, and especially when they see this special class entering these comparatively luxurious apartments or dwellings? I will tell you that the projects built under P. W. A.—I do not care where they are located—are superior to the home of the average family in that community. What effect do you think this has upon the morale of the honest-to-God American citizen? Fellows, let us watch our step, for God knows we are in dangerous territory. Do not let us do this thing. Let us act sensibly and insist on restricting these almost free homes to a type and cost of construction that will not discourage or destroy the incentive for home ownership in America. [Applause.] May I illustrate the danger by reading this letter:

To the EDITOR.

SIR: After years of struggle and many reverses, I have purchased a suburban lot and saved enough cash to build a home for my family to cost not more than $2,500. Despite high taxes I hope we will be able to swing it and give my family a roof over their heads that they can call their own.

I was brought up to believe it was more desirable to have something you could call your own than to use something that belonged to somebody else, even if it was more pretentious, and live like you could afford it. In this connection I have had quite a shock. I have a daughter, almost a young lady, who thinks her friends would look down on her if we lived in a house we can afford. They tell her that they plan to live in P. W. A. houses costing from $4,000 to $6,000, which she thinks will place them in a higher social scale, although their income is not as large as mine. My trouble is that my income is too high to permit me to occupy a $6,000 Government house and too low to enable me to live in one of my own costing more than $2,500.

I read in your paper where the Associated Press says that "W. P. A. architects and engineers have insisted in their $140,000,000 slum clearance campaign that every room be an outside room and that modern kitchen and bathroom equipment be installed." If I could build a house like that, I believe my daughter would be satisfied. Would the P. W. A. supplement my $2,500 with another $2,500, or is it the policy to spend from $1,000 to $1,300 a room in building homes for persons who have nothing of their own to contribute?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio and Mr. O'CONNOR of New York rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rose to offer an amendment, but I think one of the finest Members of this House is the gentleman from New York, and I am going to withhold my amendment so that he may be heard.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, there are more ways of scuttling a ship than using an auger, and if this amendment were adopted, this bill would be absolutely useless, as the House committee has already determined, I would vote against the bill and every Member from any of the metropolitan centers should likewise vote against it.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. I have hardly got started, but I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COCHRAN. I will say that there is one Member from a metropolitan district who will not vote against it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Well, there must be some undemocratic reason which prompts the great economist. As I said this morning, it has been proven that you cannot possibly, in any of the metropolitan districts, build one of these projects at a cost of $1,000 a room or $4,000 a unit. The two projects in New York, the Harlem and the Williamsburg, have cost $1,600 a room. The project in Atlanta cost $4,600 plus for four rooms, the project in Cincinnati cost over $4,600 for four rooms, and so on throughout the country, and nobody knows but what within the next year, which is the earliest time when this experiment can get under way, what the cost of material and labor is going to be. It just cannot be done, and when the Senate put in the $4,000 limitation, the House committee on the presentation made to it, fully realized that it could not be done throughout the country.

There is no requirement in this bill that the authority in charge shall spend $5,000 per unit if they can build it cheaper in some communities, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK], one of the most brilliant men in this House, one of the men who knows more about these subjects than most of us, talks about "palatial apartments."

Of course, that is a great extravagance as to any one of these housing projects. I am sure the gentleman, and many other people, would not live in what they call "palatial projects", which rent for $4 and a few cents per month per room, where the rooms are small, where they are usually located in the old sections of these cities, and only certain types of people will live in such sections.

Of all the items in the bill this is the most important. You might just as well forget about a housing bill if you adopt an amendment to go back to a limitation of $4,000, and I hope the membership of this Committee, in fairness and in sincerity, if they want to pass a housing bill, will defeat this amendment, because with this amendment in,

I for one, and I am sure many here who are interested in housing, will vote against the entire bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to another limitation in the bill. It is this:

The Authority shall make loans, grants, and annual contributions only for such low-rent housing projects as it finds are to be undertaken in such a manner (a) that such projects will not be of elaborate or expensive design or materials and economy will be promoted both in construction and administration and (b) that the average construction cost of the dwelling units (excluding land and nondwelling facilities) in any such project is not greater than the average construction cost of dwelling units currently produced by private enterprise, in the locality or metropolitan area concerned, under the legal building requirements applicable to the proposed site, and under labor standards not lower than those prescribed in this act.

That, Mr. Chairman, is the real limit. That is the limit that ought to be applied to expenditures. If that is complied with in good faith, then we have set the only limit that can be established that will admit of such an administration of this act as will accomplish the declared purpose of the bill. That is the real test. There need not have been any other.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. And as I said this morning as a matter of fact there should not be a limitation of $5,000 in there, and there is no necessity for that at all.

Mr. STEAGALL. The other is the real limitation and the only one that ought really to be in the bill. The $5,000 limit was put in by gentlemen who wanted to satisfy some of those who, like our good friend from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK], wanted a specific limitation.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina) there were—ayes 59, noes 97.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 16. In order to protect labor standards—

(1) The provisions of the act of August 30, 1935, entitled "An act to amend the act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings" (49 Stat. 1011), and of the act of August 24, 1935, entitled "An act requiring contracts for the construction, alteration, and repair of any public building or public work of the United States to be accompanied by a performance bond protecting the United States and by an additional bond for the protection of persons furnishing material and labor for the construction, alteration, or repair of said public buildings or public work" (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. II, title 40, secs. 270a to 270d, inclusive), shall apply to contracts in connection with the development or administration of low-rent-housing or slum-clearance projects and the furnishing of materials and labor for such projects: Provided, That suits shall be brought in the name of the Authority and that the Authority shall itself perform the duties prescribed by section 3 (a) of the act of August 30, 1935, and section 3 of the act of August 24, 1935.

(2) Any contract for loans, annual contributions, capital grants, sale, or lease pursuant to this act shall contain a provision requiring that the wages or fees prevailing in the locality, as determined or adopted (subsequent to a determination under applicable State or local law) by the Authority, shall be paid to all architects, technical engineers, draftsmen, technicians, laborers, and mechanics employed in the development or administration of the low-rent housing or slum-clearance project involved; and the Authority may require certification as to compliance with the provisions of this paragraph prior to making any payment under such contract.

(3) The act entitled "An act limiting the hours of daily services of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or for any Territory, or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", as amended (37 Stat. 137), shall apply to contracts of the Authority for work in connection with the development and administration of low-rent-housing or slum-clearance projects.

(4) The benefits of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes" (39 Stat. 742), shall extend to officers and employees of the Authority.

(5) The provisions of sections 1 and 2 of the act of June 13, 1934 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 40, secs. 276 b and 276 c), shall apply to any low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project financed in whole or in part with funds made available pursuant to this act.

(6) Any contractor engaged on any project financed in whole or in part with funds made available pursuant to this act shall report monthly to the Secretary of Labor, and shall cause all subcontractors to report in like manner (within 5 days after the close of each calendar month, on forms to be furnished by the United States Department of Labor), as to the number of persons on their respective pay rolls, the aggregate amount of such pay rolls, the total man-hours worked, and itemized expenditures for materials. Any such contractor shall furnish to the Department of Labor the names and addresses of all subcontractors on the work at the earliest date practicable.

During the reading of the foregoing the following occurred:

Mr. KELLER (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the section be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I object.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making an inquiry of the chairman of the committee. I call his attention to paragraph 6 on page 59, which provides in effect that every contractor engaged on one of these projects shall make a report monthly to the Secretary of Labor as to the number of persons on his pay rolls, the aggregate amount of the pay roll, and the total amount of man-hours worked, and itemized expenses for materials. But it also provides that the subcontractor shall make the same kind of report. Does the committee intend that the subcontractor on one of these projects, which might, for example, be a lumber company situated in the State of Mississippi providing lumber as a subcontractor to a project in New York City, shall furnish to the Secretary of Labor a list of all its employees in Mississippi, the number of hours they work, and what they spend? The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE] suggests that I may be mistaken. I read the language:

Any contractor engaged on any project financed in whole or in part with funds made available pursuant to this act shall report monthly to the Secretary of Labor, and shall cause all subcontractors to report in like manner * * * as to the number of persons in their respective pay rolls, the aggregate amount of such pay rolls, the total man-hours worked, and itemized expenditures for material.

Surely the committee does not mean that a subcontractor, which may be the Bell Telephone Co., employing thousands and thousands of people, shall monthly furnish to the Secretary of Labor the total of the man-hours worked by all of the people in its employ, whether they are working as a subcontractor or not.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, if we intend to make such a requirement, that would be the only method by which to make the provisions of the act effective.

Mr. WADSWORTH. What does the committee intend to require of a subcontractor?

Mr. STEAGALL. That he supply this information so that it will be available to the Department of Labor. I would assume that the contractor will obtain this information from the subcontractor and that it would be transmitted to the Department of Labor.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But it goes far beyond the intent just expressed.

Mr. STEAGALL. That is the law now in effect. It was not put into this bill as a new proposition.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not as to the subcontractor.

Mr. STEAGALL. How would the contractor be able to do it if in some way the subcontractor did not furnish him the information?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it an attempt to write the Walsh-Healey Act into this law?

If it is, it goes far beyond the Walsh-Healey bill. Surely, the gentleman does not contend that a huge concern which takes a subcontract to furnish brass fittings in a flat must, as is provided in this section, supply to the contractor and, through him, to the Secretary of Labor the total number of man-hours worked by all the people in his plant, whether they are working on these particular brass fittings or on brass for all the rest of the people of the United States.

Mr. STEAGALL. I think the gentleman is stretching the construction of this act beyond any reasonable interpretation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am reading the English language.

Mr. STEAGALL. The situation to which the gentleman refers would be that of a materialman.

Mr. WADSWORTH. He is a subcontractor.

Mr. STEAGALL. But he would be a materialman if he furnished the fittings or other articles such as the gentleman suggests.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But he may contract to install them.

Mr. STEAGALL. That would be an entirely different matter.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Even then he would have to furnish the total number of man-hours worked in his plant for the whole month every month of the year in which he does any work on this project.

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say that my interpretation of this provision would be that the Department of Labor would be able to ascertain from the reports who had worked on these buildings—the hours, the time, and the wages. That is all that would be accomplished.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But the amendment is not confined to the building. The amendment reaches back to the plant.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency with reference to the colloquy between him and the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] that it might clarify the situation if he added the words, on page 59, line 10, after the words "pay rolls", "on the particular project."

Mr. STEAGALL. If you will read the entire provision, you will see that it applies to all who worked on the project. Those who worked. They are the people to whom it applies. It does not apply to anybody else.

Mr. FISH. If you add those words "as to the particular project", that would clear up the whole situation and would not change the purpose of this section. Otherwise it might require a list of employees of subcontractors all over the country. If you will accept the amendment, I will offer that.

Mr. STEAGALL. If you will read the language in lines 13 and 14 you will see its application is limited to the work. That means the people who labor on this project. If you want to apply the law, this is the way to do it. Otherwise you will defeat the purpose of the bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. For the purpose of asking the gentleman from Alabama a question.

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I appreciate the courtesy. I want to put this question, if I may, without being impertinent to the Chairman of the Committee: Is it not a fact that under the language as now printed in paragraph 6 this would happen: We will say the General Electric Co. takes a subcontract to wire one of these buildings, if they do that kind of business. Under this language would it not be a fact that the General Electric Co. would have to report to the Secretary of Labor how many men were on its pay rolls at Schenectady, N. Y., at Pittsfield, Mass., and at various other points, and the total number of man-hours worked at all of them?

Mr. STEAGALL. Why should he not be required to give account of the labor employed by him and the remuneration applied, the same as anybody else who works on the project?

The pro-forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WADSWORTH: Page 59, line 3, strike out "any contractor" and insert "all contractors"; and in line 5, strike out the word "and" and strike out all of lines 6, 7, and 8, and the words "of Labor" in line 9.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, if that amendment should be adopted the paragraph would read in this fashion:

(6) All contractors engaged on any project financed in whole or in part with funds made available pursuant to this act shall report monthly to the Secretary of Labor as to the number of persons on their respective pay rolls, the aggregate amount of such pay rolls, the total man-hours worked, and itemized expenditures for materials. Any such contractor shall furnish to the Department of Labor the names and addresses of all subcontractors on the work at the earliest date practicable.

But it would not compel subcontractors, a part of whose business might be the doing of a job on one of these apartment houses, to file with the Secretary of Labor a complete account of all the man-hours worked in their plants on all other business, which the language of the bill certainly does.

Mr. McGRANERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. McGRANERY. Does the gentleman understand that one of the specific reasons for that particular provision is to prevent what is commonly known as kick-backs coming from the employees to the employers whether they be directly the contractor or the subcontractor? There have been many instances of kick-backs and indictments in our courts for just that very thing. I feel as does the gentleman that perhaps the language may be too broad.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is all-inclusive.

Mr. McGRANERY. It should be limited, but I do think that the subcontractor should be required to make the same kind of return as the general contractor on the job. The language should limit it, however, to the specific project upon which they are working.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not thoroughly familiar, by any means, with the various laws on the statute books regulating hours and wages with respect to Government work. I remember vaguely the terms of the Walsh-Healey Act which was passed last year. That act does not go as far as this proposes to go. No act upon the statute books, I think, goes as far as this. I am wondering, Mr. Chairman, if you can ever get a subcontractor to take a subcontract under such a provision. The expense to be imposed upon them would be almost prohibitive.

Mr. McCORMACK and Mr. STEAGALL rose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think that the gentleman from New York has in mind something that the committee had in mind. Certainly we do not want to require subcontractors to make a report about employees employed out in California or elsewhere away from the job. I do not think the committee intends to.

I think that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGRANERY] is right, that the subcontractors should report their employees on the project. Along this line of reasoning I suggest to my friend that it could be taken care of by adding in line 6, after the word "report", the words "its employees on the project", so that it will read:

Shall cause all subcontractors to report its employees on the project.

That confines the operation of the provision.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. STEAGALL. The language in the last line reads "subcontractors on the work." It seems to me this confines it to the particular project. Anyone would construe it that way.

If we do not place a similar requirement on subcontractors there is nothing to hinder contractors from turning all the work over to subcontractors and thus being themselves exempt from the requirements of the law.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. WADSWORTH:

Page 59, line 10, after the words "pay rolls", insert "on the particular project."

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is satisfactory.

Mr. FISH. My amendment is satisfactory to the gentleman from New York. I hope the Committee will accept it. It is merely a clarifying amendment.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the suggestion for the consideration of the Committee that unanimous consent be asked that this subsection be passed over for the present. It is a very important matter and it is perfectly evident that it is being amended in haste without due consideration. If it could be passed over to the heel of the bill, if it is to be amended, then it could be amended deliberately after being studied.

Mr. FISH. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that I do not think there is any difficulty about the matter. It is merely a clarifying amendment. It is satisfactory to the gentleman from New York. I do not know anyone who opposes it, and it makes the bill say exactly what we want it to say.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] may be again reported so that we may know exactly what we are passing upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH as a substitute to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York: After the words "pay rolls" in line 10 insert: "on the particular project."

Mr. FISH. This leaves the language as it is in the present bill with the exception of the amendment I have offered. I do not think there is any objection to that.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I may say unless some member of the committee has a different view from myself, the amendment suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], who is now offering the substitute amendment is satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The substitute amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], as amended by the substitute.

The amendment, as amended by the substitute, was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

FINANCIAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 17. The Authority shall have a capital stock of $1,000,000, which shall be subscribed by the United States and paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any available funds. Receipt for such payment shall be issued to the Secretary of the Treasury by the Authority and shall evidence the stock ownership of the United States of America.

SEC. 18. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $26,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, of which $1,000,000 shall be available to pay the subscription to the capital stock of the Authority. Such sum, and all receipts and assets of the Authority, shall be available for the purposes of this act until expended.

SEC. 19. Any funds available under any act of Congress for allocation for housing or slum clearance may, in the discretion of the President, be allocated to the Authority for the purposes of this act.

SEC. 20. (a) The Authority is authorized to issue obligations, in the form of notes, bonds, or otherwise, which it may sell to obtain funds for the purposes of this act. The Authority may issue such obligations in an amount not to exceed $100,000,000 on or after the date of enactment of this act, an additional amount not to exceed $200,000,000 on or after July 1, 1938, and an additional amount not to exceed $200,000,000 on or after July 1, 1939. Such obligations shall be in such forms and denominations, mature within such periods not exceeding 60 years from date of issue, bear such rates of interest not exceeding 4 percent per annum, be subject to such terms and conditions, and be issued in such manner and sold at such prices as may be prescribed by the Authority, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

(c) Such obligations shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed upon their face by the United States as to the payment of both interest and principal, and, in the event that the Authority shall be unable to make any such payment upon demand when due, payments shall be made to the holder by the Secretary of the Treasury with money hereby authorized to be appropriated for such purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. To the extent of such payment the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holder.

The Secretary of the Treasury is likewise authorized to purchase any such obligations, and for such purchases he may use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are extended to include any such purchases. The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of the obligations acquired by him pursuant to this section, and all redemptions, purchases, and sales by him of such obligations shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States.

(e) Such obligations may be marketed for the Authority at its request by the Secretary of the Treasury, utilizing all the facilities of the Treasury Department now authorized by law for the marketing of obligations of the United States.

SEC. 21. (a) Any money of the Authority not otherwise employed may be deposited, subject to check, with the Treasurer of the United States or in any Federal Reserve bank, or may be invested in obligations of the United States or used in the purchase or retirement or redemption of any obligations issued by the Authority.

(b) The Federal Reserve banks are authorized and directed to act as depositories, custodians, and fiscal agents for the Authority in the general exercise of its powers, and the Authority may reimburse any such bank for its services in such manner as may be agreed upon.

(d) Not more than 10 percent of the funds provided for in this act, either in the form of a loan, grant, or annual contribution, shall be expended within any one State.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FISH: Page 62, line 24, after the word "than" strike out "10" and insert "15."

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, in the other branch the Wagner housing bill was adopted with a 20-percent maximum for any one State. The House committee reduced that to 10 percent. I am offering an amendment now to make it 15 percent as a matter of equity and justice.

Mr. Chairman, the prime reason for this bill is to take care of slum clearance in the large industrial centers of America, particularly New York, Detroit, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Chicago, and other cities. May I say to those Members who come from the farm districts that the city of New York, for example, that contributes over 30 percent of Federal taxes and where the need is the greatest for slum clearance, as the congestion is worse there, should at least be permitted to get 15 percent back.

I am sorry to say we have no Republicans from New York City. The same thing applies to Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Detroit, and Chicago. The Democratic Members from New York City, Pittsburgh, and elsewhere have been voting for farm relief for flood control, for waterpower projects, for Dust Bowl relief, and almost everything that the farmers have been asking for. Therefore I say, as a matter of justice and fair dealing and sportsmanship the amendment I have offered ought to be adopted. This money should go where it is most needed. It is needed in the congested sections of the cities of New York, Detroit, Chicago, and Philadelphia more than anywhere else. Why should we limit this bill to 10 percent to any one State? The Senate put it at 20 percent. I offer the amendment as a fair compromise at 15 percent and I hope it will be agreed to.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. It is recognized by everybody that has given thought to this legislation that what we are doing now is only a beginning. It is impossible now to anticipate the developments and conditions that will confront the Authority in years to come in the administration of this act; and certainly for the time being, with the limited funds supplied by this bill and the limited accomplishments that we might reasonably expect, there can be no harm in fixing a limit which will not allow any one State to have more than one-tenth of the sum that is to be distributed among 48 States.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. As I said this morning, of course I am opposed to the 10 percent. I am really opposed to the 20 percent. But this act is not going to be administered within 6 months or a year, so while I do not like the limitation and I do not like the "pork barrel" aspects of it, for the present I feel that matter will take care of itself. When the situation changes we will be back here, every Democrat will be back here for many years to come, and we can take care of the situation when it arises.

Mr. STEAGALL. I appreciate the gentleman's suggestions which are entirely in accord with the views of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

PENALTIES

SEC. 22. All general penal statutes relating to the larceny, embezzlement, or conversion or to the improper handling, retention, use, or disposal of public moneys or property of the United States shall apply to the moneys and property of the Authority and to moneys and properties of the United States entrusted to the Authority.

SEC. 23. Any person who, with intent to defraud the Authority or to deceive any director, officer, or employee thereof or any officer or employee of the United States, makes any false entry in any book of the Authority or makes any false report or statement to or for the Authority shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

SEC. 24. Any person who shall receive any compensation, rebate, or reward, or shall enter into any conspiracy, collusion, or agreement, express or implied, with intent to defraud the Authority or with intent unlawfully to defeat its purposes, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

SEC. 25. Any person who induces or influences the Authority to purchase or acquire any property or to enter into any contract and willfully fails to disclose any interest, legal or equitable, which he has in such property or in the property to which such contract relates, or any special benefit which he expects to receive as a result of such contract shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

SEC. 26. No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall use the words "United States Housing Authority", or any combination of these four words, as the name, or part thereof, under which he or it shall do business. Any such use shall constitute a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $1,000.

SEC. 27. Wherever the application of the provisions of this act conflicts with the application of the provisions of Public No. 837, approved June 29, 1936 (49 Stat. 2025), Public, No. 845, approved June 29, 1936 (49 Stat. 2035), or any other act of the United States dealing with housing or slum clearance, or any Executive order, regulation, or other order thereunder, the provisions of this act shall prevail.

SEC. 28. The President is hereby authorized to make available to the Alley Dwelling Authority, from any funds appropriated or otherwise provided to carry out the purposes of this act, such sums as he deems necessary to carry out the purposes of the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act, approved June 12, 1934 (Public, No. 307, 73d Cong.). Such sums shall be deposited in the Conversion of Inhabited Alleys Fund and thereafter shall remain immediately available for the purposes of the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act.

Mr. KELLER (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the section may be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina: After the period, in line 3, page 65, insert the following new paragraphs:

"Section 201 (a) of title II of the National Housing Act is amended by striking out the words 'not more than four' and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'one or more.'

"Section 203 (b) subsection (2) of title II of the National Housing Act is amended by striking out the word 'executed' and the period at the end of said subsection and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'insured; or cover a multifamily dwelling and involve a principal obligation in excess of $16,000 but not in excess of $200,000 and not to exceed 80 percent of the appraised value of the property as of the date the mortgage is insured:'."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. Enough of the amendment has been read so that it is apparent the proposed amendment is not germane to the purposes of this bill. It is beyond the purposes and scope of the bill before us, and I make the point of order it is not germane to the bill now under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Caroline [Mr. HANCOCK] desire to be heard?

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, yes; I would like to be heard on the point of order.

Section 1 of S. 1685, as reported with an amendment by the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives, is a declaration of policy.

First. It is declared to be the policy of the United States to promote the general welfare of the Nation by employing its funds and credit to assist the several States and their political subdivisions to alleviate present and recurring unemployment and to remedy the unsafe and insanitary housing conditions and the acute shortage of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income that are injurious to the health, safety, and morals of the citizens of the Nation.

The National Housing Act was enacted in part for precisely the same purposes. It is so stated in the preamble to the act where the declared policy of Congress is stated—

To encourage improvement in housing standards and conditions * * *.

Section 207 of the National Housing Act, which is proposed to be amended, authorizes the Federal Housing Administrator to insure mortgages held by Federal or State instrumentalities or municipal or corporate instrumentalities of one or more States formed for the purpose of providing housing for persons of low income. Under this section of the National Housing Act provision is made for the use of the credit of the United States—

To assist the several States and their political subdivisions * * * to remedy the unsafe and insanitary housing conditions and the acute shortage of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income.

The inclusion, therefore, of the proposed amendments in the Wagner-Steagall bill would seem to be entirely appropriate and germane because the proposed amendments deal with precisely the same situations as are dealt with by the Wagner-Steagall bill. It would be difficult to find two subjects more closely akin or more relevant to each other.

The enactment of the Wagner-Steagall bill would make it possible for "State instrumentalities, * * * or municipal corporate instrumentalities * * *" to obtain grants and loans from an agency of the Federal Government for the purpose of providing dwellings for persons of low income.

Under section 207 of the National Housing Act, which is proposed to be amended, "the several States and their political subdivisions" can now obtain from an agency of the Federal Government the credit of the United States for the purpose of providing housing for persons of low income. The transactions carried on pursuant to section 207 of the National Housing Act are completely described in the declaration of policy contained in the Wagner-Steagall bill, and the credit of the United States has actually been made available to a State agency for the purpose of providing housing for persons of low income through the insurance of a mortgage under section 207 of the National Housing Act.

Second. The announced purpose of the bill now before the House is to improve housing conditions and standards. This is precisely the purpose of the amendments to the National Housing Act in that the objective sought to be attained by the amendments is to clarify and liberalize the provisions of that act so as to more fully accomplish the purpose declared to be the original reason for the enactment of the National Housing Act which purpose was to improve housing conditions and standards.

Third. Another declared policy in the bill now before the House is to increase employment by the construction of new housing. This is one of the purposes which will be accomplished by these amendments, through the encouragement by use of the insurance scheme of the building with private capital of housing units throughout the country. In this respect, the operations under these amendments will supplement and not antagonize the operations under the bill now before the House and will reach a kind of building operations which is not reached by the present bill, but which nevertheless is clearly within the purposes sought to be accomplished by it.

These amendments will greatly increase the supply of housing and avert a housing shortage with the result of an exorbitant increase in rents and overcrowding. The building of new lost-cost housing projects under these amendments will release other more obsolete structures which can then be occupied by persons who require a lower rental.

Fourth. The primary purpose of the proposed amendments has been explained and has been shown to be closely akin, if not identical, to the purposes sought to be accomplished by the bill now before the House.

The proposed amendments that have to do with national mortgage associations which are authorized to be set up by title III of the National Housing Act, serve the purpose of perfecting the financial machinery appropriate for the accomplishment of the primary purpose, that is, the construction of adequate housing throughout the country.

Through the operations of these national mortgage associations in the sale of their debentures, the public is permitted to invest in these housing operations, and in this way millions of private funds now seeking investment can be utilized in the promotion of the general housing program.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, about the only thing the amendment and the bill have in common is that in the titles of the two bills the word "housing" is used. This amendment, which even changes the scope of the Federal Housing Authority, refers to an act which creates on the part of the Government an agency by which banks and other financial institutions of the country may have their loans insured. The bill before the committee is a bill providing for the creation of an authority not for the purpose of insuring loans but for the purpose of making grants or contributions for a specific and most definite purpose. The purpose of the bill before us (S. 1685) is to eliminate unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, to eradicate slums, to provide for decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, to reduce unemployment, and so forth. The Federal Housing Act had to do with insurance of loans without regard to sanitation, without regard to safety, and without regard to the income of the people who were to have their loans insured.

I think the Chairman has even today established a precedent for a ruling sustaining the point of order by sustaining the point of order made against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

In summary, Mr. Chairman, I submit the amendment offered is dissimilar in purpose to the pending bill, is not within the purpose and scope of the bill S. 1685, and, therefore, is not germane.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. WILLIAMS. May I suggest, in addition to what has been stated on the point of order, that the National Housing Administration is an agency which insures private loans, and is simply to further private building. I call attention again to the fact that the pending bill is a public housing bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The point is very well taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The amendment is not germane to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from North Carolina offers an amendment to the pending bill which has been reported by the Clerk.

The Chair invites attention to the fact that the pending bill has for its express purpose the creation of a United States Housing Authority, to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisons thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the eradication of slums, and so forth. The amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina seeks to amend section 201 (a), title II, of the National Housing Act, which is existing law, enacted for specific purposes therein stated and provided.

The Chair has rather hurriedly, but he feels adequately, examined several precedents which at least impress the Chair as being sufficiently near in point to be decisive of the pending question. Attention is invited to section 2967, volume 8, of Cannon's Precedents of the House, which reads as follows:

To a bill proposing to raise the price of agricultural products to a basis of comparative equality with the price of other commodities through the establishment of a Federal Farm Board authorized to promote effective marketing, an amendment proposing to raise agricultural prices through the authorization of export debentures on agricultural products was held not to be germane.

The Chair also invites attention to section 2978 of the same volume of Cannon's Precedents of the House of Representatives, which reads as follows:

One method of attaining an object is not germane to another method of attaining such object unless closely related.

To a bill providing for the distribution of coal by vesting in the Interstate Commerce Commission power to establish priorities, an amendment providing for distribution through governmental purchase was held not to be germane.

The Chair would also invite attention to a decision appearing at page 7180 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under date of May 13, 1936, the second session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, as follows:

To a bill providing for the refinancing of agricultural indebtedness at a reduced rate of interest through the medium of the Farm Credit Administration, an amendment proposing the extension of agricultural credit at a lower rate of interest through an agricultural bank-note committee was held not germane.

The Chair believes that in view of these precedents and the further fact that the pending bill does not purport to amend the existing Federal Housing Act, the amendment here presented offers in effect a new subject not sought to be covered by the pending bill. Therefore, the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 29. Notwithstanding any other evidences of the intention of Congress, it is hereby declared to be the controlling intent of Congress that if any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of this act, or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 30. This act may be cited as the "United States Housing Act of 1937."

Mr. KELLER (interruptiong the reading of the section). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the section be dispensed with.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the section.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment, as amended, to the Senate bill.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill

(S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the eradication of slums, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 320, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SECTION 1. It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to promote the general welfare of the Nation by employing its funds and credit, as provided in this act, to assist the several States and their political subdivisions to alleviate present and recurring unemployment and to remedy the unsafe and insanitary housing conditions and the acute shortage of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income in rural or urban communities, that are injurious to the health, safety, and morals of the citizens of the Nation.

The dwellings in low-rent housing as defined in this act shall be available solely for families of citizens of the United States whose net income does not exceed four times the rental (including the value or cost to them of heat, light, water, and cooking fuel) of the dwellings to be furnished such families, except that in the case of families with three or more minor dependents, such ratio shall not exceed five to one.

"(2) The term 'families of low income' means families who are in the lowest income group and who cannot afford to pay enough to cause private enterprise in their locality or metropolitan area to build an adequate supply of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for their use.

"(7) The term 'acquisition cost' means the amount prudently required to be expended by a public housing agency in acquiring or developing a low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project.

"(8) The term 'average family-dwelling-unit cost' means the average construction cost in a fiscal year of a dwelling unit based on all the dwelling units in all the projects for which the Authority has made loans, grants, or annual contributions during said fiscal year. The date of the first allotment of funds for a project shall be used to determine within which fiscal year such project is to be included for the purpose of ascertaining said average. In computing the average family-dwelling-unit cost there shall be excluded the cost of the land, demolition, and nondwelling facilities. The term 'nondwelling facilities' shall include site development, improvements and facilities located outside building walls (including streets, sidewalks, sanitary utility and other facilities), and administrative, educational, recreational, and commercial facilities in the project.

"(12) The term 'Authority' means the United States Housing Authority created by section 3 of this act.

"UNITED STATES HOUSING AUTHORITY

"SEC. 3. (a) There is hereby created in the Department of the Interior and under the general supervision of the Secretary thereof a body corporate of perpetual duration to be known as the United States Housing Authority, which shall be an agency and instrumentality of the United States.

"(b) The powers of the Authority shall be vested in and exercised by an Administrator, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Administrator shall serve for a term of 5 years and shall be removable by the President upon notice and hearing for neglect of duty or malfeasance but for no other cause.

"(c) The Administrator shall receive a salary of $10,000 a year, shall be eligible for reappointment, and shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Neither the Administrator nor any officer or employee of the Authority shall participate in any matter affecting his personal interests or the interest of any corporation, partnership, or association in which he is directly or indirectly interested.

"(d) An Advisory Board is hereby established in the Authority, which Board shall consist of nine members to be appointed by the President. The Board shall make recommendations to the Administrator on matters relating to the policies of the Authority, and shall meet upon call of the Administrator. The members of the Board shall receive no annual salary for their services on the Board, but may be paid necessary traveling expenses and reasonable per-diem compensation for services performed. In connection with the utilization of such services the Authority may make reasonable payments for necessary traveling and other expenses.

"(c) The President may at any time in his discretion transfer to the Authority any right, interest, or title held by any department or agency of the Federal Government in any housing or slum-clearance projects (constructed or in process of construction on the date of enactment of this act), any assets, contracts, records, libraries, research materials, and other property held in connection with any such housing or slum-clearance projects or activities, any unexpended balance of funds allocated to such department or agency for the development, administration, or assistance of any housing or slum-clearance projects or activities, and any employees who have been engaged in work connected with housing or slum clearance. The Authority may continue any or all activities undertaken in connection with projects so transferred, subject to the provisions of this act.

The Authority may, by one or more of its officers or employees or by such agents or agencies as it may designate, conduct hearings or negotiations at any place.

(a) The Authority may make such expenditures, subject to audit under the general law, for the acquisition and maintenance of adequate administrative agencies, offices, vehicles, furnishings, equipment, supplies, books, periodicals, printing and binding, for attendance at meetings, for any necessary traveling expenses within the United States, its Territories, dependencies, or possessions, and for such other expenses as may from time to time be found necessary for the proper administration of this act. Such financial transactions of the Authority as the making of loans, annual contributions, and capital grants, and the acquisition, sale, exchange, lease, or other disposition of real and personal property, and vouchers approved by the Administrator in connection with such financial transactions, shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government; except that all such financial transactions of the Authority shall be audited by the General Accounting Office at such times and in such manner as the Comptroller General of the United States may by regulation prescribe.

"(b) The provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 41, sec. 5) shall apply to all contracts of the Authority for services and to all of its purchases of supplies except when the aggregate amount involved is less than $300.

"(c) The use of funds made available for the purposes of this act shall be subject to the provisions of section 2 of title 3 of the Treasury and Post Office Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1934 (47 Stat. 1489), and to make such provisions effective every contract or agreement of any kind pursuant to this act shall contain a provision identical to the one prescribed in section 3 of title 3 of such act.

Such report shall include operating statements of all projects under the jurisdiction of or receiving the assistance of the Authority, including summaries of the incomes of occupants, sizes of families, rentals, and other related information.

"SEC. 8. The Authority may from time to time make, amend, and rescind such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

"LOANS FOR LOW-RENT-HOUSING AND SLUM-CLEARANCE PROJECTS

"SEC. 9. The Authority may make loans to public-housing agencies to assist the development, acquisition, or administration of low-rent-housing or slum-clearance projects by such agencies. Where capital grants are made pursuant to section 11 the total amount of such loans outstanding on any one project and in which the Authority participates shall not exceed the development or acquisition cost of such project less all such capital grants, but in no event shall said loans exceed 85 percent of such cost. In the case of annual contributions in assistance of low rentals as provided in section 10 the total of such loans outstanding on any one project and in which the Authority participates shall not exceed 85 percent of the development or acquisition cost of such project. Such loans shall be secured by a first and a paramount lien against such projects and the revenues derived therefrom, shall bear interest at such rate not less than the going Federal rate at the time the loan is made, plus one-half of 1 percent, and shall be repaid within such period not exceeding 60 years, as may be deemed advisable by the Authority.

"ANNUAL CONTRIBUTIONS IN ASSISTANCE OF LOW RENTALS

"SEC. 10. (a) The Authority may make annual contributions to public housing agencies to assist in achieving and maintaining the low-rent character of their housing projects. The annual contributions for any such project shall be fixed in uniform amounts, and shall be paid in such amounts over a fixed period of years. No part of such annual contributions by the Authority shall be made available for any project unless and until the State, city, county, or other political subdivision in which such project is situated shall contribute at least 25 percent of the annual contributions herein provided in the form of cash or tax remissions, general or special, or tax exemptions. The Authority shall embody the provisions for such annual contributions in a contract guaranteeing their payment over such fixed period: Provided, That no annual contributions shall be made, and the Authority shall enter into no contract guaranteeing any annual contribution in connection with the development of any low-rent housing or slum-clearance project involving the construction of new dwellings, unless arrangements satisfactory to the Authority are made for the elimination by demolition, condemnation, and effective closing, or the compulsory repair or improvement of unsafe or insanitary dwellings situated in the locality or metropolitan area, substantially equal in number to the number of newly constructed dwellings provided by the project, except that such elimination may, in the discretion of the Authority, be deferred in any locality or metropolitan area where the shortage of decent, safe, or sanitary housing available to low-income families is so acute as to force dangerous overcrowding of such families.

"(b) Annual contributions shall be strictly limited to the amounts and periods necessary, in the determination of the Authority, to assure the low-rent character of the housing projects involved. Toward this end the Authority may prescribe regulations fixing the maximum contributions available under different circumstances, giving consideration to cost, location, size, rent-paying ability of prospective tenants or other factors bearing upon the amounts and periods of assistance needed to achieve and maintain low rentals. Such regulations may provide for rates of contribution based upon development, acquisition or administration cost, number of dwelling units, number of persons housed, or other appropriate factors: Provided, That the fixed contribution payable annually under any contract shall in no case exceed a sum equal to the annual yield at the going Federal rate of interest (at the time such contract is made) plus 1 percent upon the development or acquisition cost of the low-rent-housing or slum-clearance project involved: And provided further, That all such annual contributions shall be used first to apply toward any payment of interest or principal on any loan due to the Authority from the public-housing agency.

"(c) In case any contract for annual contributions is made for a period exceeding 20 years, the Authority shall reserve the right to reexamine the status of the low-rent housing project involved at the end of 10 years and every 5 years thereafter; and, at the time of any such reexamination, the Authority may make such modification (subject to all the provisions of this section) in the fixed and uniform amounts of subsequent annual contributions payable under such contract as is warranted by changed conditions and as is consistent with maintaining the low-rent character of the housing project involved. In no case shall any contract for annual contributions be made for a period exceeding 60 years.

"(d) All payments of annual contributions pursuant to this section shall be made out of any funds available to the Authority when such payments are due, except that its capital and its funds obtained through the issuance of obligations pursuant to section 20 (including repayments or other realizations of the principal of loans made out of such capital and funds) shall not be available for the payment of such annual contributions.

"(e) The Authority is authorized, on or after the date of the enactment of this act, to enter into contracts which provide for annual contributions aggregating not more than $5,000,000 per annum, on or after July 1, 1938, to enter into additional such contracts which provide for annual contributions aggregating not more than $7,500,000 per annum, and on or after July 1, 1939, to enter into additional such contracts which provide for annual contributions aggregating not more than $7,500,000 per annum. Without further authorization from Congress, no new contracts for annual contributions beyond those herein authorized shall be entered into by the Authority. The faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment of all annual contributions contracted for pursuant to this section, and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated in each fiscal year, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amounts necessary to provide for such payments.

"CAPITAL GRANTS IN ASSISTANCE OF LOW RENTALS

"SEC. 11. (a) As an alternative method of assistance to that provided in section 10, when any public housing agency so requests and demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Authority that such alternative method is better suited to the purpose of achieving and maintaining low rentals and to the other purposes of this act, capital grants may be made to such agency for such purposes. The capital grants thus made for any low-rent housing or slum-clearance project shall be paid in connection with its development or acquisition, and shall be strictly limited to the amounts necessary, in the determination of the Authority, to assure its low-rent character: Provided, however, That no capital grant shall be made for the development of any low-rent housing or slum-clearance project involving the construction of new dwellings, unless arrangements satisfactory to the Authority are made for the elimination by demolition, condemnation, and effective closing, or the compulsory repair or improvement of unsafe or insanitary dwellings situated in the locality or metropolitan area, substantially equal in number to the number of newly constructed dwelling units provided by the project, except that such elimination may, in the discretion of the Authority, be deferred in any locality or metropolitan area where the shortage of decent, safe, or sanitary housing available to low-income families is so acute as to force dangerous overcrowding of such families.

"(b) Pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, the Authority may make a capital grant for any low-rent housing or slum-clearance project, which shall in no case exceed 25 percent of its development or acquisition cost.

"(c) All payments of capital grants by the Authority pursuant to subsection (b) of this section shall be made out of any funds available to the Authority, except that its capital and its funds obtained through the issuance of obligations pursuant to section 20 (including repayments or other realizations of the principal of loans made out of such capital and funds) shall not be available for the payment of such capital grants.

"(d) The Authority is authorized, on or after the date of the enactment of this act, to make capital grants (pursuant to subsection (b) of this section) aggregating not more than $10,000,000, on or after July 1, 1938, to make additional capital grants aggregating not more than $10,000,000, and on or after July 1, 1939, to make additional capital grants aggregating not more than $10,000,000. Without further authorization from Congress, no capital grants beyond those herein authorized shall be made by the Authority.

"(e) To supplement any capital grant made by the Authority in connection with the development of any low-rent housing or slum-clearance project, the President may allocate to the Authority, from any funds available for the relief of unemployment, an additional capital grant to be expended for payment of labor used in such development: Provided, That such additional capital grant shall not exceed 15 percent of the development cost of the low-rent housing or slum-clearance project involved.

"(f) No capital grant pursuant to this section shall be made for any low-rent housing or slum-clearance project unless the public housing agency receiving such capital grants shall also receive, from the State, political subdivision thereof, or otherwise, a contribution for such project (in the form of cash, land, or the value, capitalized at the going Federal rate of interest, of community facilities or services for which a charge is usually made or tax remissions or tax exemptions) in an amount not less than 25 percent of its development or acquisition cost.

"DISPOSAL OF FEDERAL PROJECTS

"SEC. 12. (a) It is hereby declared to be the purpose of Congress to provide for the orderly disposal of any low-rent housing projects hereafter transferred to or acquired by the Authority through the sale or leasing of such projects as hereinafter provided; and, in order to continue the relief of Nation-wide unemployment and in order to avoid waste pending such sale or lease, to provide for the completion and temporary administration of such projects by the Authority.

"(b) As soon as practicable the Authority shall sell its Federal projects or divest itself of their management through leases.

"(c) The Authority may sell a Federal project only to a public housing agency. Any such sale shall be for a consideration, in whatever form may be satisfactory to the Authority, equal at least to the amount which the Authority determines to be the fair value of the project for housing purposes of a low-rent character (making such adjustment as the Authority deems advisable for any annual contributions which may hereafter be given hereunder in aid of the project), less such allowance for depreciation as the Authority shall fix. Such project shall then become eligible for loans pursuant to section 9, and either annual contributions pursuant to section 10 or a capital grant pursuant to section 11. Any obligation of the purchaser accepted by the Authority as part of the consideration for the sale of such project shall be deemed a loan pursuant to section 9.

"(d) The Authority may lease any Federal low-rent-housing project, in whole or in part, to a public housing agency. The lessee of any project, pursuant to this paragraph, shall assume and pay all management, operation, and maintenance costs, together with payments, if any, in lieu of taxes, and shall pay to the Authority such annual sums as the Authority shall determine are consistent with maintaining the low-rent character of such project. The provisions of section 321 of the act of June 30, 1932 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 40, sec. 303 b), shall not apply to any lease pursuant to this act.

"(e) In the administration of any Federal low-rent-housing project pending sale or lease, the Authority shall fix the rentals at the amounts necessary to pay all management, operation, and maintenance costs, together with payments, if any, in lieu of taxes, plus such additional amounts as the Authority shall determine are consistent with maintaining the low-rent character of such project.

"GENERAL POWERS OF THE AUTHORITY

"SEC. 13. (a) The Authority may foreclose on any property or commence any action to protect or enforce any right conferred upon it by any law, contract, or other agreement. The Authority may bid for and purchase at any foreclosure by any party or at any other sale, or otherwise acquire, and may administer, any low-rent-housing project which it previously owned or in connection with which it has made a loan pursuant to section 9, annual contributions pursuant to section 10, or capital grants pursuant to section 11.

"(b) The acquisition by the Authority of any real property pursuant to this act shall not deprive any State or political subdivision thereof of its civil and criminal jurisdiction in and over such property, or impair the civil rights under the State or local law of the inhabitants on such property; and, insofar as any such jurisdiction may have been taken away or any such rights impaired by reason of the acquisition of any property transferred to the Authority pursuant to section 4 (c), such jurisdiction and such rights are hereby fully restored.

"(c) The Authority may enter into agreements to pay annual sums in lieu of taxes to any State or political subdivision thereof with respect to any real property owned by the Authority. The amount so paid for any year upon any such property shall not exceed the taxes that would be paid to the State or subdivision, as the case may be, upon such property if it were not exempt from taxation thereby.

"(d) The authority may procure insurance against any loss in connection with its property and other assets (including mortgages), in such amounts, and from such insurers, as it deems desirable.

"(e) The Authority may sell or exchange at public or private sale, or lease, any real property (except low-rent-housing projects, the disposition of which is governed elsewhere in this act) or personal property, and sell or exchange any securities or obligations, upon such terms as it may fix. The Authority may borrow on the security of any real or personal property owned by it, or on the security of the revenues to be derived therefrom, and may use the proceeds of such loans for the purposes of this act.

"SEC. 14. Subject to the specific limitations or standards in this act governing the terms of sales, rentals, leases, loans, contracts for annual contributions, contracts for capital grants, or other agreements, the Authority may, whenever it deems it necessary or desirable in the fulfillment of the purposes of this act, consent to the modification, with respect to rate of interest, time of payment of any installment of principal or interest, security, amount of annual contribution, or any other term, of any contract or agreement of any kind to which the Authority is a party or which has been transferred to it pursuant to this act. Any rule of law contrary to this provision shall be deemed inapplicable.

"SEC. 15. In order to insure that the low-rent character of housing projects will be preserved, and that the other purposes of this act will be achieved, it is hereby provided that—

"(1) When a loan is made pursuant to section 9 for a low-rent-housing project the Authority may retain the right, in the event of a substantial breach of the condition (which shall be embodied in the loan agreement) providing for the maintenance of the low-rent character of the housing project involved or in the event of the acquisition of such project by a third party in any manner including a bona-fide foreclosure under a mortgage or other lien held by a third party, to increase the interest payable thereafter on the balance of said loan then held by the Authority to a rate not in excess of the going Federal rate (at the time of such breach or acquisition) plus 2 percent per annum or to declare the unpaid principal on said loan due forthwith.

"(2) When a loan is made pursuant to section 9 for a slum-clearance project the Authority shall retain the right, in the event of the leasing or acquisition of such project by a third party in any manner including a bona-fide foreclosure under a mortgage or other lien held by a third party, to increase the interest payable thereafter on the balance of said loan then held by the Authority to a rate not in excess of the going Federal rate (at the time of such leasing or acquisition) plus 2 percent per annum or to declare the unpaid principal on said loan due forthwith.

"(3) When a contract for annual contributions is made pursuant to section 10, the Authority shall retain the right, in the event of a substantial breach of the condition (which shall be embodied in such contract) providing for the maintenance of the low-rent character of the housing project involved, to reduce or terminate the annual contributions payable under such contract. In the event of the acquisition of such project by a third party in any manner including a bona-fide foreclosure under a mortgage or other lien held by a third party, such annual contributions shall terminate.

"(4) The Authority may also insert in any contract for loans, annual contributions, capital grants, sale, lease, mortgage, or any other agreement or instrument made pursuant to this act, such other covenants, conditions, or provisions as it may deem necessary in order to insure the low-rent character of the housing project involved.

"(5) With respect to housing projects on which construction is hereafter initiated, the Authority shall make loans, grants, and annual contributions only for such low-rent housing projects as it finds are to be undertaken in such a manner (a) that such projects will not be of elaborate or expensive design or materials and economy will be promoted both in construction and administration and (b) that the average construction cost of the dwelling units (excluding land and nondwelling facilities) in any such project is not greater than the average construction cost of dwelling units currently produced by private enterprise, in the locality or metropolitan area concerned, under the legal building requirements applicable to the proposed site, and under labor standards not lower than those prescribed in this act. The Authority shall determine, in making loans, grants, or annual contributions for projects hereafter initiated, that, in each fiscal year, the average family-dwelling-unit cost (as herein defined) shall not exceed $5,000.

"(1) The provisions of the act of August 30, 1935, entitled 'An act to amend the act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings' (49 Stat. 1011), and of the act of August 24, 1935, entitled 'An act requiring contracts for the construction, alteration, and repair of any public building or public work of the United States to be accompanied by a performance bond protecting the United States and by an additional bond for the protection of persons furnishing material and labor for the construction, alteration, or repair of said public buildings or public work' (U. S. C., 1934 edition, Sup. II, title 40, secs. 270a to 270d, inclusive), shall apply to contracts in connection with the development or administration of low-rent housing or slum-clearance projects and the furnishing of materials and labor for such projects: Provided, That suits shall be brought in the name of the Authority and that the Authority shall itself perform the duties prescribed by section 3 (a) of the act of August 30, 1935, and section 3 of the act of August 24, 1935.

"(2) Any contract for loans, annual contributions, capital grants, sale, or lease pursuant to this act shall contain a provision requiring that the wages or fees prevailing in the locality, as determined or adopted (subsequent to a determination under applicable State or local law) by the Authority, shall be paid to all architects, technical engineers, draftsmen, technicians, laborers, and mechanics employed in the development or administration of the low-rent housing or slum-clearance project involved; and the Authority may require certification as to compliance with the provisions of this paragraph prior to making any payment under such contract.

"(3) The act entitled 'An act limiting the hours of daily services of laborers and mechanics employed upon work done for the United States, or for any Territory, or for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes', as amended (37 Stat. 137), shall apply to contracts of the Authority for work in connection with the development and administration of low-rent-housing or slum-clearance projects.

"(4) The benefits of the act entitled 'An act to provide compensation for employees of United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes' (39 Stat. 742), shall extend to officers and employees of the Authority.

"(5) The provisions of sections 1 and 2 of the act of June 13, 1934 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 40, secs. 276 (b) and 276 (c), shall apply to any low-rent housing or slum-clearance project financed in whole or in part with funds made available pursuant to this act.

"(6) Any contractor engaged on any project financed in whole or in part with funds made available pursuant to this act shall report monthly to the Secretary of Labor, and shall cause all subcontractors to report in like manner (within 5 days after the close of each calendar month, on forms to be furnished by the United States Department of Labor), as to the number of persons on their respective pay rolls on the particular project, the aggregate amount of such pay rolls, the total man-hours worked, and itemized expenditures for materials. Any such contractor shall furnish to the Department of Labor the names and addresses of all subcontractors on the work at the earliest date practicable.

"FINANCIAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 17. The Authority shall have a capital stock of $1,000,000, which shall be subscribed by the United States and paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any available funds. Receipt for such payment shall be issued to the Secretary of the Treasury by the Authority and shall evidence the stock ownership of the United States of America.

"SEC. 18. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $26,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, of which $1,000,000 shall be available to pay the subscription to the capital stock of the Authority. Such sum, and all receipts and assets of the Authority, shall be available for the purposes of this act until expended.

"SEC. 19. Any funds available under any act of Congress for allocation for housing or slum clearance may, in the discretion of the President, be allocated to the Authority for the purposes of this act.

"SEC. 20. (a) The Authority is authorized to issue obligations, in the form of notes, bonds, or otherwise, which it may sell to obtain funds for the purposes of this act. The Authority may issue such obligations in an amount not to exceed $100,000,000 on or after the date of enactment of this act, an additional amount not to exceed $200,000,000 on or after July 1, 1938, and an additional amount not to exceed $200,000,000 on or after July 1, 1939. Such obligations shall be in such forms and denominations, mature within such periods not exceeding 60 years from date of issue, bear such rates of interest not exceeding 4 percent per annum, be subject to such terms and conditions, and be issued in such manner and sold at such prices as may be prescribed by the Authority, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(b) Such obligations shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority.

"(c) Such obligations shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed upon their face by the United States as to the payment of both interest and principal, and, in the event that the Authority shall be unable to make any such payment upon demand when due, payments shall be made to the holder by the Secretary of the Treasury with money hereby authorized to be appropriated for such purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. To the extent of such payment the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holder.

"(d) Such obligations shall be lawful investments and may be accepted as security for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or agency thereof. The Secretary of the Treasury is likewise authorized to purchase any such obligations, and for such purchases he may use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are extended to include any such purchases. The Secretary of the Treasury may at any time sell any of the obligations acquired by him pursuant to this section, and all redemptions, purchases, and sales by him of such obligations shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States.

"(e) Such obligations may be marketed for the Authority at its request by the Secretary of the Treasury, utilizing all the facilities of the Treasury Department now authorized by law for the marketing of obligations of the United States.

"SEC. 21. (a) Any money of the Authority not otherwise employed may be deposited, subject to check, with the Treasurer of the United States or in any Federal Reserve bank, or may be invested in obligations of the United States or used in the purchase or retirement or redemption of any obligations issued by the Authority.

"(b) The Federal Reserve banks are authorized and directed to act as depositories, custodians, and fiscal agents for the Authority in the general exercise of its powers, and the Authority may reimburse any such bank for its services in such manner as may be agreed upon.

"(c) The Authority may be employed as a financial agent of the Government. When designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, and subject to such regulations as he may prescribe, the Authority shall be a depository of public money, except receipts from customs.

"(d) Not more than 10 percent of the funds provided for in this act, either in the form of a loan, grant, or annual contribution, shall be expended within any one State.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 22. All general penal statutes relating to the larceny, embezzlement, or conversion or to the improper handling, retention, use, or disposal of public moneys or property of the United States shall apply to the moneys and property of the Authority and to moneys and properties of the United States entrusted to the Authority.

"SEC. 23. Any person who, with intent to defraud the Authority or to deceive any director, officer, or employee thereof or any officer or employee of the United States, makes any false entry in any book of the Authority or makes any false report or statement to or for the Authority shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"SEC. 24. Any person who shall receive any compensation, rebate, or reward, or shall enter into any conspiracy, collusion, or agreement, express or implied, with intent to defraud the Authority or with intent unlawfully to defeat its purposes, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"SEC. 25. Any person who induces or influences the Authority to purchase or acquire any property or to enter into any contract and willfully fails to disclose any interest, legal or equitable, which he has in such property or in the property to which such contract relates, or any special benefit which he expects to receive as a result of such contract shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"SEC. 26. No individual association, partnership, or corporation shall use the words 'United States Housing Authority', or any combination of these four words, as the name, or part thereof, under which he or it shall do business. Any such use shall constitute a misdemeanor and shall be punishable by a fine not exceeding $1,000.

"SEC. 27. Wherever the application of the provisions of this act conflicts with the application of the provisions of Public, No. 837, approved June 29, 1936 (49 Stat. 2025); Public, No. 845, approved June 29, 1936 (49 Stat. 2035); or any other act of the United States dealing with housing or slum clearance; or any Executive order, regulation, or other order thereunder, the provisions of this act shall prevail.

"SEC. 28. The President is hereby authorized to make available to the Alley Dwelling Authority, from any funds appropriated or otherwise provided to carry out the purposes of this act, such sums as he deems necessary to carry out the purposes of the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act, approved June 12, 1934 (Public, No. 307, 73d Cong.). Such sums shall be deposited in the Conversion of Inhabited Alleys Fund and thereafter shall remain immediately available for the purposes of the District of Columbia Alley Dwelling Act.

"SEC. 29. Notwithstanding any other evidences of the intention of Congress, it is hereby declared to be the controlling intent of Congress that if any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of this act, or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

"SEC. 30. This act may be cited as the 'United States Housing Act of 1937.'"

INVESTIGATION OF EXECUTIVE AGENCIES OF THE GOVERNMENT (S. REPT. NO. 1275)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, as chairman of the Senate Select Committee to Investigate the Executive Agencies of the Government, I submit and ask to have printed in the RECORD a preliminary report from that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The Select Committee to Investigate the Executive Agencies of the Government was created under Senate Resolution 217, Seventy-fourth Congress, passed February 24, 1936, "to make a full and complete study of all the activities of the departments, bureaus, boards, commissions, independent agencies, and all other agencies of the executive branch of the Government with a view to determining whether the activities of any such agency conflict with or overlap the activities of any other such agency and whether, in the interest of simplification, efficiency, and economy, any of such agencies should be coordinated with other agencies or abolished or the personnel thereof reduced."

The committee was directed to report to the Seventy-fifth Congress, and from time to time thereafter, the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

The committee proceeded to its assignment with an attitude of looking before leaping into a task of such magnitude. It retained the Brookings Institution, in conjunction with the President's committee on administrative management and the committee on reorganization of the House of Representatives, to make a functional and fact-finding survey of the agencies of the Government. The Brookings Institution recently completed that survey and submitted it to the committee in the form of a report of more than 500,000 words.

The Brookings Institution incorporated in the report its own observations and conclusions for the benefit of the committee. This committee has not had the time sufficient to study and digest the report. Therefore, at this time it wishes neither to accept nor reject the conclusions reached or the recommendations suggested by the Brookings Institution. The committee proposes to continue its careful study of the report and to report further from time to time in accordance with the resolution.

However, the committee is pleased to submit the report of the Brookings Institution in its entirety, with the understanding that the observations, conclusions, and recommendations therein contained are not to be construed as committee recommendations, and that they are not necessarily the sense or views of the committee as a whole, or any member thereof, and ask leave to have the report printed for the purposes of general information and reference for Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives and the public generally.

The committee, in compliance with the terms of the resolution, proposes to continue its study of the agencies and their relationships by further analysis of the Brookings Institution report and further study at other sources of information and report its findings.

The committee takes this opportunity to inform the Senate that it plans a further and detailed and exhaustive study of the personnel of the executive agencies of the Government, as directed by the resolution, and to report to the Senate, as a separate phase of its work, its findings and recommendations in this tremendous and engaging field.

STATEMENT OF APPROPRIATIONS, FIRST SESSION, SEVENTY-FIFTH CONGRESS

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, it is customary at the end of each session of Congress to present for the RECORD a comparative statistical statement of appropriations. I desire now to have inserted in the body of the RECORD two statements compiled by the clerks of the Appropriations Committee of the respective Houses.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1. This table shows the appropriations made during the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress to be	$9,389,488,893.06
2. This table shows the appropriations made during the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress to be less than same passed during the second session of the Seventy-fourth Congress	946,910,379.59
3. This table shows by deducting $2,237,000,000 for Adjusted Compensation Payment Act from the appropriations of the 74th Cong., 2d sess., leaves appropriations amounting to $8,099,399,272.65. By taking into account this deduction, the appropriations made during the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress would be in excess of the appropriations of the previous session	1,290,089,620.41

SMALL CLAIMS BRANCH IN MUNICIPAL COURT OF THE DISTRICT

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on the 6th instant, Senate bill 1835, establishing a small claims and conciliation branch in the municipal court of the District of Columbia for improving the administration of justice in small cases and providing assistance to needy litigants, and for other purposes, was passed. A motion was made and is pending to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

PREVENTION OF TAX EVASION AND AVOIDANCE

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8234) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, prevent tax evasion and avoidance, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The tax bill is before the Senate. Are there any further amendments to be offered? Is there any further debate?

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I have had in mind offering an amendment providing for a complete investigation of the entire tax situation. The amendment would be inserted at the end of the bill and would add a new section as follows:

SEC. 604. The Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation is directed to make a study of the Federal, State, and local tax systems to discover their interrelationship and overlapping, to study the comparative burdens imposed by these several tax systems on the different sources of revenue with the end of discovering new sources of revenue, of remedying duplications and conflicts that might exist in the tax system, and of removing present taxes that are economically unsound in the multifarious taxing units of this country.

In order to carry out this inquiry an appropriation of $50,000 to the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation is hereby authorized. The committee is authorized to employ such experts and assistants as are necessary, without regard to the Classification Act of 1923. The committee is further authorized to call upon the several departments of the Government for such assistance as they are able to render to it. The committee is directed to report its findings and recommendation to the Congress not later than the 15th of February 1938.

In order to carry out the purpose of the amendment it was my purpose to ask for the necessary appropriation to enable the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation to conduct the investigation. I understand, indirectly, however, that such an investigation is already in progress. Before offering the amendment I should like to ask the chairman of the Finance Committee regarding it.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator is correct in his understanding. The Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation are now making such a study. They have submitted already a very voluminous report and will continue their studies. I do not think it necessary and, therefore, hope the Senator will not offer his amendment.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the study be completed so that it will be in the hands of Congress early in another session?

Mr. HARRISON. The first report is already completed and is available. We are going to make further studies and reports just as soon as possible.

Mr. BRIDGES. In that case I shall not offer the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. Are there any further amendments to be offered? If not, the question is, Shall the amendments be engrossed and the bill be read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 8234) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the tax bill may be printed with the Senate amendments properly numbered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ASSIGNMENT OF NAVAL OFFICERS TO DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

The bill (S. 2482) to provide for the assignment of officers of the Navy for duty under the Department of Commerce and appointment to positions therein was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I do not think the bill ought to be passed in the absence of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. On a previous call of the calendar he objected to its consideration.

Briefly, a bill was presented by the administration and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs which would have permitted the appointment by the President of active or retired naval or Army officers to civilian positions under the United States Government. That proposal for general authority was unanimously rejected by the committee. Under general laws, Army and naval officers cannot be appointed to civil positions except in specified exceptions.

Later a bill was presented by the administration which the committee reported favorably permitting the President, if he chose, to appoint a naval officer to the Bureau of Marine Inspection in the Department of Commerce. The Bureau of Marine Inspection has to do with the safety and equipment of navigable ships. The Department of Commerce complain that they are unable to employ one who is free from connections or previous service with a private steamship line. The committee thought it was in the public interest that the President, in the event he could not obtain from civilian life a man possessing the education, training, or broad experience of a naval officer should have authority to appoint an active or retired officer of the Navy to this Bureau. That is the reason why the bill limits authority of appointment to only one person in the Department of Commerce.

However, I do not think the bill ought to pass until the Senator from Virginia is present, so I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

REFUND OF COTTON, TOBACCO, AND POTATO TAXES

The bill (S. 2601) to provide for refund of amounts collected as tax under the Bankhead Cotton Act, 1934, the Kerr Tobacco Act, as amended, and the Potato Act of 1935 was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Let the bill go over.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. AUSTIN. Very well.

Mr. BARKLEY. My colleague the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN] has an amendment which he desires to offer. The bill provides for the refund of certain taxes collected from farmers under the Smith-Kerr Tobacco Act and the Bankhead Cotton Act. Unless the bill is passed a great number of lawsuits may be filed against the Government for the recovery of the tax. I hope the Senator will not object to its present consideration.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, probably due to the fact that there was some confusion at the time we discussed the matter the other day, I did not get a clear idea of the particular matter connected with the bill, which causes me to object to its consideration at this time on the call of the calendar. If that could be cleared up within a few moments, I might be disposed to withdraw my objection.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I think the Senator's confusion as well as my own with reference to the matter grows out of an amendment adopted in the Committee on Claims and which has brought forth very extensive protests from the Department. It is my purpose, if we take up the bill for consideration, to ask that that amendment be rejected. If that were done the subject matter would then relate to the sole question of refunding taxes actually paid into the Treasury, taxes which were illegally collected under an unconstitutional act, as has been held by every court that has passed on it.

For instance, a tobacco grower was limited to 2,000 pounds. If he raised more than that, say 3,000 pounds, he had to pay a tax on 1,000 pounds, or if he did not come under the act or agreement he had to pay a certain penalty anyway. Such men are the little tobacco growers. The big ones have gone into court and will be able to recover the taxes thus improperly paid, but the poor little farmer, who perhaps has $10 or $25 involved, can never get his money back except through the provisions of the bill. That is really all there is to the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. Did the Federal Government employ the funds so illegally collected, as well as the funds legally collected, in obtaining a reduction of production through the payment of subsidies or bounties or other sums to farmers who produced less cotton?

Mr. LOGAN. I can only say to the Senator that I do not know what the Government did with the money; but those from whom it was collected got no benefit at all. They just paid the penalty.. Let me say to the Senator, furthermore, that some of the warehousemen who declined to obey the law, the larger taxpayers, last year had the money refunded to them by a resolution of Congress.

Those who did obey the law and paid the tax, whatever it was, are the ones who are having to go to court and bring suit on claims in order to collect; and with that amendment out, the bill does not cover anything except what the Government took from persons from whom it had no right to take it under the law.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask the Senator from Kentucky if it is not necessary for the Senate to take action upon a change in the language of section 2, line 2, on page 2, if the Senator is to have the question he mentions taken into conference? The first paragraph in the section reads as follows:

SEC. 2. (a) Such refund may be allowed only to the person or persons who paid, or for whose account there was paid, the tax.

It occurs to me that under that language there might be two claimants to the same tax, the difficulty being in the phrase "or for whose account there was paid."

Mr. LOGAN. I will say to the Senator that I think the matter is perfectly clear to those who are familiar with it, but I, myself, do not understand that particular feature; and if the Senator wants that language stricken out, I shall be willing to agree that it may be stricken out.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then, Mr. President, I will withdraw my objection to proceeding to the consideration of the bill if the Senator will undertake to strike out the phrase "or for whose account there was paid."

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will offer that amendment when we are considering the bill, the words to which he refers may be stricken out.

Mr. AUSTIN. I withdraw the objection, but I do so with the understanding that this amendment will be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator may object at any time during the proceedings. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2601), which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, on page 2, line 2, I move to strike out the words "or for whose account there was paid."

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, on page 3, line 18, after the word "shall", it is proposed to strike out "not be considered as payment of tax" and insert "be considered as payment of tax to the extent of the actual amount paid for such certificate by the claimant."

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, that is the amendment which I assured the Senator and several other Senators that I would ask to have rejected, because it is the one that caused all the trouble.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 4, on page 4, line 8, after the word "Secretary", it is proposed to insert:

Provided, however, That claims filed prior to the passage of this act may be considered without the filing of another claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert, at the proper place in the bill, the following:

That section 903 of the Revenue Act of 1936 is amended by striking out "July 1, 1937" and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1938."

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, in explanation of this amendment, I desire to say that on July 1, 1937, the time expired within which processors were required to file their claims for refunds of the processing tax. Many of the smaller processors have been unable to present their claims within the limitation originally fixed by the act, because the forms were late in getting out and because, as we all know, the smaller processor does not have the kind of books that the larger fellow has; and consequently the smaller one, in many cases, was unable to accumulate his data and comply with the requirements of the Department within the short period of limitation originally fixed by the statute. This amendment would simply extend the time until the 1st of January 1938 to enable these claimants, largely the smaller ones, to finish filing their claims.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MINTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. To what bill does this amendment apply?

Mr. MINTON. It is an amendment of certain provisions of the Revenue Act of 1936. It does not apply to this bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. What is the parliamentary status of Senate bill 2601?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. AUSTIN. The amendment is offered to Senate bill 2601?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is offered to this bill.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill (S. 2601) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under regulations approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized and directed to refund any amount paid to or collected by a collector of internal revenue as tax (which for the purposes of this act shall include penalties and interest), under the Bankhead Cotton Act of 1934 (48 Stat. 598), as amended; Kerr Tobacco Act (48 Stat. 1275), as amended; and under the Potato Act of 1935 (49 Stat. 750).

SEC. 2. (a) Such refund may be allowed only to the person or persons who paid, or for whose account there was paid, the tax.

(b) In the case of amounts paid as tax under the Bankhead Cotton Act with respect to the ginning of cotton—

(1) Refund shall be allowed to the ginner of the cotton only to the extent that the ginner has not shifted the burden of the tax by including it in any charge or fee for ginning, or by collecting it from the owner or owners of the cotton ginned, or in any manner whatsoever.

(2) Refund shall be allowed to the owner or owners of the cotton at the time of ginning, to the extent that the amount of tax was shifted to such owner or owners by the cotton ginner and was not shifted by such owner or owners to other persons. In such cases, but only for the purposes of this act, the tax shall be considered to have been paid by the ginner to the United States for the account of such owner or owners.

(3) In the case of seed cotton sold by a producer prior to the ginning thereof, refund shall be allowed to such producer to the extent that the burden of tax was shifted to him.

(4) As to tax paid to a collector of internal revenue by a person other than the ginner, as in the case of tax paid under section 4 (f) of the Bankhead Cotton Act, refund shall be allowed to and claim therefor shall be filed by the person or persons who paid such tax to the collector of internal revenue.

(5) In the case of any claim for refund filed by a person other than the ginner of the cotton with respect to which the tax was paid, the Commissioner may require that there be submitted a waiver of refund executed by such ginner.

(c) No refund may be allowed of any amount paid as tax under the statutes referred to in section 1 with respect to which refund or reimbursement has been heretofore made by the Secretary of Agriculture or the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

(d) For the purposes of this act, satisfaction of tax liability by surrender or submission of tax-exemption certificates, tax-payment warrants, or tax-exemption stamps shall not be considered as payment of tax.

SEC. 3. Except as authorized by this act, no refund shall be made or allowed, in pursuance of court decision or otherwise, of any amount paid as tax under the statutes set out in section 1.

SEC. 4. No refund shall be made or allowed, in pursuance of court decision or otherwise, of any amount paid by or collected from any person as tax under the statutes set forth in section 1 unless after the enactment of this act and prior to July 1, 1938, a claim for such refund of such amount by the person entitled thereto has been filed in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary: Provided, however, That claims filed prior to the passage of this act may be considered without the filing of another claim. All evidence relied upon in support of such claim shall be clearly set forth under oath.

SEC. 5. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no court shall have jurisdiction of any suit or proceeding, whether brought before or after the date of enactment of this act, for the recovery, recoupment, set-off, refund, or credit of, or counterclaim for, any amount paid by or collected from any person as a tax under the statutes set out in section 1 (a) before the expiration of 6 months from the date of filing a claim therefor under this act, unless the Commissioner renders a decision thereon within that time, or (b) after the expiration of 2 years from the date of mailing by registered mail by the Commissioner to the claimant a notice of disallowance of that part of the claim to which such suit or proceeding relates. Any consideration or any action by the Commissioner with respect to such claim following the mailing of notice of disallowance shall not operate to extend the period within which any suit or proceeding may be brought.

SEC. 6. Concurrent with the Court of Claims, the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction of cases to which this act applies, regardless of the amount in controversy, if such district courts would have had jurisdiction of such cases but for limitations under the Judicial Code, as amended, on jurisdiction of such courts based upon the amount in controversy.

SEC. 7. No interest shall be allowed by the Commissioner or by any court with respect to any amount paid or collected as tax under the statutes set out in section 1, except with respect to amounts refund of which is made or allowed under this act.

SEC. 8. In the absence of fraud the findings of fact and conclusions of law of the Commissioner upon the merits of any claim presented under this act, and the mathematical calculations therein, shall not be subject to review by any other administrative or accounting officer, employee, or agent of the United States.

SEC. 9. No collector of internal revenue or internal-revenue officer or employee shall be in any way liable to any person for any act done by him in the assessment or collection of any amount as tax under the statutes set out in section 1, or for the recovery of any money exacted by or paid to him and paid into the Treasury in performance of his official duties under the said acts, or if such collector or officer acted under the direction of the Secretary or other proper officer of the Government.

SEC. 10. No claim for refund shall be denied upon the ground that a proceeding to recover had become barred by the limitation provisions of the statutes set out in section 1.

SEC. 11. The Commissioner shall, with the approval of the Secretary, prescribe such rules and regulations as may be deemed necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 12. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sums that may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 13. That section 903 of the Revenue Act of 1936 is amended by striking out "July 1, 1937", and inserting in lieu thereof "January 1, 1938."

RESOLUTION AND BILL PASSED OVER

The resolution (S. Res. 140) authorizing an investigation of the delivery or nondelivery of mail to establishments where industrial strife is in progress was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2707) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of the Mack Copper Co. was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have heretofore objected to the consideration of this measure. I am not willing today to withdraw my objection. I have read the findings of the Court of Claims, and they do raise some questions which probably have not been fully considered; but I should like further time to look into the bill, and I therefore ask that it may be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

RETIREMENT OF FOREIGN COMMERCE SERVICE OFFICERS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 988) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce a Foreign Commerce Service of the United States, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1927, as amended, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce, with amendments.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this bill, judging by its size, seems to be a very formidable one. I hope the Senate will bear with me a moment until I make clear what it is about.

There are 94 employees of the Commerce Department in foreign service. They do not have retirement privileges, as do their brothers in the State Department. In consequence the Department of Commerce is embarrassed in its work abroad, because it happens on various occasions that it loses employees, who go over to the State Department.

While the bill seems a lengthy one, the meat of it is that under its terms the 94 persons who were not cared for under the Rogers Act will be given the same privileges as are other employees under the Rogers Act. It will cost the country nothing for 9 years. At the end of 9 years it will cost about $50,000 a year.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I recall, this is one of the bills to which I have heretofore objected.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Since that time I have looked into the bill more carefully, and I have no objection to its consideration.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. KING. My recollection is that when Mr. Coolidge was President of the United States, a very earnest effort was made under the direction of the then Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Hoover, to create a new foreign-service organization, and a bill for that purpose finally was enacted. I held up the bill for several years because I thought it was very unfair and very unjust. It discriminated against members of the State Department, giving the employees of the Commerce Department nearly double the salaries that were paid to men who had been in the Consular Service and Diplomatic Service for years, and the new men were to be appointed without any competitive examination. I felt that the new services was to be a rendezvous for political parasites, and I opposed the bill bitterly for a number of years, but finally it was passed. I know that it was not sympathized with by the then President of the United States.

I am wondering whether these Foreign Service officers are now paid the same salaries that were contemplated in the original bill, whether they have been brought under civil service, whether they are under the direction of the State Department, or whether they are roving officers, subject only to the orders of the Department of Commerce. If the latter, I shall oppose the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am very familiar with the bill proposed by Mr. Hoover when he was Secretary of Commerce. I was a member of the Commerce Committee at the time. The plan of his was, perhaps I might say, rather inflationary; but, as a matter of fact, this small number of employees have very modest salaries. Their salaries vary from $3,600 to, at the very extreme, $8,000, and there are very few of the latter. They are very intimately associated with the employees of the State Department.

Last summer I had occasion to travel a good many miles abroad, and I took pains to examine into what these commercial attachés were doing, and how they were cooperating with the State Department. I assure my friend from Utah that under the present arrangement there has been brought about, largely under this administration, a happier relationship than theretofore existed.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator, as an illustration, that when I was in London a number of years ago, some person connected with the State Department sent a telegram to our Ambassador in Great Britain to the effect that there was a potato blight down in Sicily. He immediately cabled, of course, to the State Department. A representative of the Foreign Service of the Department of Commerce learned of the matter in London from the State Department, and he cabled to the Department of Commerce. Then some representative of the Labor Department learned of it, and he cabled to the Labor Department. Then some representative of the Treasury Department learned of it through our Ambassador, and he cabled to the Treasury Department. Finally, every department of the Government which had ambassadors and employees and supernumeraries floating around through Great Britain and through Europe received cablegrams from them. The whole system then—and it has not been perfected as it should have been—was honeycombed with useless and unnecessary employees, and the expenditures were wholly disproportionate to any benefit that might have resulted.

I have felt from the beginning that all our foreign officials should be under the control of the Department of State.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me say to the Senator that since this administration came into power there has been brought about coordination and a dovetailing of the activities of the commercial attachés abroad with the State Department. Before any letter is sent out from any foreign place where there is a foreign commissioner of the Department of Commerce it goes through the State Department. It does not go directly to the Department of Commerce; it goes through the State Department. So I think the Senator from Utah has performed a good function; he has succeeded in bringing about a coordination which did not exist before.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the first amendment of the committee.

The amendments of the Committee on Commerce were, on page 2, line 6, after the word "commissioners", to strike out the comma and "and such clerks as may be appointed in accordance with the provisions of this act"; on page 4, line 1, before the word "appointments", strike out the word "asking" and insert the word "making"; on page 8, after line 5, to strike out:

"That there is hereby established in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce the Foreign Commerce Service of the United States (hereinafter referred to as the Foreign Commerce Service), consisting of officers to be graded in the following order and to be known as commercial attachés, assistant commercial attachés, trade commissioners, and assistant trade commissioners.

"This act may be cited as the Foreign Commerce Service Act.

"SEC. 2. Under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce (hereinafter referred to as the Secretary), the officers of the Foreign Commerce Service shall—

"(a) Promote the foreign commerce of the United States;

"(b) Investigate and report upon commercial and industrial conditions and activities in foreign countries which may be of interest to the United States;

"(c) Perform such other duties as the Secretary may direct in connection with the promotion of the industries, trade, or commerce of the United States;

"(d) Make such inspections of the Foreign Commerce Service as the Secretary may direct.

"SEC. 3. (a) The Secretary is authorized to appoint officers of the Foreign Commerce Service, but only after eligibility has been determined by examinations held by the Civil Service Commission and the Department of Commerce in coordination, under regulations approved by the Civil Service Commission, except that the Secretary may, with the approval of the Civil Service Commission, appoint without such examination any person who, prior to the date on which this act takes effect, has served, or has passed an examination for appointment, as commercial attaché, assistant commercial attaché, trade commissioner, assistant trade commissioner, commercial agent, or special agent in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce: Provided, That the Secretary is authorized to appoint officers of the Foreign Commerce Service, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, after 5 years of satisfactory service in an executive or quasi-executive position in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce or one of its district offices by transfer therefrom: Provided further, That no candidate shall be eligible for examination for appointment to the Foreign Commerce Service who is not an American citizen and who shall not have been such at least 15 years.

In making appointments to a grade and class and in fixing compensation the Secretary shall take into consideration the examination and record of the officer and the post to which assigned and the various commercial interests of the different sections of the country.

"(c) There shall be in the Department of Commerce a Board of Foreign Commerce Personnel for the Foreign Commerce Service, whose duty it shall be to submit recommendations to aid the Secretary of Commerce in making promotions and demotions and other changes in the Foreign Commerce Service. The Board shall be composed of the Assistant Directors of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. The efficiency ratings and recommendations for promotion made by the Board shall be subject to the approval of the Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

"(d) The Foreign Service Division of the Bureau shall assemble, record, and be the custodian of all available information in regard to the character, ability, conduct, quality of work, industry, experience, dependability, and general availability of Foreign Commerce Service officers, including reports of inspecting officers and efficiency reports of supervising officers. No charges against an officer that would adversely affect his efficiency rating or his value to the Service, if true, shall be taken into consideration in determining his efficiency rating except after the officer shall have had an opportunity to reply thereto: Provided, That the official appraisal of the officer concerned by officials of the Department of Commerce who are responsible for the administration of the Foreign Commerce Service shall not be considered as such a charge. The rulings of the Secretary of Commerce on any charges and replies thereto shall be final. The Chief of the Foreign Service Division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce shall be responsible for the keeping of accurate and impartial efficiency records of Foreign Commerce Service officers and shall take all measures necessary to insure their accuracy and impartiality. Not later than November 1, at least every 2 years, the Board of Foreign Commerce Personnel shall prepare a list in which all Foreign Commerce Service officers shall be graded in accordance with their relative efficiency and value to the Service. This list shall be submitted to the Director of the Bureau for his approval, and when approved by him shall be transmitted to the Secretary of Commerce with recommendations to serve as an aid to the Secretary in making promotions to the next higher class or for salary increases provided for under subdivision (e) of this section. The aforesaid correspondence and records shall be confidential, except to the President, the Secretary of Commerce, the Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, the members of the Board of Foreign Commerce Personnel, and such employees as may be assigned to work on such correspondence and records.

"(e) Subject to the approval of the Secretary of Commerce, all officers of the Foreign Commerce Service having a rating of satisfactory or better who shall have been in classes 4 or 5 for a continuous period of 9 months or more shall on the first day of each fiscal year be eligible for an increase of salary of $100 per annum, except that no officer shall receive under the provisions of this section a salary above the maximum of his class, and all such officers in classes 1, 2, or 3 shall in the same circumstances be eligible for an increase of $200: Provided, That increases in salary under the terms of this section shall be paid to Foreign Commerce Service officers only as the right to such increases accrues after July 1, 1937.

"(f) The Secretary is authorized to promote or demote in grade or class, to increase or decrease within the salary range fixed for the class the compensation of, and to separate from the service, officers of the Foreign Commerce Service, but in so doing the Secretary shall take into consideration the records of efficiency, determined in accordance with provisions of paragraphs (c), (d), and (e) of this section and the recommendation, approved by the Director of the Bureau, of the Board of Foreign Commerce Personnel.

"(g) Any officer of the Foreign Commerce Service may be assigned for duty in the United States for a period of not more then 3 years without change in grade, class, or salary, or with such changes as the Secretary may direct.

"(h) The Secretary of Commerce is authorized, whenever he deems it would be in the public interest, but not oftener than once in 3 years in the case of each officer, to order to the United States on his statutory leave of absence any foreign commerce officer serving abroad: Provided, That the expenses of transportation and subsistence of such officers and their immediate families, in traveling from their posts to their homes in the United States and return, shall be paid under the same rules and regulations applicable in the case of officers going to and returning from their posts under orders of the Secretary of Commerce when not on leave: Provided further, That while in the United States the services of such officers shall be available for trade conference work and for such other duties in the Department of Commerce and elsewhere in the United States as the Secretary of Commerce may prescribe.

"(i) The act of April 12, 1930 (46 Stat. 163), entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to establish in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce a Foreign Commerce Service of the United States, and for other purposes", approved March 3, 1927', is hereby repealed.

"(j) Whenever any Foreign Commerce officer dies in the discharge of his duty, there shall be paid to his widow or, if no widow survive him, then to his heirs at law, a sum of money equal to the allowance made to such officer for the time necessarily occupied in making the transit from his post of duty to his residence in the United States.

"SEC. 4. (a) Subject to the requirements of the civil-service laws and rules, the Secretary is authorized to appoint, fix the compensation of, promote, demote, and separate from the service such clerks and other assistants for officers of the Foreign Commerce Service as he may deem necessary.

"(b) When authorized by the Secretary and in accordance with the regulations of the Civil Service Commission, officers of the Foreign Commerce Service may employ in a foreign country, from time to time, fix the compensation of, and separate from the service such clerical and subclerical assistants as may be necessary.

"SEC. 5. (a) Any officer of the Foreign Commerce Service designated by the Secretary of Commerce shall, through the Department of State, be regularly and officially attached to the diplomatic mission of the United States in the country in which he is to be stationed. If any such officer is to be stationed in a country in which there is no diplomatic mission of the United States, appropriate recognition and standing, with full facilities for discharging his official duties, shall be arranged by the Department of State. The Secretary of State may reject the name of any such officer if in his judgment the assignment of such officer to the post designated would be prejudicial to the public policy of the United States.

"(b) No officer of the Foreign Commerce Service shall be considered as having the character of a public minister

"SEC. 6. (a) Any Foreign Commerce Service officer of whatever class detailed for duty in connection with trade conferences or international gatherings, congresses, or conferences, or for other special duty not at his post or in the Department of Commerce, except temporarily for purposes of consultation, shall be paid expenses for travel and subsistence at the rates prescribed by law.

"(b) The Secretary may authorize any officer of the Foreign Commerce Service to fix, in an amount not exceeding the allowance fixed for such officer, expenses for travel and subsistence for any clerical or subclerical assistant employed by such officer under subdivision (b) of section 4.

"(c) Any such officer, clerk, employee, or assistant, while on duty within the continental limits of the United States, shall be entitled to receive expenses for travel and subsistence, at the rate prescribed by law.

"(d) The Secretary is authorized, at posts where in his judgment it is required by the public interests for the purpose of meeting the unusual or excessive costs of living ascertained by him to exist, to grant compensation to Foreign Commerce Service officers stationed outside the continental limits of the United States, in addition to salaries and other allowances, within such appropriations as Congress may make for such purposes: Provided, That all such additional compensation and reasons therefor shall be reported to Congress with the annual budget: Provided further, That the provisions of this paragraph shall apply only to citizens of the United States.

"SEC. 7. Any appropriation available during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and thereafter for the Department of Commerce for the Foreign Commerce Service, for commercial attachés, and other employees and expenses, or for promoting commerce in Europe and other areas, South or Central America, Africa, or the Far East, all of which appropriations shall be after July 1, 1937, under a single head called 'Promoting commerce in areas outside the continental United States', shall be available for carrying out the provisions of this act, including the payment of salaries and compensation for personal services, in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, compensation of clerical assistants for Foreign Commerce officers at a rate not to exceed $3,000 per annum for each person employed, necessary janitor and messenger service, traveling and subsistence expenses and per-diem allowances, the purchase of necessary furniture and equipment, stationery and supplies, typewriting, adding, and computing and duplicating machines, accessories and repairs, the purchase of law books, books of reference and periodicals, uniforms, foreign and domestic newspapers, reports, documents, maps, plans, specifications, manuscripts, and all other necessary publications, ice and drinking water for office use, the payment of rent outside the District of Columbia, and all other necessary incidental expenses; payment in advance of rent, telephone, subscriptions to publications, and other charges is authorized where custom or practice in a foreign country requires. With the approval of the Secretary, an officer of the Foreign Commerce Service may enter into leases for office quarters for periods not exceeding 10 years.

"SEC. 8. The purchase of supplies and equipment or the procurement of services for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, in foreign countries, may be made in open market without compliance with the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5), in the manner common among businessmen, when the aggregate amount of the purchase or the service does not exceed $100 in any instance.

"SEC. 9. The Secretary of Commerce shall prescribe rules and regulations for the establishment of a Foreign Commerce Service retirement and disability system to be administered under his direction and in accordance with the following:

"(a) The Secretary shall submit annually a comparative report showing all receipts and disbursements on account of refunds, allowances, and annuities, together with the total number of persons receiving annuities and the amounts paid them, and shall submit annually estimates of appropriations necessary to continue this section in full force and such appropriations are hereby authorized: Provided, That in no event shall the aggregate total appropriation exceed the aggregate total of the contributions of the Foreign Commerce Service theretofore made, and accumulated interest thereon.

"(b) There is created a special fund to be known as the Foreign Commerce Service retirement and disability fund.

"(c) Five percent of the basic salary of all Foreign Commerce officers eligible to retirement shall be contributed to the Foreign Commerce Service retirement and disability fund, and, beginning on July 1, 1937, the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to cause such deductions to be made at the end of each month and deposited with the Treasury Department to the credit of the Foreign Commerce Service retirement and disability fund for the payment of annuities, refunds, bonuses, and allowances in accordance with the provisions of this act.

"(d) When any officer of the Foreign Commerce Service has reached the age of 65 years and rendered at least 15 years of service he shall be retired: Provided, That if any such officer shall have served 30 years he may be retired at his own request before reaching the age of 65 years.

"(f) Those officers who retire before having contributed for each year of service shall have withheld from their annuities to the credit of the Foreign Commerce Service retirement and disability fund such proportion of 5 percent as the number of years in which they did not contribute bears to the total length of service: Provided, That no deductions shall be made from the annuities of those who have contributed 30 years, and no officer shall be required to contribute more than 30 years in any circumstances.

"(g) The Secretary of the Treasury is directed to invest from time to time in interest-bearing securities of the United States such portions of the Foreign Commerce Service retirement and disability fund as in his judgment may not be immediately required for the payment of annuities, refunds, and allowances, and the income derived from such investments shall constitute a part of said fund.

"(h) None of the moneys mentioned in this section shall be assignable either in law or equity, or be subject to execution, levy, or attachment, garnishment, or other legal process.

"(i) In case an annuitant dies without having received in annuities an amount equal to the total amount of his contributions from salary with interest thereon at 4 percent per annum compounded annually up to the time of his death, the excess of said accumulated contributions over the said annuity payments shall be paid to his or her legal representatives; and in case a Foreign Commerce officer shall die without having reached the retirement age the total amount of his contribution with accrued interest, after deducting any payments under the provisions of subdivision (j), shall be paid to his legal representatives.

"Fees for examinations under this provision, together with reasonable traveling and other expenses incurred in order to submit to examination, shall be paid out of the Foreign Commerce Service retirement and disability fund. When the annuity is discontinued under this provision before the annuitant has received a sum equal to the total amount of his contributions, with accrued interest, the difference shall be paid to him or to his legal representatives.

"(k) The Secretary is authorized from time to time to establish a list of places which by reason of climatic or other extreme conditions are to be classed as unhealthful posts, and each year of duty subsequent to July 1, 1912, at such posts, inclusive of regular leaves of absence, of officers hereafter retired, shall be counted as 1½ years, and so on, in like proportion in reckoning the length of service for the purpose of retirement, fractional months being considered as full months in computing such service: Provided, however, That the Secretary may at any time cancel the designation of any places as unhealthful without affecting any credit which has accrued for service at such posts prior to the date of the cancelation.

"(l) Whenever an officer becomes separated from the Foreign Commerce Service without being eligible for retirement on an annuity, the total amount of contribution from his salary, with interest thereon at 4 percent compounded annually up to the date of such separation, shall be returned to him.

"(m) The Secretary is authorized to expend from surplus money to the credit of the Foreign Commerce Service retirement and disability fund an amount not exceeding $1,000 per annum for the expenses necessary in carrying out the provisions of this section, including actuarial advice.

"(n) Any officer of the Foreign Commerce Service who may hereafter be reinstated, appointed, or transferred to a position in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce shall, with the approval of the Director of such Bureau, be entitled to all the benefits of this section in the same manner and under the same conditions as officers of the Foreign Commerce Service.

"(o) For the purpose of this section the period of service shall be computed from the date of entry on duty as commercial attaché, assistant commercial attaché, trade commissioner, or assistant trade commissioner, and shall include periods of service at different times as an officer of the Foreign Commerce Service, or while on assignment to the Department of Commerce, or on special duty or service in another Department or establishment of the Government, but all periods of separation from the service and so much of any period of leave of absence without pay as may exceed 6 months shall be excluded: Provided, That service in an executive or quasi-executive position or as a clerk in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce or one of its domestic or foreign offices prior to appointment as an officer of the Foreign Commerce Service may be included in the period of service, in which cases the officer shall pay into the Foreign Commerce Service retirement and disability fund a special contribution equal to 5 percent of his annual salary for each year of such employment, with interest thereon to date of payment compounded annually at 4 percent: Provided further, That such special contribution shall be subject to the limitations established by subdivision (f) of this section.

"SEC. 10. Notwithstanding the provisions of section 3 of this act, the Secretary shall establish regulations providing for the separation of officers from the Foreign Commerce Service, in accordance with the conditions hereinafter prescribed. An officer or clerk so separated from the Service shall be retired, after a hearing by the Secretary, upon an annuity equal to 25 percent of his salary at the time of retirement, in the case of officers over 45 years of age or in the case of officers under 45 years of age with a bonus of 1 year's salary at the time of his retirement, either annuity of 1 year's salary to be payable out of the Foreign Commerce Service officers' retirement and disability fund and except as herein provided, subject to the same provisions and limitations as other annuities payable out of such funds; but no return of contributions shall be made under paragraphs (i) or (l) of section 9 of this title in the case of any Foreign Commerce Service officer retired under the provisions of this section. Whenever it is determined that the efficiency rating of an officer is unsatisfactory, thereby meaning below the standard required for the Service, and such determination has been confirmed by the Secretary, the officer shall be notified thereof, and if, after a reasonable period, to be determined by the circumstances in each particular case, the rating of such officer continues to be found unsatisfactory and such finding is confirmed by the Secretary after a hearing accorded the officer, such officer shall be separated from the Service with the annuity or bonus provided in this section, but no officer so separated from the Service shall receive the said annuity or bonus unless at the time of separation he shall have served at least 15 years. He shall, however, if he has not served at least 15 years, have returned to him the full sum of his contribution to the annuity fund, with interest thereon at 4 percent compounded annually. The benefits of this section, except at the option of the Secretary the return of an officer's contribution to the annuity fund, shall not be given to Foreign Commerce Service officers separated from the Foreign Commerce Service on account of malfeasance in office.

"SEC. 11. In the event of public emergency any retired Foreign Commerce Service officer may be recalled temporarily to active service by the Secretary of Commerce, and while so serving he shall be entitled in lieu of his retirement allowance to the full pay of the class in which he is temporarily serving, or his retirement allowance, whichever is greater.

"SEC. 12. All acts and parts of acts at variance with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

"SEC. 13. This act shall take effect upon its enactment."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILL PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 413) to permit the transportation of passengers by Canadian passenger vessels between ports or places in the United States on Lake Ontario and the St. Lawrence River was announced as next in order.

Mr. WHITE. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2024) to amend the civil-service law to permit certain employees of the legislative branch of the Government to qualify for positions under the competitive classified civil service, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

OPERATION OF MOTOR VEHICLES BY UNLICENSED OPERATORS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 589) prohibiting the operation of motor vehicles in interstate commerce by unlicensed operators, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee was, on page 1, line 4, after the word "commerce", to insert the words "or foreign commerce."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill. In the absence of explanation, let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

INTERSTATE COMPACT—CONNECTICUT RIVER FLOOD CONTROL—JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 177) consenting to an interstate compact relating to flood control in the Connecticut River Valley, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. AUSTIN subsequently said: Mr. President, the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has been trying for several days to arrange to make a motion to proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 979, Senate Joint Resolution 177, and he intends to make such a motion at the first opportunity.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in connection with what the Senator has just said, I was informed this morning that the Governors of four of the New England States who are interested are to meet with the President tomorrow in connection with this subject matter. I thought I ought to give the Senator that information.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator on behalf of his colleague.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, can the Senator from Massachusetts tell me when the conference is to be held?

Mr. WALSH. About 11 o'clock this morning I had occasion to telephone the White House in connection with another subject, and I was informed that the President had invited the Governors of the New England States to confer with him tomorrow to discuss with him this subject matter. That is the only information I have regarding the matter.

I might add that late yesterday afternoon, upon my return to the Senate after an absence of a few days on naval activities I conferred with the attorney general of Massachusetts on this subject. He had been in conference with the Power Commission and others in reference to some changes or modifications that were being contemplated by the Commission but he had no knowledge of a conference with the President.

JOINT RESOLUTION AND BILLS PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 178) consenting to an interstate compact relating to flood control in the Merrimack River Valley, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1351) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921, as amended, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 2904) for the relief of officers and soldiers of the Volunteer service of the United States mustered into service for the War with Spain and who were held in service in the Philippine Islands after ratification of the treaty of peace, April 11, 1899, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Over.

CLAIM OF MINNIE C. DE BACK

The bill (S. 610) to amend the act entitled "An act conferring upon the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, southern division, jurisdiction of the claim of Minnie C. de Back against the Alaska Railroad", approved June 24, 1935, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act conferring upon the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, southern division, jurisdiction of the claim of Minnie C. de Back against the Alaska Railroad", approved June 24, 1935, be amended to read as follows:

"That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, southern division, to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Minnie C. de Back, of San Francisco, Calif., for damages for personal injuries received by her on or about July 3, 1931, while riding as a passenger in the Territory of Alaska on one of the trains of the Alaska Railroad, operated by the United States under the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes', approved March 12, 1914, as amended.

"SEC. 2. In the determination of such claim the United States shall be held liable for any tort committed by any of its officers, agents, or employees to the same extent as if the United States were a private person.

"SEC. 3. Suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this amendatory act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceedings for the determination of such claim and appeals from and payment of any judgment thereon shall be in the same manner as in the cases of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under the provisions of paragraph 'Twentieth' of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended."

SEC. 2. The title of the act entitled "An act conferring upon the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, southern division, jurisdiction of the claim of Minnie C. de Back against the Alaska Railroad", approved June 24, 1935, is amended to read as follows: "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, southern division, to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of Minnie C. de Back."

PURCHASE OF AIR-NAVIGATION FACILITIES

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2817) providing for the purchase by the United States of air-navigation facilities established with the approval of the Secretary of Commerce by air-mail contractors on their contract routes, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the following:

That notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Commerce is authorized, in his discretion, to purchase with any moneys available, or which may be made available, for the establishment of air-navigation facilities, and in accordance with the order of priority assigned to airways installation projects in the current 6-year plan of public construction of the Bureau of Air Commerce, any air-navigation facility which the Secretary of Commerce is authorized under the Air Commerce Act of 1926, as amended, to establish, maintain, and operate, and which has been established, or which hereafter may be established in accordance with the standards and specifications of the Bureau of Air Commerce, on any officially designated civil airway, by the air-mail contractor possessing an air-mail contract to operate thereon, provided the Secretary of Commerce shall certify that acquisition of such air-navigation facilities is in the public interest. In case of any such purchase the price to be paid shall be determined by the Secretary, who shall take into consideration the actual cost to the owner, the cost at the time of the purchase of a similar installation to the Bureau of Air Commerce, and the operating age of the equipment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will not the Senator from New York explain this bill and the reasons for it?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Department of Commerce, lacking any money to install ground facilities for the protection of aviation, some of the private lines have installed facilities, and own them. It is embarrassing now to the Department to have private ownership of facilities which are publicly operated. The Department now has the money, and we had to go through great tribulation in order to obtain it in the appropriation bill for the Department of Commerce, with which to provide the facilities, so it will not need any more money. Instead of buying new facilities in certain places, they will take over facilities which have been privately installed. That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask that the amendment of the committee be read.

The amendment was read.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, as I heard the amendment read, I got the impression that if private companies built these facilities in the future it would be possible for the Department to purchase them. Is that correct?

Mr. COPELAND. The language may be so broad as to permit that. If it is, I shall not lament, because we are being very seriously criticized by the Air Pilots' Association, a fact which has been brought out in connection with the legislation proposed regarding the Washington-Hoover Airport. We are being criticized because we are not installing these devices rapidly enough. Personally, I sympathize with that criticism. If the Department of Commerce can hasten the installation of safety devices by the aid of concerns selfish enough to design them for their own benefit, that is well so far as the United States is concerned, but of course that will have to be done under strict arrangements made by the Secretary, and at prices which will be determined by him.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I also desire to call attention to the fact that the bill begins "That notwithstanding any other provision of law." What is the purpose of preventing other provisions of law with regard to the purchase of property of this nature from applying to this matter?

Mr. COPELAND. In the report on the appropriation bill we specifically designated that certain money should be spent for teletype, certain money for radio installation, and that sort of thing. The report would certainly make it clear that it was newly purchased and directly purchased by the Department. I am quite sure that this will be safeguarded by the Department. It must be. I hope the measure may be passed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Over a long period of time legislation has been enacted to govern and regulate the purchase of property by the Government, and I question the wisdom of this sweeping elimination of the effect of those statutes upon this particular proposition, especially when the operations are to be carried on indefinitely in the future, and in view of the further fact that the entire question of the price to be paid is to be determined by the Department.

Mr. COPELAND. Would the Senator be better satisfied if the first clause were eliminated?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should be better satisfied if the words "notwithstanding any other provision of law" were stricken out, as well as the words "or which hereafter may be established."

Mr. COPELAND. I will accept those amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendments.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 2, line 7, it is proposed to strike out the words "notwithstanding any other provision of law" and on line 17, after the word "established", to strike out "or which hereafter may be established."

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as a further safeguard, I ask the Senator whether he would accept an amendment to add, after the word "discretion", in line 8, the words "with the approval of the President"?

Mr. COPELAND. The suggested amendment is perfectly agreeable.

Mr. McKELLAR. I offer the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, does the bill contemplate in the words "air navigation facilities" the establishment of additional weather stations?

Mr. COPELAND. The weather stations are under the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is why I asked the question, because if the bill had that in contemplation, there would be a possible inconsistency in it.

Mr. COPELAND. All the weather stations are under the Department of Agriculture, and we succeeded this year in increasing the appropriations so that there will be weather reporting in the West where many accidents happen, due largely, I think, to the lack of facilities. However, that question is not involved here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does not the Senator think there ought to be some limitation on the amount?

Mr. COPELAND. The amount is provided in the appropriation for that specific purpose, so if the Secretary should undertake to purchase the devices he would not go beyond the appropriation.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator believe that all these facilities should be furnished to private corporations which undoubtedly are making profit or will make profit in their operations? Are we to furnish to them all of the facilities for transportation, for aviation, for airdromes, and so on? Why should they not pay some compensation to the Government for the advantages they are receiving?

Mr. COPELAND. My answer is no, we should not do that. As a matter of fact, the air lines represent 30 percent of the users of these facilities. Private fliers and Army and Navy and Coast Guard fliers represent the other 70 percent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IMMIGRATION OF FILIPINOS TO HAWAII

The bill (H. R. 7561) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes", approved March 24, 1934, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, did the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] ask that that bill go over?

Mr. KING. No. His committee, the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, favorably reported the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that; but my recollection is that he himself asked that the bill be passed over for some reason.

Mr. KING. Some question was raised by the Senator from Wisconsin concerning the bill. The bill merely provides that Filipinos may not hereafter enter Hawaii, as they are permitted to do under existing law. The bill provides for excluding Filipinos from Hawaii.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection having been made, the bill will be passed over.

BILLS PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2791) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, by including hops as a commodity to which orders under such act are applicable was announced as next in order.

Mr. GUFFEY. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 7836) to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, by including hops as a commodity to which orders under such act are applicable was announced as next in order.

Mr. GUFFEY. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 6628) to permit the further extension of the Air Mail Service was announced as next in order.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. TRUMAN] was called from the Chamber and asked me to object to that bill on his behalf. I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

TRANSFER OF COAST GUARD ENLISTED MEN

The bill (S. 2206) to provide for the transfer of enlisted men of the Coast Guard to the Fleet Naval Reserve was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. REYNOLDS subsequently said: Mr. President, I should like to make inquiry as to the disposition made of Senate bill 2206.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection was heard to it. It went over on objection by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like to be permitted to make reference to that bill at this time, if there is no objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am compelled to object to that bill being taken up at this time. The Navy Department objects, as well as other officials of the Government.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the Senator from North Carolina wishes to offer amendments to the bill which will completely change its provisions and will remove the Navy from any connection with the Coast Guard Service in this matter.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator to let the bill be passed over until we have concluded the call of the calendar, so that I may have an opportunity to examine it?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Very well.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator from North Carolina submit his proposed amendments to the bill, so that Members of the Senate may have the opportunity to know the nature of the amendments.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I offer certain amendments to the bill, which I ask to have read and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments proposed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4 it is proposed to strike out the words "Fleet Naval Reserve" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Coast Guard Reserve."

On page 2, line 6, it is proposed to strike out the words "Fleet Naval Reserve" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Coast Guard Reserve."

In line 18, it is proposed to strike out the words "Fleet Naval Reserve" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Coast Guard Reserve."

Strike out all of section 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following new section, to read as follows:

SEC. 3. That a Coast Guard Reserve is hereby created, and the provisions of the law applicable to enlisted men of the Navy who are transferred to the Fleet Naval Reserve shall, insofar as they are consistent with the provisions of this act, be applicable to enlisted men of the Coast Guard who are transferred to the Coast Guard Reserve.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to provide for the transfer of enlisted men of the Coast Guard to the Coast Guard Reserve."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will lie on the table.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I understand, we are not now considering the bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. No, Mr. President. The Senator from Massachusetts requested that I submit the amendments for the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I made that request so the amendments would appear in the RECORD.

Mr. KING. Then I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

FORMER EMPLOYEES OF FEDERAL SUBSISTENCE HOMESTEAD CORPORATION

The bill (H. R. 3058) for the relief of former employees of the Federal Subsistence Homesteads Corporation, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 1355) for the relief of Lawrence E. Thomas was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS USING PANAMA CANAL

The bill (H. R. 5417) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that as soon as I can obtain recognition after the call of the calendar I shall move that that bill be taken up for consideration.

Mr. COPELAND. I ask the Senator from Missouri if he will be good enough to examine the amendment I now present to him, which I propose to offer to that bill.

Mr. CLARK. I have already read the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York. It was printed in the RECORD yesterday.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I simply ask the Senator from Missouri to examine the amendment, and he says he has done so.

EMPLOYMENT BY WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 176) favoring employment by the Works Progress Administration of persons unable to find employment in private industry, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the joint resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. COPELAND subsequently said: Mr. President, I inquire what became of Senate joint resolution 176?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] asked that it go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, Mr. President, I will say that I hope the Senator from Washington [Mr. SCHWELLENBACH] will attempt to have the joint resolution, which is a very important measure, brought up for consideration by the Senate.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I will say to the Senator from New York that I had intended, if possible, to have the joint resolution brought before the Senate for consideration as soon as possible.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope the Senator will succeed. The joint resolution involves a very important matter.

JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 161) authorizing the Bureau of Labor Statistics to collect information as to amount and value of all goods produced in State and Federal prisons was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that the joint resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be passed over.

CLEVELAND RAILWAY CO.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2008) for the relief of The Cleveland Railway Co., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized and directed to receive, consider, and determine in accordance with law, but without regard to any statute of limitations, any claim filed not later than 6 months after the passage of this act by The Cleveland Railway Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Ohio, having its principal place of business in Cleveland, Ohio, for the refund of income and profits taxes erroneously collected from the said The Cleveland Railway Co. for the taxable year 1926: Provided, however, That in the settlement of said claim interest shall not be allowed beyond February 28, 1936.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. BULKLEY. The bill authorizes the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to consider and determine the tax liability of the Cleveland Railway Co. for the year 1926, without reference to the statute of limitations. It happens that the Bureau of Internal Revenue audited the accounts of the Cleveland Railway Co., with respect to income-tax liability for a series of 7 years, and found deficiencies in 4 years and overassessments in 2 years. The deficiencies have now been paid. Nineteen hundred and twenty-six is one of the years in which an overassessment was found, and now refund of the overassessment is denied because it is contended that a claim was not filed for it in time. However, the railway company says that it did file a claim within the proper period, and there is a memorandum in the Bureau acknowledging that the claim for 1926 was before the Bureau within the statutory period. This bill provides only for the release of the company from the effect of the statute of limitations.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator is familiar with the report of the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Magill, in which he states:

The Treasury Department opposes the enactment of this measure for the reasons above indicated.

Mr. BULKLEY. I am familiar with that, but I am also familiar with the action of the Senate Committee on Claims, which took issue with the Acting Secretary in saying that there is no reason for reopening this case. It is a plain question of justice. The deficiencies have all been paid. Why should not the overassessments be credited to the company? I hope the Senator will not object.

Mr. KING. What reason exists for the Treasury opposing it? Mr. Magill is a very just and fair man.

Mr. BULKLEY. Simply because they cannot find the claim that was filed within the statutory period. It was apparently lost in the Bureau. There is good evidence that the claim was filed on time, and that it simply was mislaid and did not turn up.

Mr. KING. Then the taxpayer did all that it was required to do under the law to preserve its rights?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes. It seems clear that that is true.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAVID J. MAHONEY AND OTHERS

The bill (H. R. 2657) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to advance on the retired list of the Navy David J. Mahoney, David Bolger, Cleve B. Farran, James Johnson, and Hans Terkelsen, retired, to chief boilermaker, retired, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LUKE FRANCIS BRENNAN

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3372) for the relief of Luke Francis Brennan.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] explain that bill?

Mr. WALSH. The bill is recommended and approved by the Navy Department, I will say, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TRANSPORTATION AND SALE OF NATURAL GAS IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6586) to regulate the transportation and sale of natural gas in interstate commerce, and for other purposes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] a question concerning this bill? Does the bill undertake to regulate the production of natural gas, or does it undertake to regulate the producers of natural gas?

Mr. WHEELER. It does not attempt to regulate the producers of natural gas or the distributors of natural gas; only those who sell it wholesale in interstate commerce. The National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners have recommended the passage of the bill and have gone on record in its favor by passing resolutions. They are very much interested in it; the city of Detroit and the city of Cleveland and a large number of Senators have asked me to take it up.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one other inquiry?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is the bill limited in its scope to the regulation of transportation?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; it is limited to transportation in interstate commerce, and it affects only those who sell gas wholesale.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, is it identical with the bill that came from the House?

Mr. WHEELER. It is identical with the bill that came from the House, the House bill having been reported without amendment, and it is identical with the bill recommended by the Interstate Commerce Committee last year.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to obtain information from the Senator as to the implications that arise from the bill, and what States it would affect. As an illustration, if gas is produced in Wyoming and is transported for consumption into the Senator's State or my State, would the Federal Power Commission have to do with such an activity?

Mr. WHEELER. No; and let me say to the Senator that, as a matter of fact, the bill does not interfere with the State regulation, in any way, shape, or form.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is it not a fact that the utilities commissioners generally in the States have heartily endorsed this measure?

Mr. WHEELER. I just made that statement. I have a letter here written by the chief counsel, John E. Benton, which reads as follows:

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF RAILROAD AND UTILITIES COMMISSIONERS,
Washington, D. C., March 29, 1937.

Hon. CLARENCE F. LEA,
Chairman, House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: A joint meeting of the executive committee of this association and of the association's committee on legislation was held on March 26, 1937, for the consideration of legislative matters.

The provisions of H. R. 4008 were considered for the purpose of determining whether that bill will provide regulation of the character requested in the resolution heretofore adopted by this association, and presented at the hearing on March 24, 1936. Consideration was also given to the situation existing in Illinois, where the Illinois commission finds itself impeded by injunction proceedings in the Federal courts in its undertaking to discover what it costs the interstate pipe-line company to deliver gas in Illinois, although the commission is seeking that information only for the purpose of determining what the reasonable expenses of the local distributing company ought to be, and what price for gas sold in the Chicago areas should be approved by the commission as just and reasonable.

A resolution was unanimously adopted endorsing H. R. 4008, amended as requested on behalf of this association at the hearing on March 24. I attach a copy of the resolution hereto, and ask that it be printed as if presented at the hearing.

Yours very truly,

JOHN E. BENTON,
General Solicitor.

I may also add that many of the larger shippers in interstate commerce have gone on record as favoring this bill because they would rather have one body here in Washington regulate the interstate features of the matter than to have a lot of States try to regulate shipments.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I am in complete accord with the general purposes of the bill, and I approve the general regulatory powers that are granted by it. There is one section of the bill, however, which causes me some concern. Section 3 of the bill gives to the Commission the power to prohibit exports or to prohibit imports of natural gas. It seems to me that it is most extraordinary and unusual to confer upon any commission the power to ban the exports or imports of any commodity whatsoever. I am wondering just what peculiar or particular reasons there were for the insertion of this provision. I wonder if there is any justification for including in this regulatory bill such an extreme power as this. Of course, we have with respect to certain commodities granted to the President the power to prohibit their export. I think we recognize the principle upon which that grant of power is based; but I cannot see why we should give to this Commission a power of that sweeping character.

Mr. WHEELER. The bill merely gives the Commission power over interstate commerce to prevent the commodity coming into a State if the State authorities, for instance, should not want it to come in. I do not think there is anything the Senator need fear with reference to it in the slightest degree.

Mr. WHITE. The provision to which I refer reads that—

> No person shall export any natural gas from the United States to a foreign country or import any natural gas from a foreign country.

Mr. WHEELER. That is for the purpose of conserving our natural gas in the event we wanted to conserve it. Suppose, for instance, that natural gas were being transported from this country into Canada when we had a shortage of natural gas, or suppose we were selling quantities of natural gas to foreign countries when we should not do it.

Mr. WHITE. That is quite true, but the prohibition against imports of gas would not be in behalf of the conservation of our gas supply.

Mr. WHEELER. On the other hand, it might be that some company wanted to import natural gas from Mexico, and the Commission might feel that it was not in the public interest that it should be imported into this country. So the bill simply gives the Commission power over interstate commerce either to prevent or to permit as the public interest may dictate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, does the Senator mean that this bill proposes to give unlimited power to determine the matter of policy as to whether we should import or export any gas? I thought it merely conferred the power to regulate the transportation, the rates, and things of that kind. I am not going to vote for the bill if it gives the Commission the power to decide whether we may export gas or may import it. That power belongs right here in this Congress.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me read section 3.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is a very long bill, and I do not think we ought to pass a bill such as this under the rule which governs the proceedings of the Senate at this time.

Mr. WHEELER. I have no personal interest in the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am sure the Senator has not and neither has the Senator from Texas.

Mr. WHEELER. But the administration has been much interested in it, and State public utility bodies are very much interested in it, because, as they have said, under the present set-up it is almost impossible for them properly to regulate the sale of natural gas in their communities without this kind of legislation.

Mr. WHITE. I think the letter of the Utilities Commissioners relates generally to the regulatory powers which are conferred, the power to control the movement of the commodity in interstate commerce. As I recall—though I may be in error—there is nothing in the commissioners' attitude which indicates approval of a prohibition against the export or prohibition against the import of natural gas. It seems to me that section 3 could be eliminated from the bill without impairing the efficacy of the proposed legislation.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. This bill is practically identical with the bill that I introduced upon the same subject at the request of the authorities of the city of Detroit. I myself see no particular reason for retaining section 3 in the bill. It was not in my bill. I had just as soon see it stricken out.

Mr. WHEELER. I have no objection to section 3 being stricken out. I think it is rather immaterial.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I think so, too.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I move that section 3 be stricken from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation from the able Senator from Montana as to the terms of the bill and the machinery which is set up to enforce it. It is a bill of many pages, and it seems to have all the machinery that would be found in a measure providing for the regulation of railroads. I should like to know what justification there is for interdicting the people of Wyoming, for instance, from transporting their natural gas to the Senator's State or to my State—for we use considerable of it—and what justification there is for the Federal Power Commission or any other commission, aside from commissions within the States, to fix the price at which the gas shall be sold. I cannot quite see how some interstate organization can adopt a standard, because there is such a difference in the cost of production and in the cost of transmission. Some mines may produce a large outflow of gas with very limited capital, while others may have invested hundreds of thousands of dollars in trying to develop oil and finally get gas at a cost which has been very great. So, it would seem to me to be very difficult to determine the price which should be charged, and that that would be a matter that should be regulated by the State into which the gas is transported for consumption.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that this bill is unusual in the respect that those who transport the gas favor the bill. All the State public-utility bodies favor the bill and the Government has favored the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Let me finish the statement and I will then yield. The reason for it is that many persons who are shipping gas in interstate commerce for wholesale purposes—and this bill only affects gas sold at wholesale—find that some State through which their pipe line goes has sought to pass laws regulating the gas that is shipped through that particular State. That condition has caused considerable litigation. It may be that it is sought to transport natural gas from Montana through North Dakota into Minnesota and one State may try to regulate that transportation. There is no attempt in this bill to regulate the price of gas to retailers; that is left entirely to the State. The only thing it proposes is to attempt to regulate the price at which natural gas shall be sold at wholesale. The various States want the bill passed because of the fact that when they have tried to regulate the price of natural gas to the consumers they have not been able to do so because of the fact that injunctions have been gotten out in some of the State courts.

The city of Detroit, I think, has had such difficulty, as has the city of Columbus, the city of Cleveland, and the city of New Orleans, if I am not mistaken. All the largest cities that are using gas and all the State regulatory bodies want it. So far as I know, in practically every instance, those who are engaged in the transportation of gas have either expressed themselves in favor of the proposed legislation or have offered no objection before any of the committees to the bill. If I am in error about that I hope some Senator will correct me.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not also true, even though the utility commissioners advocate it, that whenever a Federal agency takes over an activity such as this the State authorities begin to shift or lose their responsibility? If we turn this over to the Interstate Commerce Commission, essentially what they do will be reflected all over the country, because the interstate rates will be superimposed on the State commissions and they must necessarily be governed by them. Did not that happen to the railroads?

Mr. WHEELER. There is no doubt about that, but this is an entirely different situation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; one involves the railroads and the other involves gas.

Mr. WHEELER. No. There is no attempt and can be no attempt under the provisions of the bill to regulate anything in the field except where it is not regulated at the present time. It applies only as to interstate commerce and only to the wholesale price of gas.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I understand, the bill is confined to the regulation of interstate commerce?

Mr. WHEELER. That is all, and nothing else.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have not had time to examine the bill thoroughly or even the report. I seek information.

The Senator referred to litigation. I want to know whether the courts have not in litigation passed upon the matter of jurisdiction and already held that the regulation of rates, when the borders of States are crossed, is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Commission?

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is not the question that bothers me. I thought it was implied in the bill, at least, that there is an overreaching into the matter of State rights. Take the compact feature of the bill. I ask whether that right which the States have under the Constitution to enter into compacts with each other is attempted by the bill to be narrowed down and restricted so that they will be fettered and unable to enter into compacts freely with respect to their own internal affairs as affected by their interstate relations.

Is there such restriction contained in the paragraph on page 16, entitled "State compact", sections (a), (b), and (c) of section 11? I have read those provisions hastily. Apparently they require the States to report to the Commission immediately any compact which they undertake to make. I do not find, however, those restrictive clauses which are found in the measure introduced by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BROWN] with respect to flood control in the valley of the Connecticut River.

Mr. WHEELER. There is no such restrictive provision. If the Senator will read paragraph (a) of section 11 he will see that it provides:

STATE COMPACTS—REPORTS ON

SEC. 11. (a) In case two or more States propose to the Congress compacts dealing with the conservation, production, transportation, or distribution of natural gas it shall be the duty of the Commission to assemble pertinent information relative to the matters covered in any such proposed compact, to make public and to report to the Congress information so obtained, together with such recommendations for further legislation as may appear to be appropriate or necessary to carry out the purposes of such proposed compact and to aid in the conservation of natural-gas resources within the United States and in the orderly, equitable, and economic production, transportation, and distribution of natural gas.

In other words, all the bill would do would be to give the Commission power to furnish to the States such information as it has, and require the States to furnish the Commission such information as they have. Then the Commission would report to the Congress its recommendations with reference to the compacts, and it would be for the Congress to act.

Mr. AUSTIN. Then, it would leave to the future the right to meet any effort on the part of the central government to acquire the natural resources of the State of Montana, or the State of Vermont, or any other State?

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes. It does not touch it in any way, shape, or form, except to require the furnishing of information.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have great fear of these occult methods of acquiring the natural resources of our several States.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the bill give to the Commission the power to fix the price at which the gas shall be sold?

Mr. WHEELER. At wholesale.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does it require the companies to sell at those prices?

Mr. WHEELER. It regulates the wholesale prices of gas.

Mr. CONNALLY. If a man should produce gas in my State and ship it in interstate commerce, then he would have to sell it at the price fixed by the Commission?

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly; at the wholesale price fixed by the Commission.

Mr. CONNALLY. The power to fix a low price involves the power to fix a high price.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. The coal companies are opposed to the use of natural gas and oil, and are always fighting its use. With a commission such as the Interstate Commerce Commission controlling these matters, does not the Senator believe there would be tremendous pressure to put the rate probably so high that the public in the coal areas would use more coal and less gas?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think so. I think we have to give credit to the Commission and say it would act honestly.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not talking about honesty. They may think that a sound economic policy, just as the Senator thought it was a sound economic policy when he voted for the coal bill to raise the price of coal.

If the price of coal was raised by passing a bill here having that effect, could not the Interstate Commerce Commission under the provisions of this bill say "We think the price of gas ought to be higher? It is cleaner and nicer and better, and ought to cost a great deal more than coal. Therefore we will raise these prices and put them so high that very few people can afford to use gas."

Frankly, while I have no interest in the matter whatsoever, it seems to me this is a tremendously important bill for us to pass in this fashion. It does not seem to me to be the proper thing to do. We are going to be back here in January and perhaps in November, and then we will have plenty of time and opportunity to talk about the bill.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator whether, in the very natural application of the provisions of the bill, it would not only permit the Commission to establish what it believed to be just and reasonable prices for wholesalers but would give to the Commission power to fix the prices of retailers, knowing that the wholesale prices as prescribed become necessarily the basis on which the retailer must fix his prices, as he measures the retail price by the wholesale price? That is the way it seems to me it would work.

Mr. WHEELER. The city of Chicago, if my recollection serves me rightly, wanted to find out what was the cost of gas, in order that they might use the information for the purpose of fixing the retail price of gas in the city of Chicago. They never were able to get any information, because the minute they sought to go into court to get information as to the cost of the natural gas and the cost of transporting it across State lines, an injunction was issued against them on the ground that they were interfering with interstate commerce.

The purpose of the bill is to help the State commissions and the people of the country find out what is the cost of transporting natural gas to the larger cities, such as Detroit, Chicago, Cleveland, and New York City. It does not do any good to give the Illinois commission the power to regulate the price of gas in the city of Chicago if they can be held up—and that is all it is—by pipe-line companies which ship the gas to Chicago and be told, "It is going to cost the city of Chicago so much at wholesale for this gas." What good does it do the people of Chicago if they cannot reach the wholesale price and do something to regulate the pipe-line companies which transport the gas into the city of Chicago?

The only purpose of the bill is to make effective such provisions of law as will help the State regulatory bodies function in the interest of the people of Chicago, St. Louis, Detroit, and the other large cities, to enable them to get something for their money and not be robbed when they are buying gas brought to them in interstate commerce.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. As I understand, this bill is designed on the theory of preventing the situation which now exists, by which a chain or a system may deliver gas at a State line to a company owned by that system, and thumb its nose at a State regulatory body—be it the utilities commission, the public-service commission, or whatever it may be called—which may desire to inquire into the facts as to the actual rate base on which the company should be permitted to charge rates. In other words, it would be a matter of interstate contract rather than a matter of a return on a fair rate base, upon which all utility rates in this country are now supposed to be based.

Mr. WHEELER. I think the city of St. Louis has had exactly the same trouble that the city of Chicago has had with reference to the very thing the Senator mentions.

Mr. CLARK. We have two situations in our State, because one of the principal cities in Missouri is on one State line and the other principal city is on the other State line.

Mr. MINTON. And we in Indiana have had the same trouble that the Senator from Montana has so well pointed out. As the Senator says, when an effort is made to regulate the price of gas, we will say, by way of illustration, in Terre Haute, Ind., just across the Illinois line, as far as the Public Service Commission of the State of Indiana can go is to ascertain what the wholesale price is to the gas company in Terre Haute. That may be 50 or 60 cents a thousand; but when they say, "Produce your contract and let us look into the cost of getting that gas to the gateway at Terre Haute, Ind.", the company replies, "Oh, no; that is interstate commerce, and you cannot enter into that field."

Therefore, as the Senator has pointed out, our Public Service Commission cannot determine whether or not the people of Terre Haute are being charged a fair rate for their gas, because it cannot determine the fairness of the wholesale rate that is charged at the gate at Terre Haute.

Mr. WHEELER. As a matter of fact, as I have said before, most of the high-class pipe lines and gas people in the country have favored the bill, because, if they are doing a legitimate business, they have no objection to it. It is only the companies that want to use some device for preventing the State utilities from fixing a fair price that are opposing the bill.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator explain just how this bill will improve the situation outlined by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON]? That is the situation that we have in Ohio, and I am very much interested in it.

Mr. WHEELER. It will improve the situation in this way: The Federal Power Commission will have power to regulate the price of gas shipped and sold at wholesale in interstate commerce, and so they will investigate and find out what is a fair price for it. The Senator's city of Cleveland, and other cities in Ohio, are helpless.

Mr. BULKLEY. The city of Cleveland uses gas imported from West Virginia; and the company which distributes the gas buys it in West Virginia from another corporation that is owned by the same people. How can we get around that?

Mr. WHEELER. Simply because of the fact that under the bill, if the gas is shipped in interstate commerce, the Federal Power Commission has the right to investigate and say whether or not the company which ships it charges a fair rate for the wholesale gas which it is selling to the city of Columbus or the city of Cleveland. At present, that cannot be done. No one can say whether the price charged is a fair price, or whether it is a high price, or whether the city of Cleveland or the city of Columbus is being robbed. When efforts are made to get that information they are blocked by injunctions in the lower Federal courts, because it is said that the city has no authority over interstate commerce.

Mr. BULKLEY. I thank the Senator. I think the bill will be of great benefit.

Mr. WHEELER. It will be of the greatest benefit, as a matter of fact, to every large city, and every user of gas that is shipped wholesale. My State is not at all affected by the bill, because all our gas is produced in the State. Therefore, the bill does not affect us in the slightest degree; but the authorities of cities like Columbus, Cleveland, Detroit, St. Louis, Chicago, Kansas City, and every single city in the United States that imports gas, have written me and begged me and pleaded with me to try to get this bill passed. Likewise, as I say, every State regulatory body has asked for it, and there has not been an objection that I know of coming from the transporters or producers of gas anywhere in the United States. In fact, one of them spoke to me about the matter and said he hoped the bill would pass, because he felt that it would stabilize the industry, and stop the industry from being held up to ridicule, and so forth.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. First, I inform the Senator that the public press and certain matters that come through the mail to men in public life, such as we are, tell me that there is a controversy at my city of Chicago between the concern called the People's Gas Co. and my city, due to the fact that the People's Gas Co. is being charged with having gas brought in from probably a natural-gas company or agency, and charging for that gas on a basis that might have been a fair charge for local gas made there in the city.

The details of these charges I do not know, but I ask the Senator if this condition has been brought before the committee, and how far the particular provision to which he is now alluding affects that situation.

Mr. WHEELER. This bill, of course, could not affect the price charged by the People's Gas Co. for gas produced in the State of Illinois, but when gas is brought into a State and sold at wholesale, the Federal authorities may simply go to the extent of saying, "A reasonable price for this gas which is shipped at wholesale is so much"—just as they fix rates for railroads. This is a very minor part of the regulation, and it touches only the part of the gas business which is not now regulated by anybody under any circumstances.

Mr. LEWIS. How far will the bill aid the city or the State commission to adjust what would be a fair price, if it be true that the gas company bringing natural gas from outside the State proceeds to charge for that natural gas the price that it might have been justified in charging for gas made there at home at higher cost?

Mr. WHEELER. The bill absolutely corrects that condition; and that is why the State regulatory bodies in Illinois and in every other State of the Union are in favor of this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. LEWIS. Such is the idea of the Senator, that it corrects that evil if it does exist?

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the bill enables the Commission which has charge of the matter under the bill to do away with discriminatory rates that are established, with which we are all familiar.

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly.

Mr. MINTON. For instance, in the northern part of my State, in the industrial area around Gary, the pipe lines bring in gas and sell it to certain industries with which the pipe lines may be affiliated; but when you try to buy gas for domestic distribution there you cannot buy it at a reasonable price. So the bill would do away with the discriminatory wholesale prices that the pipe lines charge.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. At the present time, some of the pipe lines that are selling at wholesale will sell to one community at a certain price, and sell to another community at another price. They are permitted to sell to one industry at one price, and to sell to another industry at another price. In other words, the present state of affairs permits the old racket of rebates and discriminations against cities and against counties and against municipalities, and against particular industries in a community.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. What the Senator is saying leads me to the conclusion that in effect this bill will regulate local rates.

Mr. WHEELER. No; no.

Mr. CONNALLY. What rates will it regulate? Every rate is local somewhere. Here is a city that has locally produced gas. If the Interstate Commerce Commission can fix the price of gas in interstate commerce, it can very easily permit that gas to come in at some other figure than that which applies locally; and inevitably that is going to have a tendency to give the Commission power, not by an order but in effect, to fix the rates all over the United States wherever natural gas is available.

Is the bill confined to natural gas?

Mr. WHEELER. It is confined to natural gas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why should it not apply to every kind of gas?

Mr. WHEELER. Because manufactured gas is not transported.

Mr. CONNALLY. But it can be transported.

Mr. WHEELER. It cannot be profitably transported. In other words, the gas produced in the city of Chicago cannot be profitably shipped out. The only kind of gas that can be profitably shipped in interstate commerce is natural gas.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Montana will yield, I desire to ask the Senator from Texas a question.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. If the Commission does not have power to fix the price of gas, who will fix it?

Mr. CONNALLY. Nobody, of course.

Mr. BORAH. Then it will be fixed by these combinations.

Mr. WHEELER. Exactly; and that is exactly what is happening.

Mr. BORAH. If the Commission does not fix it, you may be sure that there will be a combination of those interested that will fix it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have not had a letter for this bill, nor, so far as I recall, a letter against it. I have no particular interest in the matter, except that the bill does affect a large industry in my State. We want to sell our gas, of course, but we do not want to sell it at a price that is not just and fair.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that Representative RAYBURN called me up only yesterday and stated to me that he was very anxious that this bill be taken up, and asked me to make a special effort to get the bill passed; and I told him I would do so. Representative RAYBURN was formerly chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission of the House of Representatives. He has passed upon this bill, and has gone into the facts. I do not think he would have called me up and asked me to have the bill passed, if possible, if it was going to hurt the State of Texas, or anybody down there.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, Representative RAYBURN would not knowingly favor legislation that would hurt our State; but I have to act on my own views of the matter.

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly; but Representative RAYBURN, on account of his being until recently chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commitee, has for several years given a great deal of thought and study to this subject.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say that personally I am not going to object to the consideration of the bill; but I do think an important measure like this, affecting a great industry and affecting a large portion of the people of the United States, ought to be considered more carefully, and the committee ought to know more than it seems to know about the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Perhaps I do not know enough about it——

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not mean the Senator from Montana; I am not referring to him; but I mean the committee members. Apparently, they have not given a great deal of thought to the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that we have given a good deal of thought to the bill. We took it up last year. We had the bill before the Interstate Commerce Committee last year, and studied it, but we were not then able to have it passed. Last year the bill passed the House, and we reported it out favorably, and it came to the floor of the Senate, but was not passed. The bill passed the House unanimously, as I understand, and was unanimously reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CONNALLY. Unanimity is not any argument to the Senator from Texas. Whenever everybody is for something, usually it is not worth a "cuss", or there is something wrong with it.

Mr. WHEELER. I can assure the Senator that there is nothing wrong with this bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Unanimity is no argument to me.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKE. I represent a State which produces no natural gas or any other kind of fuel, so I am interested in the matter only from the standpoint of those who have to buy. Is the wholesale price of any other kind of fuel that enters the State of Nebraska subject to regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission or any other body?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; coal and power.

Mr. BURKE. Who fixes the wholesale price of coal?

Mr. WHEELER. The Coal Commission will fix the price of coal coming into the Senator's State.

Mr. BURKE. Under the Guffey Coal Act?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. Well, I did not think much of that act.

Mr. WHEELER. Railroad rates are fixed in the same way.

Mr. BURKE. I am talking about the matter of power.

Mr. WHEELER. The Federal Power Commission regulates the wholesale price of power coming into the State of Nebraska or into any other State. This does exactly the same thing and does not affect the local rate existing, insofar as the wholesale rate is concerned.

Mr. BURKE. It seems to me there would necessarily be a very direct effect on the local rate.

Mr. WHEELER. If some body does not regulate it, then the combination is going to regulate itself, and that is what they are doing. In many instances they have discriminated against various communities. Charges have come before the committee that one community was being discriminated against in favor of some other community, and even some industries have complained that they have been discriminated against, and a lower rate given to another industry. I do not know as to those facts, except as letters have come in.

Mr. BURKE. In Nebraska we are just beginning to use natural gas extensively. I have not had a single letter from anyone making any complaint about this matter, and I certainly would not want to let the bill pass without having the opportunity of communicating with the various communities, with the State Railway Commission of Nebraska, and the other interested parties, to see whether this is going to be in the interest of consumers of natural gas.

Mr. WHEELER. The various commissions passed a joint resolution on the subject, which reads:

Resolved by the executive committee of the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners, That the position of said association declared by resolution at its forty-seventh annual convention in favor of the enactment of Federal legislation providing for the regulation of the interstate transmission and sale of gas at wholesale for resale is hereby reaffirmed.

In other words, they passed the resolution half a dozen times. Every time they have met they have passed the resolution. I read further:

Resolved further, That for the purpose of providing such regulations said association endorses H. R. 4008, an act to regulate the transportation and sale of natural gas in interstate commerce, introduced by Congressman LEA, of California, with the amendments proposed thereto at the hearing before the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee on behalf of the association on March 24, 1937; and further

Resolved, That the necessity for such regulation is increasingly imperative, and that the enactment of H. R. 4008, amended as proposed, at the present session of Congress is earnestly urged on behalf of said association.

The bill provides for regulation along recognized and more or less standardized lines. There is nothing novel in its provisions, and it is believed that no constitutional question is presented.

Your committee believes that this legislation is highly desirable to fill the gap in regulation that now exists by reason of the lack of authority of the State commissions.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Nebraska that, in addition to the endorsement of the Utilities Commissioners, the Cities Alliance and Council of Mayors have met and have urged the enactment of the bill. The Cities Alliance asked to introduce it in the Senate. The interest of the consumer is the interest we are protecting principally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls attention to the fact that the debate is proceeding under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is it not true that power and gas are competitive for heating purposes?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is proposed to have the power rates controlled by the Power Commission and the other competitive rates controlled by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no; they are both to be controlled by the same Commission.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought the Senator said the Power Commission would fix the rates for power. The matter becomes somewhat more involved than I thought it was.

Mr. WHEELER. It is the Federal Power Commission that fixes the wholesale price of power, and it is the same commission that will regulate the price of gas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Who controls the matter of the price of coal?

Mr. WHEELER. The Coal Commission.

Mr. CONNALLY. They are competing articles, and one body fixing one price and another body another price.

Mr. WHEELER. That is true as to all of the regulatory bodies of every kind and character.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I would not want to have this bill passed by unanimous consent in the state of mind in which I am at present. I would have to make further investigation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let the bill go over.

Mr. WHEELER. I give notice that at the earliest possible time I shall move to take the bill up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the bill will be passed over.

CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION FURNISHED TO BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2940) to make confidential certain information furnished to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any statistical information furnished in confidence to the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce by individuals, corporations, and firms shall be held to be confidential, and shall be used only for the statistical purposes for which it is supplied. The Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce shall not permit anyone other than the sworn employees of the Bureau to examine such individual reports, nor shall he permit any statistics of domestic commerce to be published in such manner as to reveal the identity of the individual, corporation, or firm furnishing such data.

SEC. 2. Any employee of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce violating any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000 or imprisoned not exceeding 1 year, or both.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of this bill?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, this bill was before us the other day. If the Senator will look at the first page of the bill, the third line, he will find this language:

That any statistical information furnished in confidence to the Bureau * * * shall be used only for the statistical purposes.

And so forth. The argument for the bill is that the Department of Commerce is striving to gather statistics relating to business, the amount of business done, the improvement in business, the percentage of profit, and so forth. It has no authority to ask or demand this information and the Department is convinced that if it could say that the information is to be confidential and not given to the opponents of those furnishing it, there would be no objection.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARK subsequently said: Mr. President, I inquire, what happened to Calendar No. 1213, Senate bill 2940?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was passed.

Mr. CLARK. I ask that the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the votes are reconsidered.

Mr. CLARK. I ask that the bill go over.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator was not in the Chamber when the bill was reached. A few days ago, when the bill was called on the calendar, I offered no resistance to having it go over, but I have since received more information. If the Senator will be good enough to look at the first page of the bill, he will find this language:

That any statistical information furnished in confidence shall be used only for statistical purposes.

I am told by the Department that they are anxious to obtain statistics as to the improvement of business, the amount of business done, and all that sort of thing, in order to make up their statistical records. They have no authority to demand the information, and they find it difficult to get the information because competitors, of course, naturally seize upon it.

I was impressed the other day by what the Senator said, but having gained more information about it, I can hardly see what advantage there would be in defeating the bill, because it would simply serve to defeat the Department's desire to gain information which would be helpful for comparisons.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, it seems to me the bill takes the pig by the wrong ear. In other words, it seems that if the Department wants more authority to obtain information, the way to proceed would be to give the Department the authority to obtain necessary information. My objection to the bill is that if information were developed such as was developed in the munitions inquiry, to which I referred the other day, upon matters of the most vital importance to the American people, the Commerce Department could refuse to communicate it to a Senate committee on the ground that it was confidential. The Munitions Committee knew, several months before it was actually disclosed, that Germany was rearming in violation of the Versailles Treaty, and that information was obtained largely from sources which made the information available to the Commerce Department. It might have been of very great importance to have disclosed the matter at that time to the public of the United States and of the world, but the Department of Commerce refused to permit the Munitions Committee to do so on the ground that the information was confidential. So it seems to me that instead of proceeding by way of authorizing the Department of Commerce to collect and withhold information, if there is simply a lack of authority to procure necessary information, the proper course would be to authorize the Department to go out and obtain it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator is entirely correct in connection with such matters as he suggests, but this is for no other purpose than to gain statistical information. For instance, General Motors may be asked how many cars they make, how much the materials cost, and how much the profit is, and naturally General Motors would not want Mr. Ford to know, nor would Mr. Ford be likely to give information which might be given out. Yet, for the purpose of developing our knowledge as to business conditions, and so forth, such information would be very interesting, and I think material.

Mr. CLARK. In the case to which I referred a few moments ago it would have been of very great interest to the people of the United States and of the world to know that certain types of airplane engines and certain types of airplanes, ostensibly to be used for commercial purposes, but which could obviously and very easily be changed into military purposes, were being exported in tremendous quantities to Germany. But the Department of Commerce, regarding the information as confidential, refused to permit it to be published.

Mr. COPELAND. This refers merely to statistical information.

Mr. CLARK. How can the Senator say a certain type of airplane engine exported to a certain country is an element entering into a statistical table, but someone else might take that information and put an entirely different and much more important construction on it than would be involved in the collection of mere statistics?

The Department of Commerce said they could obtain this information only as a voluntary contribution, and therefore they could not violate the confidence of the persons who had given it to them.

The bill, as I read it, is simply an effort to legalize a practice that has already been in effect for a considerable number of years.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I understood the Senator from Missouri to object to the consideration of this bill.

Mr. CLARK. The bill was passed while I was in conversation with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. I asked that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered, which was done, and then I objected to its consideration.

Mr. BORAH. That is what I thought.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish to answer the Senator from Missouri, and then I shall desist. He has in his great city of St. Louis a great many department stores. It would be valuable to the Department of Commerce, in making an estimate of the return of prosperity or the reverse, to know the volume of business done by each store. That is all this bill provides. It is merely for statistical purposes and for no other purpose. If that in any sense would be damaging or harmful, then, of course, we ought not to pass the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I may say that when this bill was called previously on the calendar, I also was one of those who objected to its consideration, because I wanted to look into it; but so far as I am personally concerned I have no further objection to its consideration, because it is in conformity with all the statutes which govern the gathering of statistical information on a voluntary basis in every one of the departments. For example, all the statistical information which the Bureau of Labor Statistics gathers is gathered under a similar provision. As I understand the measure, it is not designed to prevent the publication of the information, but it is designed to have the publication done in such a way as to prevent revealing the identity of any particular concern or corporation so that the information might be of value to its competitors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection having been heard, the bill will be passed over and remain on the calendar.

RECOMMITTAL OF BILL

The bill (S. 2886) to amend an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes", approved June 3, 1916, as amended by the act of June 4, 1920, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs for further study.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill will be recommitted.

Mr. AUSTIN subsequently said: Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. What is the status of Senate bill 2886?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] asked that the bill be recommitted, which was done.

REGULATION OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE IN PRODUCTS OF CHILD LABOR

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to revert to Calendar No. 743, being Senate bill 2226, which was reached on the calendar before I came into the Chamber. The bill is for the regulation of interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes.

I may say that this bill passed the Senate by a very large majority as an amendment to the wage and hour bill. The wage and hour bill is now tied up in some committee in the House; and the bill in question, to regulate interstate commerce in the products of child labor, should, it seems to me, be passed. It ought to be taken up separately, and not get caught in the jam in which the wage and hour bill is caught.

I call the Senate's attention to an article appearing in the publication Labor. The editor of that publication, Mr. Keating, originally introduced the child-labor bill. He has the following to say with reference to the bill under discussion:

> It will be unfortunate if Progressives "muff" the opportunity to enact effective child-labor legislation at this session.
> Here's the situation: The Senate inserted in the Black-Connery hour and wage bill a carefully drafted child-labor bill. It bars children below 16 from ordinary industries, and below 18 from extra-hazardous occupations.
>
> • • • • • • •
> The Senate child-labor bill is just about the best law of its kind ever enacted in this country. Labor therefore urges that the Senate proposal be substituted for the House proposal.
> In advocating the passage of this legislation, labor wishes to emphasize that it will continue to urge the ratification of the child-labor amendment to the Federal Constitution. We can never solve the child-labor problem until that amendment is part of the organic law.

Mr. President, the bill, if it shall be passed by the Senate as a separate measure, has a chance of becoming law at this session of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think those who objected to the consideration of the bill when it was called on the calendar are not now on the floor of the Senate. I suggest to the Senator from Montana that he wait until the conclusion of the call of the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, at the time the bill was called on the calendar I asked that it go over, because the bill as it is on the calendar was incorporated in the wage and hour bill. It was generally understood that, of course, if it should be incorporated in the wage and hour bill, it would not be necessary to pass it as a separate bill. However, under the circumstances which exist, I do not feel like objecting to the consideration of the bill. Of course, if the bill be now passed by the Senate, and then the wage and hour bill be passed by the Congress at the next session, as we all hope it will be, and if the wage and hour measure then have contained in it the provisions contained in the bill now before us, as we hope it will, the action it is now proposed to take on the bill would not have been necessary.

However, in view of the present situation, I have no desire to object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2226) to regulate interstate commerce in the products of child labor, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, in section 1, on page 1, line 3, after the word "merchandise", to strike out "manufactured"; in line 4, after the word "produced", to strike out the comma and "or mined"; on page 2, line 2, after the word "been", to strike out "manufactured"; and in the same line, after the word "produced", to strike out the comma and "or mined", so as to make the section read:

Be it enacted, etc., That all goods, wares, and merchandise produced on or after January 1, 1938, wholly or in part through the use of child labor, transported into any State or Territory of the United States and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage, shall upon arrival and delivery in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory to the same extent and in the same manner as though such goods, wares, and merchandise had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced in the original package or otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, on page 2, line 10, after the word "merchandise", to strike out "manufactured", and in the same line, after the word "produced", to strike out the comma and "or mined", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to transport or cause to be transported, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, or aid or assist in obtaining transportation for or in transporting any goods, wares, or merchandise produced on or after January 1, 1938, wholly or in part through the use of child labor, from one State or Territory into any State or Territory where said goods, wares, or merchandise are intended by any person interested therein to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of such State or Territory.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, on page 2, line 22, after the word "merchandise" to strike out "manufactured,"; in the same line, after the word "produced" to strike out the comma and "or mined"; on page 3, line 9, after the word "work" to strike out "performed by children" and insert "in connection with which child labor was utilized"; in line 10, after the words "in the" to strike out "manufacture,"; and in the same line, after the word "production" to strike out the comma and "or mining"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to transport or cause to be transported, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, or aid or assist in obtaining transportation for or in transporting in interstate commerce any goods, wares, or merchandise produced on or after January 1, 1938, wholly or in part through the use of child labor, unless the outside of such goods, wares, or merchandise, or the package containing the same if they be packaged, shall bear a conspicuous label conforming to the requirements of this section. Such label shall truthfully set forth—

(1) The name and address of the shipper;
(2) The name and address of the consignee;
(3) The nature of such goods, wares, or merchandise; and
(4) A summary statement of the kind or kinds of work in connection with which child labor was utilized in the production of such goods, wares, or merchandise and the type or types of places where such work was performed.

In case a label conforming to the requirements of this section has been removed from goods, wares, or merchandise, or from a package containing the same, or such goods, wares, or merchandise have been removed from a package bearing such a label, prior to the time such goods, wares, or merchandise shall be offered for shipment in interstate commerce, the information shall set forth in such label pursuant to the requirements of clause (4) of the preceding sentence or of this sentence shall be incorporated in a new label affixed to such goods, wares, or merchandise so offered for shipment, or to the package containing the same if they be packaged, together with a statement that such information was taken from another label. The incorporation of such information and statement in the new label shall constitute compliance with the requirements of said clause (4) unless child labor shall have been used in connection with processing or fabricating such goods, wares, or merchandise after removal of the label therefrom or from the package containing the same or after removal thereof from the package bearing such label, as aforesaid, in which event the incorporation of said information and said statement shall be a requirement as to said new label in addition to those defined by said clause (4).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 10, to strike out:

SEC. 4. It shall be unlawful for any person who has manufactured, produced, or mined goods, wares, or merchandise in any State or Territory, wholly or in part through the use of child labor, on or after January 1, 1938, knowingly to transport or cause to be transported, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, or aid or assist in obtaining transportation for or in transporting such goods, wares, or merchandise in interstate or foreign commerce.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 4. It shall be unlawful for any person who—

(a) has produced goods, wares, or merchandise in any State or Territory, wholly or in part through the use of child labor, on or after January 1, 1938; or

(b) has taken delivery of such goods, wares, or merchandise in any State or Territory with notice of their character whether by purchase or on consignment, as commission merchant, agent for forwarding or other purposes, or otherwise, to transport or cause to be transported, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, or aid or assist in obtaining transportation for or in transporting such goods, wares, or merchandise in interstate or foreign commerce or to sell such goods, wares, or merchandise for shipment in interstate or foreign commerce or with knowledge that shipment thereof in interstate or foreign commerce is intended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, on page 5, in line 11, after the word "defined", to insert "(a)"; in line 12, after the word "years", to insert "and (b) as employment of a human being under the age of 18 years at 'extra hazardous work' specified by regulations promulgated pursuant hereto which specification shall be based on facts found by the Secretary of Labor as to the relative possibility of injury or detriment to health involved in various types of employment after necessary information on the subject has been collected by him or derived by him from sources deemed to be reliable;"; in line 20, before the words "the term 'package' shall be" to strike out "the term 'children' shall be defined as human beings under the age of 16 years;", and on page 6, line 6, after the word "jurisdiction", to strike out "thereof. The phrase 'manufactured, produced, or mined'", and insert "thereof; the words 'produced' and 'production' shall be defined to include manufacturing, processing, fabricating, and mining operations but"; so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. For the purposes of this act the term "child labor" shall be defined (a) as employment of a human being under the age of 16 years and (b) as employment of a human being under the age of 18 years at "extra hazardous work" specified by regulations promulgated pursuant hereto which specification shall be based on facts found by the Secretary of Labor as to the relative possibility of injury or detriment to health involved in various types of employment after necessary information on the subject has been collected by him or derived by him from sources deemed to be reliable; the term "package" shall be defined as a wrapping, container, or crate and as a unit of rolling stock in which goods, wares, or merchandise may be shipped or transported in bulk; the term "person" shall be defined as an individual, a corporation, a partnership, an association, a joint-stock company, or any unincorporated organization; and the phrase "State or Territory" shall be defined to include the organized States and Territories of the United States, any district or possession thereof, or place noncontiguous but subject to the jurisdiction thereof; the words "produced" and "production" shall be defined to include manufacturing, processing, fabricating, and mining operations but as used in this act shall not be construed to mean planting, cultivation, and harvesting of fruits, grains, vegetables, and other agricultural products or agricultural work in connection with dairying, livestock, husbandry, and poultry husbandry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, on page 7, line 3, after the word "false", to insert a colon and "And provided further, That no common carrier shall be deemed to have violated this act if, at the time it accepts goods, wares, or merchandise for transportation in interstate commerce in the regular course of its business, it shall rely in good faith upon a signed statement of the consignor that the obtaining of transportation for or the transportation of such goods, wares, or merchandise will not constitute a violation of this act, but any consignor who shall knowingly sign any false statement made to a common carrier as aforesaid shall be deemed thereby to have violated this act. The failure of any consignor to furnish such a statement to a common carrier at the latter's request shall excuse the common carrier from its obligations to accept any goods for transportation in interstate commerce"; in line 20, after the word "were", to strike out "manufactured"; in the same line, after the word "produced", to strike out the comma and "or mined"; in line 21, after the word "labor", to strike out "at one or more stages or to perform one or more operations in the manufacture, production, or mining of goods, wares, or merchandise of similar character"; in line 25, after the word "violation", to insert "at the place of employment where said goods, wares, or merchandise were so produced in whole or in part"; on page 8, line 5, after the word "were", to strike out "manufactured"; in the same line, after the word "produced", to strike out the comma and "or mined"; in line 11, after the words "in the", to strike out "manufacture" and insert "production"; and on page 9, line 6, after the word "filed" and the period, to insert "Any public official authorized or qualified to enforce this act may ultilize in that connection, and shall be entitled to rely upon, any and all records, returns, applications, certificates, and other information collected by or filed with authorities charged with the administration and enforcement of the laws of any State relating to the education and employment of human beings that may be made available to such public officials by such authorities and are deemed by such public officials to be useful and reliable", so as to make sections 6 and 7 read:

SEC. 6. Any person violating any provision of this act shall for each offense, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, and such goods, wares, or merchandise shall be forfeited to the United States and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the seizure and forfeiture of property imported into the United States contrary to law: Provided, however, That no person who in conformity to section 3 of this act and in good faith sets forth in a label information stated to have been taken from another label shall be deemed thereby to have violated this act so as to render himself subject to conviction, or goods, wares, or merchandise bearing or contained in a package bearing such label subject to forfeiture, in the event any of the information so stated to have been taken from another label proves to be false: And provided further, That no common carrier shall be deemed to have violated this act if, at the time it accepts goods, wares, or merchandise for transportation in interstate commerce in the regular course of its business, it shall rely in good faith upon a signed statement of the consignor that the obtaining of transportation for or the transportation of such goods, wares, or merchandise will not constitute a violation of this act, but any consignor who shall knowingly sign any false statement made to a common carrier as aforesaid shall be deemed thereby to have violated this act. The failure of any consignor to furnish such a statement to a common carrier at the latter's request shall excuse the common carrier from its obligations to accept any goods for transportation in interstate commerce. In any proceeding arising out of an alleged violation of this act a showing that the goods, wares, or merchandise with respect to which the violation is alleged to have occurred were produced, wholly or in part by a person who used child labor subsequent to January 1, 1938, and within 6 months of the date of the alleged violation at the place of employment where said goods, wares, or merchandise were so produced in whole or in part shall be prima-facie evidence that the goods, wares, or merchandise with respect to which said violation is alleged to have occurred were produced, wholly or in part, through the use of child labor. In any such proceeding a copy of, extract from, or statement summarizing a record kept by, or document filed with, a government, church, or school authority establishing, or purporting to establish, the age or date of birth of a human being whose labor is alleged to have been used in the production of goods, wares, or merchandise shall be admissible in evidence when certified by or on behalf of such authority without further identification or authentication as prima-facie evidence of the age of such human being. The adduction of such prima-facie evidence shall cast upon the defendant or the party objecting to the forfeiture of goods, wares, or merchandise, as the case may be, the burden of rebutting or repelling such prima-facie evidence by affirmative proof to the contrary. All records, returns, applications, and other information filed with or kept by any public office, officers, or authority pursuant to the act of August 14, 1935 (ch. 531, 49 Stat. 620), or any rule or regulation promulgated pursuant thereto, shall be available for inspection by any public official authorized or qualified to enforce this act or to prosecute a violation thereof, and such public official may require that copies of, extracts from, or statements summarizing any of such records, returns, applications, or other information be certified and delivered to him by or on behalf of any public office, officers, or authority by whom the same are kept or with whom they be filed. Any public official authorized or qualified to enforce this act may utilize in that connection, and shall be entitled to rely upon, any and all records, returns, applications, certificates, and other information collected by or filed with authorities charged with the administration and enforcement of the laws of any State relating to the education and employment of human beings that may be made available to such public officials by such authorities and are deemed by such public officials to be useful and reliable.

SEC. 7. Any violation of this act shall be prosecuted in any court having jurisdiction of crime within the district in which said violation was committed, or from or into which any such goods, wares, or merchandise may have been carried or transported, or in any State or Territory, contrary to the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, on page 9, line 22, before the word "The", to insert "(a)"; in the same line, after the word "Labor" and the comma, to insert "through the Children's Bureau or such other agency within the Department of Labor as he may designate,"; and on page 10, after line 2, to insert:

(b) The Chief of the Children's Bureau or any persons designated by him, pursuant to the regulations issued under the preceding subsection, shall have authority to enter and inspect at any time factories or other places in which articles are produced or held for interstate commerce and to inspect records relating to the employment of or to the shipment of articles therefrom, and to make periodic reports of such inspections: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize any invasion of the privacy of any home by search or inspection or otherwise.

So as to make sections 8 and 9 read:

SEC. 8. (a) The Secretary of Labor, through the Children's Bureau or such other agency within the Department of Labor as he may designate, shall be charged with the enforcement of this act and shall be vested with full authority to administer its provisions and to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary for its enforcement.

(b) The Chief of the Children's Bureau or any persons designated by him, pursuant to the regulations issued under the preceding subsection, shall have authority to enter and inspect at any time factories or other places in which articles are produced or held for interstate commerce and to inspect records relating to the employment of or to the shipment of articles therefrom, and to make periodic reports of such inspections: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize any invasion of the privacy of any home by search or inspection or otherwise.

SEC. 9. Sections 1, 2, and 4 of this act are each intended to prescribe separate and distinct bases of regulation and the invalidity of any provision of any of said sections or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances is not intended to affect the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (H. R. 7084) to provide that all cabs for hire in the District of Columbia be compelled to carry insurance for the protection of passengers, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

BENEFIT PAYMENTS TO CERTAIN PRODUCERS

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 205) providing for benefit payments to cotton producers with respect to cotton produced in 1937 was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, an explanation of the joint resolution is desired.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the joint resolution, with regard to adjusting the price of cotton, was introduced by me. The original joint resolution provided for a bounty of 2½ cents. It went to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and the committee approved the joint resolution but modified it so as in effect to adopt what was called the 1935 plan, which was to authorize a 10-cent loan, but, in case of the sale of cotton, that the seller was to be paid a benefit payment of the difference between the then market price and 12 cents.

I have not pressed for consideration of the joint resolution, because some days ago a committee from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had a conference with the President and the Secretary of Agriculture, and one of the spokesmen of the committee reported on the floor of the Senate that the President and the Secretary of Agriculture had agreed to adopt, by Executive order, the plan outlined in the joint resolution.

The funds out of which these payments are to be made are provided for under section 32 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which was an amendment which I offered on the floor of the Senate, providing for setting aside 30 percent of tariff revenues in a special fund in order to compensate agricultural producers because of the burdens they bear by reason of the tariff, but from which they get no benefits.

Mr. President, the Department of Agriculture is working on a plan under existing law and under an appropriation proposed to be provided by an amendment to be offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. The plan proposed, though, does not quite coincide with that contained in the joint resolution. The Department proposes a loan to be made in a different amount, and other things. In deference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and because of the statement made by one of its members when the joint resolution first came up that the President did not want the joint resolution pressed, in order that what is proposed by it might be accomplished by Executive order, I shall not press for its passage today; but I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] whether the calendar will be called again tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to the Senator from Texas that I doubt it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will it be called again before we adjourn?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not certain. If we clean up the calendar fairly well today, we shall have 2 days of pretty busy work before us.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then I shall press for the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask the Senator not to press it.

Mr. CONNALLY. If this is the only opportunity the Senator from Texas will have, I shall be obliged to press for its adoption.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not wish to say that the Senator will be absolutely foreclosed, but whether another consideration of the calendar will be had depends upon a good many things.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall not press for the passage of the joint resolution if there is any hope of the calendar being again called. I want to see the proposal contained in the joint resolution undertaken.

Everyone knows what it is; and, unless it is going to be done by Executive order, I shall press for the passage of the joint resolution. It has the approval of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It is the same plan which we adopted in 1935 and which worked admirably. It had the effect of lifting the price of cotton above 12 cents in the market, so that the Government was not out any money whatever on much of this legislation. Its then advantage was that it operated so as not to pile up great cotton surpluses in the Government warehouses on which the Government had loaned money. It operated to move the crop into the foreign market, where we were able to compete with foreign producers, and to hold the foreign market, instead of turning over the foreign market to Brazil, Egypt, and all the other cotton-producing countries of the world.

So this plan has already proven itself. It cost the Government much less than the old loan plan. It did more than that: It reduced the surplus down to the point where the surplus is now comparatively small. For 75 years cotton has been a big item in the trade balances of the United States; and we must maintain our foreign markets in cotton, or else one of the great industries of America will shrivel and almost dry up.

Mr. President, this policy has been approved by the President, and at least partially by the Secretary of Agriculture. While I shall not press for it at the moment, I do expect to press for the passage of this joint resolution later, unless the Department of Agriculture speedily formulates its policy and has it adopted by Executive order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let the joint resolution be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2900) to establish a fund for the insurance of mortgages securing loans for construction or reconditioning of domestic floating property used for commercial purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURKE. I ask that the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

CITY COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2909) to amend an act of Congress approved June 17, 1870, entitled "An act to establish a police court for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the court established by section 1 of the act of June 17, 1870 (16 Stat. 153), entitled "An act to establish a police court for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", shall hereafter be known as the city court of the District of Columbia: Provided, That nothing in this act shall affect the jurisdiction or function of the court.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, at the end of line 8, it is proposed to strike out the period and insert:

And provided further, That the custody, control, operation, maintenance, and supervision of the court building shall be under the judges of the court, and any provision of law to the contrary is hereby repealed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall object to the consideration of the bill if that amendment is pressed. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, if it is necessary to go into the facts with reference to this matter, I am willing to do so, but I do not think that it should be necessary to go into the facts. I dislike very much to do so.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not think it should be necessary to do it; but, if the Senator from Utah insists upon maintaining his objection, I will present the situation that exists today in reference to the custody of this court building. I have before me the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 8.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I objected to the bill and asked that it go over.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I think I have a right to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah objected, but the Senator from Washington has 5 minutes in which to make explanation.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I have before me the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 8, page 5426. On that day the Senate was considering the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia. There was presented to the Senate an amendment which provided that the control of the police court building should rest in the hands of the District Commissioners. I raised the point of order, as is shown on page 5426 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; and upon the same page I pointed out that a similar point of order had been raised in the House of Representatives. The result was that the bill neither as passed by the Senate nor as passed by the House of Representatives, contained any provision in reference to the custody of this building. The bill went to conference. I did not pay any attention to the conference report. I did not know anything about it until after the bill was signed by the President. Then I found on page 21 of the act this provision, which had been inserted after it had been rejected on a point of order in both Houses:

Provided, That all buildings belonging to the District of Columbia shall be under the jurisdiction and control of the Commissioners of said District.

I present the facts to the Senate. As I said in the beginning, I was hopeful that it would not be necessary, that the Senator from Utah would not make it necessary for me to present these facts. The amendment which I proposed to the pending bill simply is a repeal of the section referred to of Public, No. 172, Seventy-fifth Congress, in order that the situation may be put back to the point where it was when the appropriation bill passed both Houses of Congress.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Coming down to the merits of the question, should not the control of the police court building and all other buildings in the District of Columbia be in charge of the District Commissioners?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I should have no objection, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska, to having that matter properly presented to the Congress of the United States. I make no effort to argue whether or not it should be on one side or the other. But I do say that it should be presented in a legislative act. In the first place, it should not have been attempted to put it on as a rider to the appropriation bill, and then, when it was removed from the appropriation bill by both Houses, to insert it in conference in violation of the rules of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. BURKE. The Senator from Washington is not, then, discussing the merits of the proposition?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I am discussing the way in which the legislation was enacted. As I have said, I did not want to discuss that if it had not been made necessary by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BURKE. I am interested in the merits of the proposition to have the buildings in the District placed in charge of the Commissioners. I know nothing about the procedure to which the Senator from Washington has objected.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KING. I do not want to take the Senator from Washington off the floor.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. KING. I know nothing about the matter to which the Senator refers; I know nothing about the law which now exists with respect to the control of public buildings. I do know, however, that the Commissioners—and this has been emphasized before the Committee on the District of Columbia, of which I am chairman—have said that they desire the control of the new police court building, as well as other public buildings so that they may make proper allocation of various activities of the District government. They are crowded, and they want opportunity to assign to this building or to that building one or the other departments or agencies of the District government. I know nothing about the controversy to which the Senator has referred, but I think it is desirable to adhere to the views of the District Commissioners until a measure is before the Senate which may more completely present their views.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, do I understand the bill is before the Senate?

Mr. KING. No; I objected to its consideration.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am sure the Senator will withdraw his objection if there is no amendment to be proposed to the bill.

Mr. KING. Oh, yes; if there is no amendment offered.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No amendment has been offered, as I understand.

Mr. KING. An amendment has been offered by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wyoming requests, as I do not want to interfere with the bill by putting an amendment on it which will cause it to be defeated, I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I make one suggestion?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

Mr. KING. It seems to me that the words "city court" on line 6, should be capitalized.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I move that the bill be amended by capitalizing the words "city court."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the amendment is agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

LANDS WITHIN BOUNDARIES OF CROW RESERVATION, MONT.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I wonder if, out of order, I may refer to Calendar No. 1290, being House bill 7649, and have it considered at this time, although it has not as yet been reached on the calendar? The reason I ask this courtesy is that I have to go to an executive meeting of the Interstate Commerce Committee in a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill referred to by the Senator from Montana?

There being no objection the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7649) relating to certain lands within the boundaries of the Crow Reservation, Mont., which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all of that area within the Crow Indian Reservation, Mont., described as: "Beginning at the northwest corner of lot 11, section 3; thence east along the north boundary line of the Crow Indian Reservation to the west meander line of the Big Horn River; thence southeasterly along the west meander line of the said Big Horn River to its intersection with the north and south center line of section 12; thence south along the said center line of sections 12 and 13 to the center of section 13; thence west to the northwest corner of the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of said section 13; thence south to the southeast corner of the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 25; thence west to the northwest corner of lot 2 section 27; thence north along the boundary line of the Crow Indian Reservation to the point of beginning, all in township 1 south, range 33 east, principal meridian, Montana, be, and the same is hereby, eliminated and excluded from the Crow Indian Reservation in the State of Montana.

SEC. 2. Nothing contained in this act shall be construed to discontinue or repeal the provisions of the Indian liquor laws which prohibit the sale, gift, barter, exchange, or other disposition of beer, wine, and other liquors to Indians of the classes set forth in the act of January 30, 1897 (29 Stat. L. 506; U. S. C., title 25, sec. 241).

SEC. 3. All acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. KING. I inquire what the bill is about.

Mr. WHEELER. All the bill does is to provide that the town of Hardin, Mont., which is technically within the boundaries of the Crow Reservation, shall be eliminated and excluded therefrom. It will not affect any Indian land. The town wants that to be done; the United States attorney has recommended the passage of the bill, and everyone else interested has also recommended it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask that calendar no. 1289, Senate bill 2701, of similar title to the bill just passed, be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, Senate bill 2701 is indefinitely postponed.

SEC. 8. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

REFERENCE TO CLAIMS OF DELAWARE INDIANS TO COURT OF CLAIMS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2326) to amend the act, as amended, entitled "An act to refer the claims of the Delaware Indians to the Court of Claims, with the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States", approved February 7, 1925, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment at the end of the bill to add a proviso, so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to refer the claims of the Delaware Indians to the Court of Claims, with right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States", approved February 7, 1925, as amended by the act approved March 3, 1927, and as further amended by the act approved June 4, 1936, is hereby reenacted; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims, and it is hereby authorized and directed, irrespective of the statutes of limitation, to reinstate and try cases nos. 43396 and 43399, The Delaware Indians v. The United States, heretofore dismissed on March 1, 1937, and to hear and determine the same on their merits, and either party shall have the right of appeal rather than by certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States: Provided, That the words "de novo" and the clause and without regard to any decision, finding, or settlement heretofore had in respect of such claims in the act of February 7, 1925, as amended, shall not apply to suits on claims filed after the approval of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire if the Senator from Oklahoma believes that at this late day this matter ought to be opened and sent to the Court of Claims?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a number of years ago Congress passed a jurisdictional bill, but before the case could be tried the Comptroller General had to make search of the records in order to make report. By the time the preliminaries were gone through with the attorneys for the Indians found that they could not perfect their case. When they finally got into court, a demurrer was filed on the ground of jurisdiction, and the court sustained the demurrer. This bill seeks to reenact the legislation and enable each Indian to go into court and try his case de novo.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. CAPPER. It is to compensate for a loss sustained through a clerical error in calculating the freight rate on the gasoline shipped from the oil company's plant to the quartermaster at Fort Riley.

Mr. KING. I have hastily read the report and have no objection.

SALE OF LANDS TO AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE, NEW MEXICO

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2759) authorizing the sale of certain lands to the Regents of the Agricultural College of New Mexico, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with an amendment on page 2, at the end of the bill, to add the following:

Any patent issued hereunder shall contain a reservation to the United States of all mineral deposits in the lands patented: Provided, That such minerals so reserved shall be prospected for, mined, and removed only in accordance with regulations which may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, there is another amendment which the Secretary of the Interior requested to have included and through an oversight it was not reported by the committee. On page 1, line 4, I move to strike out the words "quitclaim deed" and insert "patent", and on page 2, line 2, to strike out the word "deed" and insert "patent."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 4, to strike out the words "quitclaim deed" and insert "patent", and on page 2, line 2, to strike out the word "deed" and insert "patent", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to convey by patent to the Regents of the Agricultural College of New Mexico, a corporation, upon payment by such corporation of a purchase price at the rate of $1.25 per acre, the following-described lands: Sections 19, 29, and 30, the northeast quarter of section 31, the east half of the southeast quarter of section 31, township 22 south, range 4 east, New Mexico principal meridian. Such lands shall be used for the establishment of a recreational site and for educational purposes. The patent for such lands shall contain an express condition that if the corporation fails to use such lands for such purposes, or attempts to alienate such lands, title thereto shall revert to the United States. Any patent issued hereunder shall contain a reservation to the United States of all mineral deposits in the lands patented: Provided, That such minerals so reserved shall be prospected for, mined, and removed only in accordance with regulations which may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REVESTED LANDS IN OREGON

The bill (H. R. 7618) relating to the revested Oregon & California Railroad and reconveyed Coos Bay wagon road grant lands situated in the State of Oregon, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Utah is familiar with the question of revested lands which is involved in the bill. If the Senator is not familiar with it, he will find the full details set forth in the report, which covers several pages.

Mr. KING. How many acres are involved and are any of them mineral lands or are they arid or semiarid lands?

Mr. HATCH. This is not a bill to convey title at all. It relates to the administration of lands the title to which has already been revested in the Federal Government. It involves lands which were conveyed years ago as railroad grants and were forfeited to the Federal Government for noncompliance with the conditions of the grant. At that time, as I recall, it was agreed that certain compensation should be made to the counties involved, out of the proceeds arising from the grants in the administration of the lands by the Interior Department, in lieu of taxes which the counties had lost.

Through the years which have passed in 1916 and again in 1926, the Congress enacted statutes relating to the lands and made appropriations to the counties of sums in lieu of taxes. The pending bill does away with those provisions of law and allows administration of the lands to be made by the Secretary of the Interior under different conditions, by which the counties will participate on a percentage basis in the revenue or profit arising from the lands. It will relieve the Federal Government from the obligation to pay the various sums at various times in lieu of taxes.

Both Senators from Oregon, together with representatives from the counties who came to Washington, and representatives of the Interior Department were agreed upon the terms of the bill. There was one obstacle or one objection raised. It was suggested that a conflict sometimes arises between two departments of the Government as to which one should administer the lands. At our committee meeting the Forestry Service, Department of Agriculture, so we were informed, withdrew any objection of that sort and will let the lands remain as they are.

Mr. KING. I had some complaints a number of years ago that in these transactions involving revestment of title in the Federal Government, the rights of private citizens had been interfered with; that during past years they had entered upon the land as squatters in some instances and had set up title or claim to title, and some had made improvements; that they were perhaps trespassers in a technical sense, but did not regard themselves as trespassers either morally or otherwise. I was wondering whether a situation might arise involving disadvantage to people who had gone on the land as I have suggested.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] raised a similar question in one of the committee meetings when I was not present. However, he was present the day the committee ordered the bill reported and, as I understood, saw nothing in the bill that would change any status which might now exist as to private settlers. I think there is nothing in the bill which involves any existing rights that are not taken care of.

Mr. KING. Can the Senator, with his prophetic vision, anticipate what the cost to the Government may be?

Mr. HATCH. Denying of course any prophetic vision about anything, I may say that instead of added cost to the Federal Government, the bill will actually eliminate cost to the Federal Government.

Mr. KING. Can the Senator give any estimate of the possible or probable cost to the Federal Government?

Mr. HATCH. There will be no increased cost whatever. One of the purposes of the bill is to do away with the obligation which exists to reimburse counties in lieu of taxes and to place the matter strictly upon a percentage basis. The counties will come in and take their share of the proceeds.

There is no payment required on the part of the Federal Government, though in the past there has been a considerable expense to the Federal Government.

Mr. KING. Did the Senator regard the status heretofore existing as creating an obligation upon the part of the Federal Government to make reimbursement to counties?

Mr. HATCH. Yes; I think there was such an obligation, and it was recognized to the extent that the Federal Government has appropriated as much as $8,000,000 to carry out that obligation.

Mr. KING. I have heard the question raised—it has been raised a number of times in my presence—that there was no valid legal obligation upon the part of the Federal Government to make those contributions.

Mr. HATCH. I call the Senator's attention to the conclusion of the report prepared by the House committee, which, in a brief manner, sets forth the object of the bill:

> This bill is intended as a solution of the problems created by the Revestment Act of June 9, 1916, and the act of July 13, 1926. The timber assets of these lands, which were there directed to be destroyed—

That was practically the direction under those acts—> by early liquidation, are here required to be conserved and perpetuated. The deficit in the Federal Treasury there created, is here reimbursed. The payments to the counties, which there took the whole of the proceeds and created a deficit in the fund, are here limited to a percentage of the proceeds. It establishes a vast, self-sustaining timber reservoir for the future, an asset to the Nation and the State of Oregon alike. All of which is financed by the lands themselves.

That is the point I desired to call to the attention of the Senator from Utah. All departments, States, and counties interested agree that this is a very worthwhile bill.

Mr. KING. I consent to the consideration of the bill with the understanding, if the Senator will pardon me, that I should like to read the report this evening and confer with the Interior Department; and if tomorrow I desire to have the bill restored to the calendar, I shall make that motion. Meantime, I will ask the clerks not to transmit the bill out of the possession of the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico if any of the power which appears to be granted to the Secretary of the Interior extends outside the boundaries of the land included in the Revestment Act.

Mr. HATCH. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that it is the intention of the bill to confine the power and duties of the Secretary of the Interior to the area affected by the bill, and to have them extend no further. As evidence of that, I call the attention of the Senator to an amendment which has been offered regarding the words "regulation of stream flow." The question the Senator asks was raised in the committee, as to whether, by the use of the words "regulation of stream flow", the Secretary might be given some power or authority over the streams of the State. We did not report an amendment, but we did explain in our report—as the Senator will see if he will look at it—that we construe those words to mean the protection of the watershed and the waters of the area affected only, and not even to affect the waters coming into the streams.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is the area described or referred to in the bill the same area which is described or referred to in the Revestment Act?

Mr. HATCH. The same area; that is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7618), which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 2953) to provide a measure of damages for trespass involving timber and other forest products upon lands of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

SUBMERGED LANDS CONTAINING PETROLEUM DEPOSITS

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 208) relative to the establishment of title of the United States to certain submerged lands containing petroleum deposits, which was read, as follows:

> Whereas the petroleum reserves in the United States are constantly decreasing; and
>
> Whereas the oil reserves now owned by the United States are in serious danger of depletion or loss from various causes; and
> Whereas large petroleum deposits underlie various submerged lands along the coast of the United States and below low-water mark and within a distance of 3 miles under the ocean below said low-water mark; and
> Whereas all such submerged lands below said low-water mark and within such 3-mile limit lying along the coast of the United States are asserted to be the property of the United States; and
> Whereas various persons have heretofore entered, or in the immediate future intend and propose to enter, upon such submerged lands and remove the petroleum deposits underlying the same, without the consent or permission of the United States, and to the irreparable damage and injury of the United States; and
> Whereas immediate action on the part of the United States is necessary to preserve such petroleum deposits for the future use of the United States: Now, therefore, be it
> Resolved, etc., That the Attorney General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, by and through speedy and appropriate proceedings, to assert, maintain, and establish the title and possession of the United States to the submerged lands aforesaid, and all petroleum deposits underlying the same, and to cause and effectuate by proper proceedings the removal and ejectment of all persons now or hereafter trespassing upon or otherwise occupying the said submerged lands or removing the petroleum deposits therefrom, without the consent and permission of the United States, and through such proper proceedings to be by the said Attorney General instituted, to stop and prevent the taking or removing of petroleum products by others than the United States from the said submerged lands as aforesaid; and be it further
> Resolved, That the said Attorney General be, and he is hereby, authorized to bring such actions or suits in the name of the United States, and to incur such expenses and disbursements in connection therewith as he may deem properly necessary to effectuate and accomplish the directions and purposes of this joint resolution.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of this joint resolution.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am not familiar with all the details of the joint resolution as it was reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, but I do know that the bill proposes to establish the title of the United States to certain submerged lands containing petroleum deposits, and it is the intention of the Government that these submerged deposits shall ultimately become part of the naval oil reserve. There is in the report a long letter from the Navy Department strongly recommending that the joint resolution be enacted into law. I entertain the same view. In my opinion the joint resolution is desirable legislation and will tend to conserve the petroleum and other valuable deposits in submerged lands that are similar to the oil deposits which the Navy now has in its possession. The passage of the joint resolution is recommended by the Navy Department. It will add to our naval oil reserves.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

PAINTING OF "THE SIGNING OF THE CONSTITUTION"

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 206) to authorize the painting of the painting The Signing of the Constitution for placement in the Capitol Building was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK. Let the joint resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to the joint resolution which has just been passed over. If there should be any valid objection to the joint resolution, of course I should not urge its consideration.

During the past few years the Government has expended many millions of dollars for one purpose or another; but, so far as I know, the Capitol has had none of this money.

We have started to improve the Senate Office Building by a cooling system; and while some progress has been made on the cooling system, it is not as yet in operation. While we have some vacant spaces in the Capitol Building, and have the opportunity of filling one of those spaces, it seems to me to be entirely appropriate, and I can see no objection to having this vision of the reality of the signing of this immortal document painted upon canvas and placed here in the Capitol, where it shall remain forever.

The longer the matter goes, the more uncertain it will be that the scene will ever be reproduced. While we have a miniature of the picture on exhibition in the room adjoining the Senate Chamber, it occurs to me that since we now have an opportunity to have the painting executed, and the space is vacant, we should take advantage of the opportunity, and make provision for the painting.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I objected to the consideration of the joint resolution authorizing this picture to be painted because I do not believe it is the business of the Congress to pick out one particular artist and authorize him, at a very large fee, to paint a picture depicting a historical scene of such great importance.

Personally, I have no objection whatever—in fact, I think it is astonishing that it never has been done—to having painted and placed in the Capitol of the United States a picture of the signing of the Constitution; but because one artist has happened to make a rough sketch of such a painting, and is down here in person devoting some attention to lobbying for the passage of such a joint resolution, to say that we shall thereupon employ him and pay him the sum of $35,000 for the purpose of painting such a picture seems to me to be very bad legislative practice.

Moreover, Mr. President, I am frank to say that part of my objection to the joint resolution comes from the fact that I have read in the public press that if the joint resolution shall be passed, it is the purpose of the Architect of the Capitol to remove from the walls of the Capitol a picture which I have always thought was one of the most splendid I ever saw—the picture of American troops storming the heights of Chapultepec during the Mexican War. I should not be willing to have that picture taken down from the walls of the Capitol for any purpose whatsoever.

If the proponents of this measure chose to provide for the painting of a picture of the signing of the Constitution, to be competed for by various artists, and to be selected and approved by the Joint Committee on the Library, or the two Library Committees, I should have no objection, because I think the signing of the Constitution was a great historic event which certainly should be perpetuated in the Capitol; but to pick out one particular artist and say that he shall be employed by congressional enactment at a very large sum of money, without any competition and without any selection, seems to me, as I said, to be very bad legislative practice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been made, and the joint resolution has been passed over.

REORGANIZATION OF GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES

The bill (S. 2970) to provide for reorganizing agencies of the Government, extending the classified civil service, establishing a General Auditing Office and a Department of Welfare, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BYRD. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. AUSTIN subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Senate bill 2970 for the purpose of making just one comment on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont? The Chair hears none.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, this is a bill to provide for reorganizing agencies of the Government, extending the classified civil service, establishing a General Auditing Office and a Department of Welfare, and for other purposes.

One section of the bill according to the report thereon, namely, section 301, subsection (a), abolishes the General Accounting Office, and transfers to the Bureau of the Budget all of the functions vested in the General Accounting Office except those which, by the provisions of the bill, are vested in the newly created General Auditing Office. This is a matter of fundamental importance, and I am calling attention to it now in the hope that the public generally, as well as the Congress of the United States, may study the bill during the recess.

I have had a conversation with the chairman of the Committee on Government Reorganization, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], who said to me that the record of the hearings has not yet been printed, but that he believed it would be printed within a week, and that there is no expectation of taking up the bill at the pending session.

I speak of these matters in order that, if possible, we may attract attention to this very important bill, and have some public opinion upon it by the time we return in January.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next bill on the calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS SINEPUXENT BAY, MD.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7806) authorizing the State Roads Commission of the State of Maryland to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Sinepuxent Bay in Worcester County, Md., at Ocean City, Md., to replace a bridge already in existence, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 8, after "Worcester Street", to insert "or South Division Street or Wicomico Street", and on page 2, line 5, after the word "act", to insert "Provided, That notwithstanding the designation made in this act, if, within 3 months after the passage of this act, in response to a duly called and authorized election, the duly qualified and registered voters of Ocean City, Md., should, after participation in such special election, designate a preference for the erection of said bridge at some point other than at one of the three locations set forth in this act, then such designation of the location of said bridge shall be the point fixed for the building of said bridge, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided further, That in the event any site for said bridge be selected of which there is no record in the Office of the Chief of Engineers, said site shall be subject to the final approval of the Secretary of War", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the State Roads Commission of the State of Maryland be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across Sinepuxent Bay, at Worcester Street, or South Division Street or Wicomico Street, in Worcester County, Md., at Ocean City, Md., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act: Provided, That notwithstanding the designation made in this act, if, within 3 months after the passage of this act, in response to a duly called and authorized election, the duly qualified and registered voters of Ocean City, Md., should, after participation in such special election, designate a preference for the erection of said bridge at some point other than at one of the three locations set forth in this act, then such designation of the location of said bridge shall be the point fixed for the building of said bridge, anything in this act to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided further, That in the event any site for said bridge be selected of which there is no record in the Office of the Chief of Engineers, said site shall be subject to the final approval of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the State Roads Commission of the State of Maryland all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, I should like to have the bill go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

ERECTION OF A BUILDING AT THE NAVAL ACADEMY

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have to leave the Chamber shortly to attend a conference on the slum-clearance bill, and I should like to have two very short and brief matters disposed of before I go.

From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate bill 2963, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2963) authorizing the Superintendent of the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., to accept gifts and bequests of money for the purpose of erecting a building on land now owned by the United States Government at the Naval Academy, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Superintendent of the United States Naval Academy is hereby authorized to accept gifts and bequests of money from the United States Naval Institute, the Navy Athletic Association, and others, and to use such money to construct a building for use as a United States Naval Academy Museum on land now owned by the United States at the United States Naval Academy, which construction is hereby authorized, but shall involve no cost to the Government of the United States. The selection of the site and the design and general structure of the building shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Navy.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to accept, on behalf of the United States, the building authorized to be constructed by this act and to use and maintain such building as a United States Naval Academy Museum and for the administrative offices of the United States Naval Institute and the Navy Athletic Association.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to accept, receive, hold, administer, and expend gifts and bequests of personal property, and loans of personal property other than money, from individuals or others for the benefit of the aforesaid United States Naval Academy Museum, its collection, or its services. Gifts or bequests of money shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as trust funds under the title "United States Naval Academy Museum Fund", which funds will be subject to disbursement by the Secretary of the Navy for the purposes herein specified.

SEC. 4. Gifts or bequests for the benefit of the United States Naval Academy Museum, Annapolis, Md., its collection, or its services, shall be exempt from all Federal taxes.

SEC. 5. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized, upon request of the Secretary of the Navy, to invest, reinvest, or retain investments of the money or securities composing the United States Naval Academy Museum fund, or any part thereof, deposited in the Treasury pursuant to section 3 of this act, in securities of the United States Government or in securities guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States Government. The interest and profits accruing from such securities may be deposited to the credit of the United States Naval Academy Museum, and will be available to disbursements as provided in section 3 of this act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the bill merely authorizes the Superintendent of the Naval Academy to accept gifts and bequests of money for the purpose of erecting a building to be used as a naval museum on land now owned by the United States Government at the Naval Academy, and for other purposes.

The bill involves no expense to the Government, but permits a very unusual thing, the acceptance of $150,000 from the Navy Athletic Association and $50,000 from the United States Naval Institute, the money to be used as stated in the bill, for the building on the Naval Academy grounds of a Naval Academy museum. I think it would be very appropriate to have prompt action taken in order to show in a special manner our appreciation of this generous gift, and also to try to get action in the House of Representatives before we adjourn, so that the project may be begun at once.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts called this bill to my attention a short time ago, and on behalf of the minority, I am very glad to waive the rule with respect to bills lying over, and not to object to present consideration. I think any expression the Senate can make in appreciation of this philanthropy should be made, and made immediately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INVESTIGATION OF PRODUCTION COSTS OF CEMENTED SHOES

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the second matter I should like to have taken up is a resolution of special importance to the shoe industry. It is the last number on the calendar. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 1316.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 144) directing the Tariff Commission to investigate the production costs of cemented shoes, submitted by Mr. WALSH and Mr. LODGE on August 18, 1937, which had been reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment, on page 1, line 6, after the word "articles" to strike out "Cemented shoes, made wholly or in part by the process of cementing the sole to the upper", and to insert, "Women's and misses' shoes made by the cement process and dutiable at 20 percent ad valorem under paragraph 1530 (e) of the Tariff Act of 1930", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is directed, under the authority conferred by section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, and for the purposes of that section, to investigate the differences in the costs of production of the following domestic articles and of any like or similar foreign articles: Women's and misses' shoes made by the cement process and dutiable at 20 percent ad valorem under paragraph 1530 (e) of the Tariff Act of 1930.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, that is the measure about which we had some discussion in the Finance Committee.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask in this connection that a letter from the State Department be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, July 23, 1937.

The Honorable PAT HARRISON,
Chairman, Committee on Finance, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR HARRISON: I refer to your communication of June 30, 1937, requesting on behalf of the Senate Finance Committee a report from my Department on Senate Resolution 144, which would direct the Tariff Commission to make an investigation, under section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930, of the differences in costs of production of domestic and foreign cemented shoes, made wholly or in part by the process of cementing the sole to the upper.

Your request has been the subject of careful consideration in the Department, and I have had the benefit also of its consideration by two interdepartmental committees, the Executive Committee on Commercial Policy and the Trade Agreements Committee. As a result of this consideration, I am glad to offer the following comment upon the subject:

May I say first of all that in my opinion the fullest possible investigation into all pertinent facts and the most thorough consideration of these facts from the point of view of all American interests concerned is essential to any tariff action. The report of the Tariff Commission in this field, filed with your committee on June 26, does not, in my judgment, indicate the existence of an emergency requiring immediate action under section 336. It does indicate the desirability of watching the situation carefully, and in this connection I am informed that the Tariff Commission is continuing further inquiry into the facts. Moreover, it is important to recognize, with specific reference to the subject of your communication, that the type of investigation called for under section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930 is one limited in basis and scope of action. On the other hand, the powers conferred by the Trade Agreements Act rest upon a far broader basis than that set forth in section 336 of the tariff act, and thus permit a wider scope for reaching conclusions of benefit to the various interests concerned.

The institution at this time of the investigation envisaged in the proposed resolution would in my opinion have an unfavorable effect upon our foreign trade relations. On May 6, 1937, there was issued a public announcement to the effect that the negotiation of a trade agreement with Czechoslovakia is contemplated. That country is our leading foreign supplier of the product referred to in the proposed resolution, and the product is important in that country's trade with us. No decision relative to our tariff rates on shoes or on any other commodity has been taken in connection with these negotiations; it is evident, however, that an investigation under section 336 of a product important in the trade between the two countries might seriously impede the negotiations.

I realize fully that the announcement of contemplated trade negotiations with Czechoslovakia has disturbed certain sections of our domestic shoe industry which fear the possibility of a disruptive increase in competition from foreign sources. Attention should be called to the extreme care and deliberation exercised in the administration of the Trade Agreements Act. Prior to the making of any decision on any commodity, the whole field is carefully studied and full opportunity is given to all interested persons in this country to present their views, orally and in writing, and complete assurance is given that their presentations will be fully and carefully considered.

By the method of reciprocal negotiation which the authority to conclude trade agreements has made possible, there is larger opportunity to devise solutions which duly safeguard domestic producers against injury or disruptive increase in foreign competition but at the same time permit the other American interests concerned, including the interests of our agricultural and industrial export producers and of our consumers, to be taken adequately into account.

After most careful consideration I am convinced that concurrent action under section 336 would unnecessarily complicate the negotiation of a trade agreement with Czechoslovakia; and, therefore, I am in agreement with the view of the Executive Committee on Commercial Policy and of the Trade Agreements Committee that the passage at this time of Senate Resolution 144 is inadvisable.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

CLAIMS OF GEORGE PERDUE AND OTHERS

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to recur to Calendar 1277, House bill 6271, which was passed over, because no explanation was made. This is a bill conferring jurisdiction on the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia to hear and determine and render judgment upon the claims of certain parties, and I ask for consideration of the bill.

Mr. KING. I should like to have an explanation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6271) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claims of George Perdue, O. B. Ross, Sadie Washington, and the estate of Larry W. Fleming, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the Northern District of Georgia to hear, determine, and render judgment, as if the United States were suable in tort, upon the claims of George Perdue, O. B. Ross, Sadie Washington, and the estate of Larry W. Fleming, deceased, all of Atlanta, Ga., for damages resulting from personal injuries, death, and property damage received by them on March 6, 1933, by reason of an automobile collision involving a United States Army truck and trailer, on the Atlanta-Newnan Highway, near Palmetto, Ga.: Provided, That the judgment, if any, shall not exceed, in the case of George Perdue, $3,000; in the case of O. B. Ross, $3,000; in the case of Sadie Washington, $3,000; and in the case of the estate of Larry W. Fleming, $5,000.

SEC. 2. Suit upon such claims may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceedings for the determination of such claims, appeals therefrom, and payment of any judgments thereon shall be in the same manner as in the cases over which such court has jurisdiction under the provisions of paragraph twentieth of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the bill merely confers jurisdiction upon the District Court for the Northern District of Georgia as if the Government were suable in tort, for the reason that there is a sharp conflict as to the facts of the accident involved, resulting in one death and certain severe injuries of three other passengers in an automobile. The House committee, following the rule, as it stated in its report, thought it proper to refer the matter to the court rather than to undertake to decide it. I call attention to the fact that during this week the President vetoed a bill giving to certain claimants flat amounts, and he suggested in his veto message, as I recall, that it was a matter which might well have been referred to the court, and had the bill given jurisdiction to the court over the subject matter, the approval of the Chief Executive might have been given to the bill.

In this case an Army truck from Fort Benning, Ga., or traveling between Fort Benning and Fort McPherson, both being in Georgia, broke down on the road on a rainy night. The truck, with a long trailer, stopped on the pavement, and was standing on the pavement while the officer in charge or the driver of the truck endeavored to repair it. It stood there for some time, and a citizen who was traveling in his car back of the truck, going the same way, ran into the trailer and into the truck, resulting in the death of one of the passengers in the car, and very serious injury to the other occupants of the car. The amount of any recovery is limited in the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator that I think we are establishing rather bad precedents in permitting these cases of tort to be brought in the neighborhoods where the parties plaintiff reside. Why should this not go to the Court of Claims? We have referred a number of such cases to the Court of Claims.

Mr. GEORGE. The House provided in the bill for reference to the District Court, and I hope that in this instance the Senator will withhold his objection, because the evidence is in sharp conflict, but the preponderance of it strongly indicates that the Army truck had stopped on the pavement, without lights, and on a night dangerous to anyone traveling, and that the automobile collided with the rear of the truck, with the result I have just stated.

Mr. KING. It is a dangerous precedent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER

The bill (S. 1424) to repeal that provision in the act of March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. L. 976), directing the making of allotments to Indians of the Mission Indian Reservations, Calif., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let this go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

WALTER W. JOHNSTON

The bill (H. R. 2860) for the relief of Walter W. Johnston was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC-SCHOOL BUILDINGS IN UTAH

The bill (S. 2223) to provide for the construction, extension, and improvement of public-school buildings in Uintah County, Utah, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $150,000 for the purpose of cooperating with the Uintah County School District, Utah, for extension and improvement of school buildings: Provided, That the expenditure of any moneys so appropriated shall be subject to the condition that the schools maintained by said district shall be available to all the Indian children of the district on the same terms, except as to payment of tuition, as other children of said school district: Provided further, That plans and specifications for construction, enlargement, or improvement of structures shall be furnished by local or State authorities, without cost to the United States, and upon approval thereof by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs actual work shall proceed under the direction of such local or State officials. Payment for work in place shall be made monthly on vouchers properly certified by local officials of the Indian Service: Provided further, That any amount expended on any project hereunder shall be recouped by the United States within a period of 30 years, commencing with the date of occupancy of the project, through reducing the annual Federal tuition payments for the education of Indian pupils enrolled in public or high schools of the district involved, or by the acceptance of Indian pupils in such schools without cost to the United States, and in computing the amount of recoupment for each project interest at 3 percent per annum shall be included on unrecouped balances.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF INDIAN WARS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5787) granting pensions and increases of pensions to certain soldiers who served in the Indian wars from 1817 to 1898, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the first day of the next month after the enactment of this act, all surviving soldiers of the various Indian wars and campaigns who are now on the pension rolls or who may hereafter be placed thereon under the provisions of the acts of July 27, 1892, June 27, 1902, and May 30, 1908, as amended by the act of February 19, 1913, or under the act of March 4, 1917, or the act of March 3, 1927, shall be entitled to receive a pension not exceeding $55 per month and not less than $20 per month, proportioned to the degree of inability to earn a support as determined by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and in determining such inability each and every infirmity shall be duly considered, and the aggregate of the disabilities shown be rated: Provided, That any such person who has reached the age of 62 years shall be entitled to receive a pension of $25 a month; in case such person has reached the age of 68 years, $35 a month; in case such person has reached the age of 72 years, $45 a month; and in case such person has reached the age of 75 years, $55 a month: Provided further, That any such person who is now or hereafter may become, on account of age or physical or mental disabilities, helpless or blind, or so nearly helpless or blind as to need or require the regular aid and attendance of another person, shall be paid the rate of $72 a month: And provided further, That no one while an inmate of the United States Soldiers' Home or of any National or State Soldiers' Home shall be paid more than $50 per month under this act.

SEC. 2. That the increased rates of pension herein provided shall be effective from and after the first day of the month following the enactment of this act as to those then in receipt of Indian war service pension, and as to those with claims then pending who are shown to be entitled to pension under one of the acts enumerated herein, and as to all other cases where entitlement under this act is shown, such pension shall commence from the date of filing application therefor in the Veterans' Administration on and after the enactment of this act, and in such form as may be prescribed by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs: Provided, That pension of $72 per month granted under this act on the basis of requiring the regular aid and attendance of another person shall commence from the date of receipt in the Veterans' Administration of the evidence showing the requisite condition or the date of filing application therefor on and after the enactment of this act, whichever is the later date, but such pension of $72 per month shall not be awarded to any person for any period during which he is maintained in an institution by the United States Government or a political subdivision thereof and is being furnished with nursing or attendant service: Provided further, That in no event shall the rates of pension provided in this act be effective prior to the first day of the month following the enactment thereof.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the bill and a statement of the amount involved.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, the amount involved is something like $190,000 annually. The bill affects some 3,000 veterans of the Indian wars and campaigns occurring between 1817 and 1898. It would place those veterans in substantially the same category in which the Spanish-American War veterans now are. The bill is recommended by the Veterans' Administration and there is no objection to it from the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. KING. Did the Senator make the amendments which were suggested by General Hines?

Mr. McGILL. I do not know of any amendments suggested by General Hines. The bill is recommended by General Hines.

Mr. KING. I read from the report:

> The Acting Director, Bureau of the Budget, has advised the Veterans' Administration that there would be no objection to this report, including the suggested changes incorporated in the revised bill and explained herein.

I was wondering whether the bill had been revised in conformity with the suggestion.

Mr. McGILL. That is my understanding. That is the way it passed the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS TO PEACETIME VETERANS

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7531) to afford protection of pension benefits to peacetime veterans placed on the pension rolls after March 19, 1933, and for other purposes, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph X of Executive Order No. 6098 dated March 31, 1933 (Veterans' Regulation No. 10 (38 U. S. C., ch. 12, appendix)), as amended by paragraph 1, Executive Order No. 6568, dated January 19, 1934 (Veterans' Regulation No. 10 (c)), is hereby canceled as of the date of enactment of this act.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let us have an explanation of this bill.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, this bill affects a very few peacetime veterans who were affected by the economy act. The Veterans' Administration states that the savings made by the Government are less than the cost of administration.

Mr. KING. How many beneficiaries will there be?

Mr. McGILL. I should have to look that up. There are just a very few.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAINTING OF "THE SIGNING OF THE CONSTITUTION"

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 206, being Calendar No. 1285.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 206) to authorize the painting of the painting The Signing of the Constitution for placement in the Capitol Building, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Architect of the Capitol be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ the artist Howard Chandler Christy to paint upon canvas (approximately 20 feet by 30 feet in size), at a price not exceeding $35,000, his painting known as The Signing of the Constitution. The said painting shall be subject to the approval of the Joint Committee on the Library and, when so approved, shall be mounted in a space in the Capitol Building to be selected by the Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the joint resolution, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment in the nature of a substitute will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert the following:

> That the Architect of the Capitol be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ an artist, to paint upon canvas (approximately 20 feet by 30 feet in size), at a price not exceeding $35,000, a painting of the scene at the signing of the Constitution. The said painting shall be subject to the approval of the Joint Committee on the Library, and when so approved shall be mounted in a space in the Capitol Building to be selected by the Architect of the Capitol: Provided, That in placing such picture no existing painting shall be displaced.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I have no objection to the joint resolution as it is proposed to be amended. I think the scene at the signing of the Constitution ought to be preserved in the Capitol. However, I should like to suggest to my friends who are on the Joint Committee on the Library that they exercise a little circumspection in approving the painting now to be authorized. I call their attention to the fact that there is one very important historical scene depicted in the rotunda of the Capitol, a painting of heroic size, in which appear two little girls having five hands between them; and another painting, that of Pocahontas, in which an Indian is shown to have six toes. In connection with the painting of the signing of the Constitution, I hope more care will be exercised by the Joint Committee on the Library than has heretofore been exercised in approving pictures to be placed in the Capitol.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution to authorize the painting of the scene at the signing of the Constitution for placement in the Capitol Building."

CHARLES E. NAMES

The bill (H. R. 1858) for the relief of Charles E. Names was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN]? With respect to the claim of Charles E. Names, does the Senator recall whether or not the admonition of the Comptroller of the Currency was followed and the interest eliminated? If so, I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. President, the Post Office Department reported favorably upon the bill. Is that the question the Senator asked?

Mr. KING. My recollection of the report on the bill is that it was approved on condition that the interest should be eliminated.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. And the bill was so drawn.

Mr. KING. That condition was complied with?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. KING. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORBA CARESS

The bill (H. R. 2339) for the relief of Orba Caress was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRANK LEE BORNEY

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate recur to Calendar No. 1258, being House bill 5112. When the bill was called on the calendar, objection was made, but I understand the objection has since been withdrawn.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I interposed an objection in order to find out what was meant by the reference in the report to contributory negligence. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND], who reported the bill, has since returned to the Chamber; and he informs me that the question arose as to whether the claimant had knowledge of the dangerous character of the dynamite by which he was injured; that the accident occurred, in part, through his own negligence, but chiefly through the negligence of an agent of the Government. That being so, I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 5112) for the relief of Frank Lee Borney was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (H. R. 3276) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States District Court for the District of New Jersey to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of the Delaware Bay Shipbuilding Co., Inc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], who reported the bill, whether from the investigation which he has made he believes there is any liability, or any probable or possible liability, on the part of the Government?

Mr. ELLENDER. There is a probable liability on the part of the Government.

Mr. KING. And is it a case which the Senator believes ought to go to the court?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; it is. The amount involved is about $4,500 or $4,600.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIEN VETERANS OF WORLD WAR

The bill (H. R. 4291) to extend further time for naturalization to alien veterans of the World War under the act approved May 25, 1932 (47 Stat. 165), to extend the same privileges to certain veterans of countries allied with the United States during the World War, and for other purposes, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SEC. 3. The bonds herein authorized shall be coupon in form and shall mature in not to exceed 20 years from the date thereof. JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 201) for the relief of certain persons conducting farming operations whose crops were destroyed by hailstorms was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of the joint resolution. Storms, floods, and heavy rains have destroyed crops in many places. It seems to me this is an attempt to discriminate in favor of certain geographical subdivisions.

Mr. AUSTIN. I object to the present consideration of the joint resolution on behalf of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], who was called from the Senate Chamber. He asked me to object to the joint resolution.

Mr. KING. I also ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be passed over.

SALE OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7950) to amend the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, which had been reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, in section 1, page 2, line 17, after the word "act", to strike out "This subsection" and insert "The provisions of this subsection relating to notice by advertisement in some newspaper of general circulation", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (b) of section 14 of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. (b) Before granting a retailer's license, except a retailer's license class E or class F, the Board shall give notice by advertisement published once a week and for at least 2 weeks in some newspaper of general circulation published in the District of Columbia. The advertisement so published shall contain the name of the applicant and a description by street and number, or other plain designation, of the particular location for which the license is requested and the class of license desired. Such notice shall state that remonstrants are entitled to be heard before the granting of such licenses and shall name the time and place of such hearing. There shall also be posted by the Board a notice, in a conspicuous place, on the outside of the premises. This notice shall state that remonstrants are entitled to be heard before the granting of such license and shall name the same time and place for such hearing as set out in the public advertisement; and, if remonstrance against the granting of such license is filed, no final action shall be taken by the Board until the remonstrant shall have had an opportunity to be heard, under rules and regulations prescribed by said Board. Any person willfully removing, obliterating, marring, or defacing said notice shall be deemed guilty of a violation of this act. The provisions of this subsection relating to notice by advertisement in some newspaper of general circulation shall not apply to the issuance of a license to a retailer for any place of business if such retailer is the holder of a license of the same class for the same place and if said last-mentioned license is in effect on the date the application for the new license is filed."

SEC. 2. That subsection (d) of section 14 of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 14. (d) A separate application shall be filed with respect to each place of business. The required license fee shall be paid to the collector of taxes and his duplicate receipt shall accompany the application for license. In the event the license is denied the fee shall be returned. Every such application shall be verified by the affidavit of the applicant, if an individual, or by all of the members of a partnership, or by the president or vice president of a corporation. If any false statement is knowingly made in such application, or in any accompanying statement under oath which may be required by the Commissioners or the Board, the person making the same shall be deemed guilty of perjury. The making of a false statement in any such application, or in any such accompanying statement, whether made with or without the knowledge or consent of the applicant, shall, in the discretion of the Board, constitute sufficient cause for the revocation of the license."

SEC. 3. That the second paragraph of section 17 of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"That in the event the Board at any time shall order the suspension of any license a notice may be posted by the Board, in a conspicuous place, on the outside of the licensed premises, at or near the main street entrance thereto; which notice shall state that the license theretofore issued to the licensee has been suspended and shall state the time for which said license is suspended, and state that the suspension is ordered because of a violation of the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, or of the Commissioners' regulations adopted under authority of said District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act."

SEC. 4. That the District of Columbia Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, as amended, is hereby further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 39. (a) It shall be unlawful for anyone, except a public or common carrier or the holder of a manufacturer's, wholesaler's, or retailer's license issued under this act, to transport, import, bring, or ship or cause to be transported, imported, brought, or shipped into the District of Columbia from without the District of Columbia any wines, spirits, or beer in a quantity in excess of 1 gallon at any one time.

"(b) No public or common carrier shall transport or bring into the District of Columbia wine, spirits, or beer in a quantity in excess of 1 gallon at any one time for delivery to any one person in the District of Columbia other than the holder of a manufacturer's, wholesaler's, or retailer's license issued under this act.

"(c) The provisions of this section shall not apply to bona-fide possessors of old stocks who are moving into the District of Columbia nor to embassies or diplomatic representatives of foreign countries, nor to wines imported for religious or sacramental purposes, nor to wine, spirits, and beer to be delivered to the holder of a manufacturer's, wholesaler's, or retailer's license issued under this act.

"(d) The penalty for violation of this section shall consist of the forfeiture of the beverages transported, imported, or shipped or caused to be transported, imported, brought, or shipped in violation of this section, and a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not more than 6 months."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That concludes the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2263) providing for per-capita payments to the Seminole Indians in Oklahoma from funds standing to their credit in the Treasury, which was, on page 2, line 1, to strike out all after the word "prescribe" down to and including the word "Indians" in line 5.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS USING PANAMA CANAL

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 5417, providing for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, being Calendar No. 1188.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri. The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 5417) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "tonnage", to insert:

Provided, Thtat the basic rules of measurement shall not be charged except after public hearing and 6 months' public notice of such change.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 412 of title 2 of the Canal Zone Code, approved June 19, 1934, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Tolls on merchant vessels, Army and Navy transports, colliers, hospital ships, supply ships, and yachts shall be based on net vessel-tons of 100 cubic feet each of actual earning capacity determined in accordance with the Rules for the Measurement of Vessels for the Panama Canal prescribed by the President and as may be modified by him from time to time by proclamation, and tolls on other floating craft shall be based on displacement tonnage: Provided, That the basic rules of measurement shall not be changed except after public hearing and 6 months' public notice of such change. The rate of tolls on laden vessels shall not exceed $1, nor be less than $0.75 per net vessel-ton as determined under the aforesaid rules, and on vessels in ballast without passengers or cargo the rate may be less than the rate of tolls for vessels with passengers or cargo. In addition to the tolls based on measurement or displacement tonnage, tolls may be levied on passengers at rates not to exceed $1.50 for each passenger. The levy of tolls is subject to the provisions of article XIX of the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Panama, entered into November 18, 1903, and of article I of the treaty between the United States of America and the Republic of Colombia proclaimed March 30, 1922."

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect and be enforced on and after March 1, 1938.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I have had printed certain amendments to this bill, which lie on the table. I ask that the first amendment, which is an amendment to the committee amendment, be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 2, after the word "measurement", in the committee amendment, it is proposed to insert "or rate of tolls."

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the subject of the amendment of the Senator from New York is adequately and specifically provided for in section 411 of title II of the Canal Zone Code which is not being amended by this bill at all. Under that provision of the Canal Zone Code a change in toll rates requires 6 months' notice, and that I assume is the only purpose of the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York. It is absolutely unnecessary and might cause complications.

Mr. COPELAND. As I understand the matter, the Senate committee recognized the right of the shipowners to hearings and notice in connection with the matter of Canal tolls?

Mr. CLARK. That is as to amending the rules of measurement. The matter of changing the tolls is already provided for under the Canal Zone Code.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator does not think, then, that hearings would be limited to changes in the rules of measurement?

Mr. CLARK. I do not, for the reason that the other provision now proposed by the Senator from New York is already provided for by law.

Mr. COPELAND. That is, the statute already provides for notice of a change in the rate of tolls? That is what the Senator means?

Mr. CLARK. That is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. My amendment would extend the right to a hearing and notice both to proposals to change the rules of measurement and to change the rate of tolls. Does the Senator believe that the bill as he has presented it anticipates the extending of notice and of hearing both to proposed changes in rules of measurement and changes in the rate of tolls?

Mr. CLARK. In the one case provision is already made by law, and the committee amendment was drawn in the form in which it appears simply because the question of a change of toll rates was already provided for.

Mr. COPELAND. I accept at par, as I always do, what the Senator from Missouri says, that this bill provides for the one case and the existing law provides for the other?

Mr. CLARK. That is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. And, therefore, there is no need of any change in the bill in this respect?

Mr. CLARK. I do not think there can be any question about that.

Mr. COPELAND. I think that is true, and I withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York is withdrawn.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I send forward another amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 9, after the word "cargo" it is proposed to insert "Tolls upon vessels for transit in excess of ten in any one fiscal year shall be reduced 25 percent."

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, that amendment is objectionable for several different reasons. In the first place, if the amendment were adopted it would materially reduce the toll collections to a select few who are already adequately taken care of and would necessitate a general increase of toll charges on all other vessels passing through the Panama Canal in order to make up the difference.

More than that, I may say that the preference contained in this amendment would set up a system which has been outlawed by law in this country for 40 years in the case of railroads, namely, a system of rebating by giving to the larger shippers or larger customers a preference over smaller shippers and smaller customers. It seems to me to be a very dangerous proposal, and one which the Congress would not be willing to enter into in the case of vessels passing through the Panama Canal when it has refused to allow similar preferences in the case of railroads or other carriers within the United States.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator and I were on the same side of this bill last year and the year before.

Mr. CLARK. I think the Senator is mistaken as to that. I was in favor of the committee's report last year, and that was postponed by the adoption of a motion to recommit with instructions to the committee to await the report of this impartial Commission before the measure was enacted. The impartial Commission has been appointed; it has conducted its hearings; it has made its report; and this proposed legislation is now designed to carry into effect the purposes of the Commission's report. Therefore, I think that the Senator is in error when he says that he and I were on the same side 2 years ago, for I was in favor of the committee's report at that time, while the Senator from New York, as I recall, was in favor of recommitting the bill, or postponing action on it, or making some other disposition of it.

Mr. COPELAND. I think probably the Senator is correct, although we are usually on the same side, and, naturally, I fell into that error.

Mr. CLARK. It is one time the Senator happened to be wrong.

Mr. COPELAND. Perhaps I am wrong about that, but I am going to try to see if I can develop reasons why the Senator should be convinced that now I am right. In the first place it is not contended by the Canal authorities that they need more money from tolls. They now collect much more than they ought to.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. Would the Senator be willing to consider the rates of toll charged vessels passing through the Panama Canal and the toll charged vessels passing through the Suez Canal, for instance, as a fair basis of comparison? Is it not a fact that vessels passing through the Panama Canal pay only some 46 percent of the toll paid by vessels passing through the Suez Canal?

Mr. COPELAND. I admit at once that we have had a much more liberal policy in regard to the Panama Canal. That goes back to the days of Theodore Roosevelt when it was desired by the American people to make the Panama Canal a gift to all the world and to make the collections sufficient only to pay the expenses, to pay the overhead. But, as a matter of fact, the tolls which have been fixed result in collections far in excess of the overhead of the canal. It has been a money-making enterprise. Since we last considered this matter we have entered on a new policy with regard to the American merchant marine. We are proposing to subsidize our ships.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, if the Senator will let me interrupt him at that point, does he not think that the subsidy that has been provided by law in the setting up of the Maritime Commission is a sufficient subsidy? Heaven knows that we have agreed to subsidize as to construction and as to operation and almost as to the payment of deficits. We have agreed to every sort of subsidy almost that it is possible to conceive of, and I cannot see, for the life of me, why it is also necessary for shipping companies to have, by subterfuge, another and an additional indirect subsidy, of which foreign nations would receive 60 percent, by trying to gouge in the payment of tolls on vessels passing through the Panama Canal.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not think I have quite completed my argument.

Mr. CLARK. I did not mean to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. COPELAND. The fact is that those that use the Canal in a wholesale way are largely American ships, are they not? Those making regular transit are largely American ships. Some of them make one trip a year; others make a great many trips a year. The question is when we are trying to build up an American merchant marine if it is not wise to assist the cause by low tolls.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I will yield in a moment. The ships making a transit of the Canal are not given the benefit of a subsidy such as is given to those traveling to foreign ports.

Mr. CLARK. I understand that.

Mr. COPELAND. These are intercoastal ships going from one port of the United States to another port of the United States, and it seems to me that, in the promotion of American industry, we ought, so far as we can without bankruptcy, encourage these lines. That is the thought I had in mind.

Mr. CLARK. That is precisely the same argument that was advanced on behalf of railroad rebating; that a shipper who had more business to give to the railroads was entitled to preferential treatment over a smaller shipper. In other words, according to the theory of the Senator from New York, a company which is so located and so operated that it can pass a vessel through the Canal more frequently should have preferential treatment over another shipping line whose vessels could have an equal use of the Canal, but do not happen to be in a position to make as frequent trips.

I listened with very great interest to the testimony before the Committee on Interoceanic Canals; I read the pretenses that were made in this regard before the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries; and I must say that there was not a single argument made at either of those hearings that did not come to essentially the same very vital question which was considered by the Congress of the United States when they outlawed railroad rebating.

Mr. COPELAND. There may be much truth in what the Senator says; but yet it seems to me that since the railroads sell commutation tickets—I can buy a 30-day ticket for transportation between my place in the country and New York City for about $15——

Mr. CLARK. Yes; that is perfectly true; but the Senator cannot under the law ship 100,000 tons of any material for any less per ton than he can ship 1 ton. That regulation is for the protection of shippers. There has never been any actual toll laid on passenger traffic through the Panama Canal. Therefore the analogy of the Senator from New York as to passenger commutation tickets has no application whatever in this case.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, if I cannot convince as reasonable a man as the Senator from Missouri, I could not hope to convince the Senate, and so I shall withdraw the amendment and ask the Senator about another proposal. But does he not think, with this amendment, it would be possible to fix a lower rate than the one established in the bill?

Mr. CLARK. No; I do not. The rates announced within the limitations set up by the bill would mean a reduction in revenue to the Panama Canal administration, based on 1936 figures, of $1,000,000 a year. They are willing to take the reduction because under the bill a definite rate base and a definite system of measurement are established on which tolls are to be based, under which they will be enabled to pay the expenses of the operation of the Panama Canal. It is possible to do that, even though there is a reduction of millions of dollars in the rate base heretofore used, because by the establishment of a definite system of measurements instead of a dual system of measurements the Canal administration will be able to foretell and estimate with some sense of accuracy what the revenues of the Canal administration will be.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me send forward another amendment and have it stated, because it answers the objection of the Senator to the suggestion I just made of an immediate reduction in toll rates. Let me see what the Senator has to say about the amendment. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it may be stated.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, what happened to the other amendment of the Senator from New York?

Mr. COPELAND. I withdrew it. I said if I could not convince the reasonable Senator from Missouri, I could not convince so reasonable a Senator as the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from New York will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 11, after the word "passenger", it is proposed to insert the following:

> In prescribing the rates of tolls the President shall so fix such rates that when applied to the volume of vessel tonnage transiting the Canal the transit revenues together with an amount equivalent to the tolls lost by the free transit of United States public vessels and other net revenues will be sufficient to cover all expenses and to provide a return of 3 percent per annum upon the depreciated investment of the United States in the Panama Canal (exclusive of the Panama Railroad Co.), which as of June 30, 1936, shall not exceed $476,000,000.

Mr. COPELAND. There is an amendment which the Senator from Missouri can accept.

Mr. CLARK. Of course, I could not accept the amendment. The purpose of the committee in writing the bill, and of the House in passing it by unanimous vote, was to carry into effect the recommendations of the impartial committee provided for in the amendment of the law 2 years ago with the very active support of the Senator from New York. The tolls committee in its report very definitely recommended against the inclusion in the legislation of the details contained in the amendment just offered by the Senator from New York.

Moreover, as the traffic through the Canal is 60 percent foreign and only 40 percent American, the application of free tolls on American public vessels would benefit foreign vessels more than American vessels, and the proposal was definitely recommended against by the committee, as shown on page 79 of Senate Document 23.

Mr. COPELAND. That is to say, this very matter was given serious consideration by the committee?

Mr. CLARK. That is unquestionably true.

Mr. COPELAND. And after such consideration it was rejected?

Mr. CLARK. That is true. The depreciated investment, according to the report of the committee, which has been reviewed and sustained by the accounting officials of the Treasury Department, is $506,486,576.60, a sum more than $40,000,000 less than the sum estimated and figured by the Governor of the Canal Zone in his last annual report. This impartial committee was composed of Dr. Johnson, of the University of Pennsylvania, a very eminent authority on such matters; Admiral Rock, whom I think the Senator from New York will agree is one of the very ablest officers in the naval service of the United States——

Mr. COPELAND. I fully agree to that.

Mr. CLARK. And former Governor Weaver, of Nebraska——

Mr. COPELAND. Another good man.

Mr. CLARK. They carefully and prayerfully went into the subject of the capitalized value or capitalized investment of the United States in the Panama Canal on which the tolls should be charged at a rate sufficient to return a fair carrying charge on the investment.

As a matter of fact, they excluded from consideration some elements which I think should have been included in the rate base. For instance, they excluded the element of reinvested capital which, under the law of any State in the Union, I believe, and under the practices of every public-service commission, or every utility commission in the United States, would be considered as part of the rate base on which tolls should be charged. After rejecting doubtful elements of value, they deliberately arrived at this figure as the figure to set for a rate base on which the Panama Canal authority would be enabled to support itself. I do not believe the basic figures can be reduced below that point without very seriously upsetting the whole equilibrium and making impossible the settled condition contemplated by the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Then I withdraw the amendment on the strength of the statement made by the Senator from Missouri, and send forward another amendment. I can say that this amendment and perhaps all of the amendments which have been presented were submitted with a view of making certain for the record that there has been a thorough study of all of the problems which have presented themselves to ship operators.

Mr. CLARK. I may say to the Senator from New York that elaborate hearings were held before the House Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, of which hearings the Senate committee had the benefit. I had anticipated and hoped that it would not be necessary to have further hearings before the Senate committee, but in view of the desire and suggestion of certain interested parties that there might be additional hearings in the Senate, the Senate committee held hearings for several days and gave opportunity to every interested person to come before the committee and present any suggestions for amendments that he might desire.

Mr. COPELAND. I withdraw the amendment which I had previously offered and now offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the proper place in the bill the following:

> Shelter deck cargo type vessels when carrying cargo not requiring protection from the sea, such as lumber, to the extent of deckload capacity of well-deck type of vessels and unoccupied cargo spaces in any laden vessel, or part thereof, shall be exempt from tolls not to exceed 15 percent of the Panama Canal net tonnage.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, that is another provision giving a special preference to a particular class of vessels. The whole purpose, the essential purpose of the bill is to get away from the dual system of measurements by which it has been possible, by experts studying the provisions of the two systems of measurements, by cutting a more or less temporary hatch, to convert a cargo deck into a passenger deck even though it might not afford accommodations for more than one passenger, or by other devices of that sort.

It seems to me to load this measure down with such a provision as now proposed in the amendment of the Senator from New York would be to defeat the whole purpose of the bill. In other words, it seems to me the matter should be subjected to uniform regulation.

There are provisions for the Panama Canal system of measurements. It is provided that before a change can be made in that system of measurement there shall be due notice and due hearing by a constituted authority. It would seem to me the proper thing to do is to present the case to that authority as to particular shelter deck or a particular deck classification, rather than to undertake, by an amendment to the pending bill, to nullify the whole purpose and effect of the bill to adopt a uniform system of measurements.

Mr. COPELAND. Let me ask the Senator whether under the law the Canal authorities would have power, in case they saw fit to do so, to make such a preferential rate as I have suggested?

Mr. CLARK. I have not any doubt that the President would have authority to do that. Of course the Canal Administration acts for the President. The President is given the authority to approve the rules of measurement of the Canal Administration. I assume that the hearings provided for in the bill will be conducted by such officer as the President may designate; and, subject to the President's approval, he would have, in my opinion, the right to make such a change as the Senator has suggested.

I may say to the Senator from New York that in the hearings before the committee there was a great dispute between the shipping people themselves, and also between various shipping elements and the Panama Canal authorities, as to the classification of shelter decks and particularly of deck loads. Some of the persons engaged in hauling lumber, particularly between the coasts, had one view as to the question of imposing tolls on deck loads. Other persons who had constructed different types of vessels in competition with them had a very different idea of the matter of imposing tolls on deck loads.

The matter being a highly technical one, as one member of the committee I am perfectly frank to say that I do not believe the committee, after listening to a good deal of evidence on the subject, was in any position to determine that question; and if the committee which listened to the hearings was not able to determine it, I do not believe the Senate is in any better position to determine it. It seems to me that the authorities with competent technical experience and information should have this highly technical point left to them for determination.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I served as a member of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, I should think about 10 or 12 years ago, and, of course, at that time I came to know something about the subject and to have some opinions on it. I feel satisfied that from the rumpus we had last year there has resulted this bill, which, as I view it, is a great deal better than the one we had before.

Mr. CLARK. If the Senator will yield, I do not know whether or not the Senator has had an opportunity to examine in any detail the very voluminous report of the President's committee. I myself have had an opportunity to examine it only in a more or less cursory fashion; but I believe that the committee proceeded in its consideration with absolute impartiality and with great technical ability and experience, and that the report contains a mass of information laying down in general a policy which, if followed by the present President and future Presidents—as it doubtless will be—will tend to do justice to the shipping interests and to the American public.

I may say to the Senator from New York that so far as I am personally concerned, I have always been in favor of not charging anything to American ships passing through the Panama Canal, and making foreign vessels passing through the Canal pay for its upkeep. That is substantially what has been done by Great Britain in the case of the Suez Canal. That, however, is an entirely different proposition, and a bridge which it seems to me will have to be crossed when we come to it, and ought not to be injected as a complication on this bill, which is for the purpose of setting up, once and for all, a standard upon which the Panama Canal authorities may operate.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I desire to ask one question, as I must go to a meeting of a conference committee.

To my mind, one of the objections to the old proposal was the fact that the new rates seemed to favor the large concern, the great oil concerns, and so forth. Is the Senator from Missouri satisfied that the rates now are more equitable and better distributed than they were?

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator from New York that it was explained in great detail, in a technical way which I cannot hope to emulate, that certain very important concessions had been made against the assumption which the Senator has just made. In other words, I do not think there can be any question whatever that the Canal tolls rules, which both the President and the Secretary of War have announced are to be put into effect, correct the situation to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, the test of the pudding is in the eating. We can try out this new system, and perhaps in a year or 2 or 3 years we shall know better how it works; but in the meantime, while I should have been glad to have some of these amendments adopted, I desire to congratulate the Senator from Missouri upon his great skill and studious attention to the problems and details of a very technical question.

So, Mr. President, I withdraw the amendment.

LEASE OF POST-OFFICE BUILDING AT GROVER, N. C.

Mr. McKELLAR. From the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I report back favorably without amendment House bill 4402, concerning a post-office lease in North Carolina, and call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] to it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of this bill. It has the favorable report of the full Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated by the clerk.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 4402) to continue in effect a certain lease for the quarters of the post office at Grover, N. C., and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, may the proposal be submitted, so that we may understand what it is?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will again state the title of the bill.

The Chief Clerk restated the title of the bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, for the information of the Senator from Vermont, I will state that this bill has been passed by the House. It provides for payment of the rental of a post-office building for a period of 2 years, during which time the Government could not pay the rent for the reason that the office had dropped from a third-class to a fourth-class status, and under the law the Government could not pay rental except to the extent of 15 percent. The passage of the bill has been recommended by both Post Office Committees.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 4402) was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLOOD-CONTROL COMPACTS IN CONNECTICUT AND MERRIMACK RIVER VALLEYS

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to address myself briefly for about 15 minutes to the subject of flood-control compacts in the Connecticut and Merrimack River valleys.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HARRISON. What is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending measure is the Panama Canal measurement bill.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I recognize that these compacts have not a very good chance of being acted upon at this session, inasmuch as they have been objected to by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. In fact, the President of the United States himself is opposed to their ratification. I should like the RECORD to show, however, the urgency of action at this time, and the dreadful responsibility which anyone takes upon himself who attempts to prevent this constructive action.

In the winter of 1936 the States of Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Connecticut were ravaged by what was without doubt the worst flood they have ever known. We had a very severe winter, and then a sudden thaw. The rivers were swollen to tremendous proportions. Life was lost. Industries were ruined. Great cakes of ice came rolling down the rivers and destroyed the bridges. The flood did an untold amount of damage. Everyone in a position of public trust pledged himself to do all in his power to prevent the recurrence in the future of such a disaster.

It is perfectly obvious that as these rivers originate in one State and flow through others, the action had to be interstate action, taken under the terms of an interstate compact; and President Roosevelt himself, speaking at Hartford, Conn., in the autumn of last year, expressed the hope that the four New England States concerned would get together and agree upon a compact, so that the work of preventing the repetition of this disaster could go on.

In pursuance of that suggestion, the four States appointed representatives. They met this winter, and, with representatives of the Federal Government at their elbows, they worked out these compacts, stipulating where the dams and reservoirs were to be placed, how the cost was to be allocated, and going into all the details. In my own State I know that these compacts for both the Connecticut River and the Merrimack River were unanimously approved. They were signed by the Governors of all four States, two of whom are Democrats and two of whom are Republicans. So far as I know, the compacts have the approval of all the Senators from the States concerned; and if we do not consent to these compacts, it means that the whole work of flood control will be put off for at least another year, because several of the States have only biennial sessions of their legislatures.

Objection has been raised to the compacts by the administration on the ground that the Federal Government does not receive title to the power sites which theoretically would be developed; and I should like to address myself briefly to that objection.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question at that point?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is the Senator aware that substantially all the sites for dams in the State of Vermont are not power sites; that most of them are on the small tributaries of the Connecticut River, and are primarily for the purpose of storage of water.

Mr. LODGE. I am aware of that; and I should like to say in that connection that the attorney general of Massachusetts, who appeared before the Flood Control Committee of the House yesterday, said that the entire discussion of the power aspects of this question was academic—and I quote him in using that word—because out of the 25 dam sites only 2, 1 in Vermont and 1 in New Hampshire, have any power potentialities, and that it is very questionable indeed whether these would be economically practicable.

The point I should like to convey to Senators is that our section of the country is unlike certain sections in the South and the West in that it has been populated and thickly settled and highly developed for a very long period of years. We have all the power there that we need, and the power aspects of this matter, from a practical standpoint, is trifling, and in any case the compact is so worded that no use can be made of such power as is developed without the consent of the Federal Government.

To my mind, it shows a lack of sense of proportion for one to disagree with the power provisions of these compacts, and to put them on the same plane and make them of the same importance with the tremendously vital task of flood control.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, does the Senator think it is out of proportion for the Federal Government to insist that these power sites, whether they are potential or otherwise, shall remain in the Federal Government, since the Federal Government is to put up 75 percent of the cost?

Mr. LODGE. I think, of course, that the Senator is correct when he says that the Federal Government has an interest, but my belief is that, inasmuch as the compact provides that the States shall pay the cost of the land, the sites should belong to the States and the use be subject to agreement with the Federal Government. It seems to me that would be the proper way to go about it.

One of our great natural assets, compared with certain other sections of the country which have mineral wealth and agricultural wealth, is our water power. We are a very well watered section, and all the States, for which I am only the agent today, are intent on keeping those resources, so far as they can.

There is no question here, as I think the Senator from Indiana appreciates, of private development of power versus public development of power; it is a question of State development versus Federal development, and I think it is quite natural for the States to believe that they should decide those questions for themselves.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. If it were decided to develop this water power, then the Federal Government would have to get the consent of the States in order to do so.

Mr. LODGE. It works the other way around, too, as I understand. I have the report before me. The States could not use the power without the consent of the Federal Government.

Mr. MINTON. The Federal Government could not use it without the consent of the States, so if it came about that the power interests of the country got control of one of the States, the Federal Government could do nothing about the power development on the streams without the consent of that State; and if the State was, as I am assuming, under the domination of some of the power interests, then the Federal Government's hands would be tied.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not know about the other States, but I am very sure that my State is not under that domination. I do not think the legislature of my State or the Governor of my State—and he is a member of a different political party from that to which I belong—and the attorney general of my State, or any of them, are under the domination of the Power Trust. I believe they made the decision reached because they felt that this was a proper thing for the State to keep for itself.

Mr. MINTON. Does the Senator know whether or not some of the representatives of the power interests, for instance, of the Associated Gas & Electric Co., sat at the elbow of the drafting authorities which drafted these compacts? I think the Senator from New Hampshire will bear me out that one of the drafters of the compact was counsel, or former counsel, for the Associated Gas & Electric Co.

Mr. LODGE. I do not know that; it is the first time I have heard of it. I do know that officials of the Federal Government were consulted at every stage in the drafting of the compact.

Mr. MINTON. The Army engineers were consulted.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. MINTON. But they were the only officials of the Federal Government who were consulted.

Mr. LODGE. They are experienced officials. As I have said, my contention is that the power aspect is secondary. The compact specifically reserves to the United States the right to determine and fix the terms and conditions under which any signatory State shall make available the right to water service, power storage, or power development. It seems to me there is a safeguard against the condition to which the Senator from Indiana has referred.

I merely wish to leave this thought, that next winter may be a very cold winter, such a winter as we experienced in 1936. There may be a very thick layer of ice on all those rivers. There may once again be a sudden thaw. There may once again be a flood which will destroy bridges, which will ruin factories and homes, and which will imperil human life. I do not want to have the responsibility for that condition resting on me. I think that Senators who object to the ratification of this compact should realize what they are doing. This is a very serious matter. It makes me shudder to think of the possibilities which delay in ratifying these compacts can cause, and I sincerely hope, although I am frank to say that I am not very sanguine about it, that before we leave Washington the compacts may be ratified.

Mr. President, as a part of my remarks, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by President Roosevelt at Harvard, Conn., on October 22, 1936.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MR. ROOSEVELT'S "PARABLE" OF FLOOD CONTROL

I am here in a twofold capacity. I am here as President to talk with your Governor and your State officials, your Congressmen, and your Senators in regard to the problem of floods. And I am here also, I am told, as a candidate for high public office.

My old friend, Tom Spellacy, has told me that where I am standing today at this moment the water would have been up around my hips if I had been here at the time of the great flood. I think that we can get a little parable out of that flood, a parable relating to Government and the reason why your Government in Washington has to keep in close touch with the governments of the States and of the cities of the Nation and why, under certain circumstances, the Government at Washington must help.

AN INTERSTATE PROBLEM

This river of yours flows through four States—Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Connecticut. A large part of the flood, the flood waters that visited you recently, had their origin in some other State.

No matter what you do in the State of Connecticut, no matter how many dikes you build, no matter how many precautions you take, unless floods are controlled at the sources of the river, your work will be in vain. And that is why the problem of floods involves more than one State.

There are two approaches to that problem. The first is by the method of cooperation between States—the interstate compact method—and I am glad to say that the States of New England are working together, planning for the control of floods.

SPREADING THE COST

But, my friends, that method is insufficient in itself. You cannot ask the State of Vermont, for example, to pay the entire cost of controlling the flood waters that flow through Vermont. The chief benefit is going to be not to Vermont but to Massachusetts and Connecticut.

And then when you come to the final problem you have the duty of the Federal Government to control the waters of navigable rivers and your Federal Government stands ready to do its share toward flood prevention in the future.

SEES MORE JOBS FOR ALL

It's a happier Connecticut that I come back to than it was in 1932. I don't particularly like figures and neither do you, but just listen for 1 minute.

In this State employment in the city of Hartford alone is 45 percent greater this year than it was in 1932. Aggregate pay rolls are 82 percent greater than they were in the spring of 1933. Twenty-three thousand workers have been reemployed by private industry in Hartford industrial area and the pay rolls are running at the rate of $44,000,000 a year more than before recovery began.

Building construction is up four times what it was in those days, and the retail stores are selling 28 percent more merchandise than then, and because Connecticut, like the State of New York, is also an agricultural State, let me point out to you that the value of farm produce—I mean the money received by the farmers of the State—has come up somewhere between 30 and 40 percent.

CITES A NATIONAL LESSON

And so we are beginning to take stock. We are thinking not only of our own city, not only of our own State, not only of the region of States in which we live, but we are thinking about the Nation as a whole.

Realizing that the prosperity of the West is reflected in the prosperity of the East and that unless the cotton farmer of the South can get a fair price for his cotton he is unable to buy the products of New England.

That is a lesson that we have learned these last 3 years, and your administration in Washington has been thinking about the return of prosperity in terms of the whole Nation, and not just one part of it.

And so, my friends, I regard the State of Connecticut as very much a part of the Nation. I am glad that prosperity is back with us again, and, believe me, it is going to stay.

And I believe that on the 3d of November, sometime in the evening, I am going to get telegrams from Wilbur Cross and Tom Spellacy and lots of old friends here, telling me that the State of Connecticut is in the Democratic column.

MEASUREMENT OF VESSELS USING THE PANAMA CANAL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5417) to provide for the measurement of vessels using the Panama Canal and for other purposes.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the bill about to be taken up is the Panama Canal tolls bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the bill now pending.

Mr. ADAMS. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from Missouri. I have always favored readjustment of the method of measurement of vessels going through the Panama Canal, and I am equally opposed to the fixing of maximum toll rates. It seemed to me that all that should have been included in the bill was the provision for proper rules of measurement.

I understand the present rate per ton is $1.25, upon laden vessels. For some reason or other we are asked to give power to the President to fix the rates, and we are asked to say to him, "You may not fix a rate of more than $1 per ton."

Mr. CLARK. The President was given discretion in the act of 1930 to fix rates within certain limitations.

Mr. ADAMS. But the existing law——

Mr. CLARK. That is the existing law. Congress authorized the appointment of a committee by the President, which was to go into the entire history of the Canal, to fix the historical cost of the Canal, to determine, in collaboration with the accounting officers of the Government, the investment in the Canal, and then determine the limits within which the President might regulate the rates.

The limitation is a rather narrow one, and the President has already announced, on the recommendation of the Secretary of War and the Governor of the Panama Canal Zone, the rate which will be initially in effect, which is to be 90 cents a ton.

The committee provides that these matters shall not be changed except after hearing and after due notice. But it does seem that the President certainly should be given some slack in the matter of the adjustment of the rates necessary to earn a fair return on the investment. Every utility in the United States is supposed to earn a return on a definite rate base, which is fixed by a public body in each State, called the public service commission in some States, the utilities commission in other States.

Rates as to what might be called Federal utilities, that is, the railroads, may be fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission within limits, as a delegation of power by the Congress.

It seems to me not to be an unreasonable provision that within certain limits, to be fixed by law, the President shall have authority to adjust the rates so as to earn a fair return on the investment set up in the committee's report.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I am entirely in accord with the Senator's argument, but not with his conclusion. I think the President should have more leeway. That is my complaint, that there is not slack enough. I think that if such a condition should develop that a rate should be more than $1 a ton, the President should have the right to fix the rate at more than that. I have not made any recent computation, but a year ago when the matter was pending I came to the conclusion that the dollar rate was not a fair rate per ton for the actual service that was being given to ships using the Canal; in other words, that there had not been taken into account adequate amounts for replacement, repairs, and deterioration in the Canal; that the rates hardly more than covered the operating charges of the Canal and interest. So, it seemed to me that we should at least give to the President the right to fix a reasonable rate. We should not say to him, "Regardless of what a reasonable rate may be, here is a maximum." We do not fix minimum rates in the bill.

Mr. CLARK. Oh, yes, we do; the Senator is mistaken. We do fix a minimum.

Mr. ADAMS. But then we fix a maximum, and provide that regardless of what the conditions may be, regardless of what may happen to the Canal, the President may not raise the rate above $1 a ton. That is the only objection I have. It seems to me an unjustified limitation. I am willing to leave it to the President with a wider scope and discretion.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado wishes to give the President more authority than the President apparently wishes to have in the matter of discretion. The bill which is before the Senate, which was passed unanimously by the House, embodies the findings and the recommendations not only of the President's committee, authorized by the Congress, but of the Panama Canal authorities, of the Secretary of War, and of the President himself.

It is estimated, Mr. President—and, of course, that is to some extent a matter of speculation—that the increase in business naturally to be expected and contemplated over a period of years will enable the Panama Canal authorities over a period of years to make the proper allowances for depreciation according to the proper accounting rules, to make the proper replacements of various elements of cost, and, instead of increasing rates, possibly to decrease rates as time goes on.

According to the rate which the Secretary of War has announced he will recommend to the President to impose—namely, 90 cents per ton—considerable leeway has been left under the maximum set up in the bill. The maximum and minimum provision is set up as being the proper leeway determined on by the very best technical experts to whom the Government could refer the matter.

I do not profess to be a technical expert; I do not know what the operating expenses will be, or what the probable natural increase in business will be that will pass through the Canal, except insofar as I have listened to the testimony before the committee; but the best technical experts we have been able to obtain or the President has been able to find have suggested the proposal made in the bill as a reasonable and logical one, and certainly conditions will not change so suddenly or so violently that there should be any difficulty about the President recommending to Congress a change in the law if a higher maximum should prove desirable.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. The bill gives the President power to fix a rate of $1.50 for each passenger on passenger vessels. What is the toll charged now per passenger?

Mr. CLARK. There has never been a toll charge on passengers, although passenger tolls have been authorized by law since 1913. At the present time it is not the intention of the Canal authorities, if their estimates prove successful, to impose a charge for passengers; but it has always been authorized by law. No change is made in the law, and there is no reason why a passenger charge should not be made if it should be necessary for the successful operation of the Canal. The bill simply provides the right to make a charge for passengers, which is already provided for in the law, but which has never been exercised, and which it is not now contemplated will be necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

SUGAR PRODUCTION AND CONTROL

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I present the conference report on House bill 7667, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7667) to regulate commerce among the several States, with the Territories and possessions of the United States, and with foreign countries; to protect the welfare of consumers of sugars and of those engaged in the domestic sugar-producing industry; to promote the export trade of the United States; to raise revenue; and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 5, and 6, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "and in order that the regulation of commerce provided for under this Act shall not result in excessive prices to consumers, the Secretary may make such additional allowances as he may deem necessary in the amount of sugar determined to be needed to meet the requirements of consumers, so that the supply of sugar made available under this Act shall not result in average prices to consumers in excess of those necessary to maintain the domestic sugar industry as a whole, and the amounts of such additional allowances shall be such that in no event will the amount of the total supply be less than the quantity of sugar required to give consumers of sugar in the continental United States a per capita consumption equal to that of the average of the two year period 1935–1936"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 207. (a) Not more than twenty-nine thousand six hundred and sixteen short tons, raw value, of the quota for Hawaii for each of the calendar years 1937, 1938, and 1939 may be filled by direct-consumption sugar; and not more than four thousand nine hundred and thirty-six short tons, raw value, of the quota for Hawaii for the calendar year 1940 may be filled, during the first two months of such year, by direct-consumption sugar.

"(b) Not more than one hundred and twenty-six thousand and thirty-three short tons, raw value, of the quota for Puerto Rico for each of the calendar years 1937, 1938, and 1939 may be filled by direct-consumption sugar; and not more than twenty-one thousand and six short tons, raw value, of the quota for Puerto Rico for the calendar year 1940 may be filled, during the first two months of such year, by direct-consumption sugar.

"(c) None of the quota for the Virgin Islands for any calendar year may be filled by direct-consumption sugar.

"(d) Not more than eighty thousand two hundred and fourteen short tons, raw value, of the quota for the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands for any calendar year may be filled by direct-consumption sugar.

"(e) Not more than three hundred and seventy-five thousand short tons, raw value, of the quota for Cuba for any calendar year may be filled by direct-consumption sugar.

"(f) This section shall not apply with respect to the quotas established under section 203 for marketing for local consumption in Hawaii and Puerto Rico."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate, I will state briefly just what was done by the conferees, and what is contained in the conference report.

There were only three questions in conference on the sugar bill. One was with respect to the so-called Brown-La Follette amendment, which dealt with the price of sugar to the consumer. A substitute was adopted, simpler in language, without change in purpose.

The second proposition in conference was the tax on blackstrap molasses. An amendment, known as the Lucas amendment, was adopted in the House, which the Senate rejected. The House conferees receded on that amendment; so that amendment is out of the bill.

The other amendment, and the most important one, was that which dealt with quotas on refined sugar from Puerto Rico and Hawaii. It will be recalled that in section 207 the House bill permitted about 29,000 tons of refined sugar to come in annually from Hawaii, and permitted about 126,000 tons to come in annually from Puerto Rico. The Senate committee, as Senators will recall, in order to remove the charge that we were discriminating in favor of the American refiner as against the Puerto Rican or the Hawaiian, struck out all of section 207 of the House bill with reference to the quota or limitation on refined sugar from Puerto Rico and Hawaii, and inserted a new section. We did not change the amount of refined sugar that might come in from Puerto Rico or Hawaii in the House bill, but we did say that we would freeze that limitation on the amount that might come in from those two islands, and that was at the height of production of refined sugar in Puerto Rico and in Hawaii. They had never produced more refined sugar in those islands than the amount carried in the House bill, and also carried in the Senate bill. We arrived at the figures of what the highest production of refined sugar had been in continental United States, and we placed that amount in the Senate amendment.

So in the conference there was quite a discussion as to limiting the amount of refined sugar coming in from Puerto Rico and Hawaii. Various suggestions were made—1 year, 1½ years, and so on. We finally agreed in the conference that the section permitting refined sugar to come in from Puerto Rico and Hawaii could continue until March 1, 1940.

Senators will understand that as to the limitation on the importation of raw sugar, the bill goes out of existence December 31, 1940; but as to refined sugar we permit in 1940 one-sixth of that year's quota—which would be, in the case of Puerto Rico, one-sixth of the 126,000 tons—to come in during the months of January and February, up to March 1, 1940. We thought that was a fair basis of compromise, and so that is what is carried in the report.

As to the quotas on raw sugar, there is no change at all in that respect. The major change carried in the report is on refined sugar from Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to ask whether that one-sixth represents a reduction of quota or an increase of quotas.

Mr. HARRISON. No; the figure one-sixth represents 2 months of the 12 months. One-sixth of the amount may come in during those 2 months. That is one-sixth of the quota determined by the Secretary of Agriculture for the whole year. Practically speaking, it would be, in the case of Puerto Rico, one-sixth of approximately 126,000 tons.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. There was nothing within the jurisdiction of the conference committee which could have affected the quotas on raw sugar? There was no difference between the conferees on that?

Mr. HARRISON. No difference at all on that.

While I am on that point I may say that I have heard it intimated, Mr. President, that a point of order may be made to this report. I do not suppose any proposal has been made in Congress that has been more difficult to solve, and which involved more varied interests than the sugar bill. There are the refiners with their suggestions and requests. Then we have the sugar-beet area, which, of course, desires an increased quota. Then we have the sugarcane area, which suggests a little more. There sits my friend from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]. I have never in my life heard a more eloquent argument than the one he presented before the Finance Committee on behalf of the people of Florida and the sugar area down there. Sincerity was in his every utterance. I have a considerable amount of sympathy with his argument. I could not vote with him because it would have torn up the whole structure which we have been working here for months and months to build; but he made a great fight, which is to his credit, and his constituents should appreciate it.

Mr. President, I have heard it suggested that someone might raise a point of order to this conference report. I cannot see in what respect the conferees have exceeded their authority. We were very careful. It will be recalled that when this matter was debated in the Senate the Senator from Idaho [Mr. POPE] suggested that the provisions with respect to refined sugar be allowed to operate for only 1 year, thinking that that would help in solving this difficult situation. Then the question came up whether in conference it could be considered. We were so careful, for it was important that it should be considered, that we called in the parliamentary experts. It was stated on the floor by several of us that it was our opinion, as it was the opinion of the experts, that it would be open to amendment in conference, and that that would be one of the questions that would be in conference. It is one of the questions that was in conference, because the House fixed a certain amount that might come in under section 207 of direct-consumption sugar. It was not fixed in percentages at all; it was not fixed any more than that so many tons might come in, and then it was left to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, who was to take into consideration certain conditions laid down in the bill.

The Senate struck that whole section out and put in a new one, and drafted it upon an altogether different basis. It did not stipulate how many tons of direct-consumption sugar might come in, but provided a percentage method of determining the quantity of such sugar that might come in, and then "froze" the amount of refined sugar that could be brought into the United States at the peak of production in the United States. So the whole matter was in controversy; and it seems to us without question, acting upon the advice of the parliamentary sharps and experts, that the amendment which has been finally adopted is entirely proper and in accordance with the rule. So I hope that no point of order will be raised; but if a point of order should be raised, of course, I know that the good judgment of the Presiding Officer (the President pro tempore in the chair), who is an expert in technical parliamentary matters, will impel him immediately to overrule the point of order so that we may get this very important piece of legislation out of the way.

Now, one further matter. It is said that the President might veto this bill. Well, I do not know as to that, and I hardly think anyone else knows, but I cannot, for the life of me, understand how the President could veto sugar legislation of this character. It will be recalled that some 3 years ago the Jones-Costigan bill, of which the bill now before us is merely a continuation, was passed. In my opinion, it was one of the most constructive pieces of legislation which have been enacted during my experience in the Senate. It brought wholesome results to the sugar-beet area of the United States; it brought beneficial results to the sugar-cane area of the United States. It is one of the most popular measures in those areas that have ever been enacted by the Congress of the United States. When that legislation expired by limitation it was continued by another act of Congress. Both the Jones-Costigan Act and the continuing measure contained a limitation upon direct-consumption sugar imported from Puerto Rico and Hawaii.

When we write into this proposed legislation for the third time a similar provision, putting a limitation upon direct-consumption sugar from Puerto Rico and Hawaii, how can it be said that the measure will be vetoed?

Why should the previous bills have been signed when this bill in nowise changes the principle, but, on the other hand, makes no provision after March 1, 1940, for any limitation? To that extent in this bill we differentiate between the importations of raw sugar from our offshore possessions and from foreign countries and the importation of direct-consumption sugar into the United States.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I will yield in a moment. I want in that connection to say, while I signed the conference report, as did others of the conferees, which makes a differential as to the time the bill shall operate on direct-consumption sugar imported into the United States as contrasted with raw sugars coming into the United States, that it is not because in the future I shall be for leaving the gates wide open and letting refined sugar come in from Puerto Rico or from Hawaii. We fixed the date March 1, 1940, in the hope that when the Congress meets in 1940 we will at least have 2 months during the session of Congress, which will begin in January, to pass legislation that will take care of this situation.

I want the RECORD to show now my attitude. If some American investors want to go into Puerto Rico and into Hawaii, build more refineries and give employment to labor there, that will disrupt the employment situation in the refineries in this country, when we come to consider legislation in 1940 touching that question, and they appear before my committee or any other committee and say "we were invited to go there and build up and invest our money in the view that after March 4, 1940, we could ship refined sugar without limitation into the United States", I do not want them to make any investments in the belief that I am going to vote a continuation of any policy without a restriction on refined sugars from those possessions or anywhere else coming into this country. They may make that argument, but they will not get anywhere with it.

Mr. President, I hope this conference report will be approved. It was not an easy matter to get all these conflicting interests together. I believe it is a splendid piece of legislation, and will work great benefits to many areas and many industries and many laboring people of this country.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if our conduct in this body were the result purely of our sentiments and affection, I dare say that in most instances it would be different from what it is. I am sure that if I were to follow the sentiments of my heart in any matter in which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] were involved I should be in accord with his views. No one in this Chamber has any doubt but that recently when the Senator from Mississippi was involved, my action and my sentiments came to a common accord as to him because he was my friend. But, Mr. President, I feel that the conferees should have regarded the matter of terminating this whole proposed law at the same time they terminated the restrictions which are mentioned in the conference report, namely, on March 1, 1940.

May I point out the situation as I see it? Section 207 (a)——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator that that phase of the question was not in conference and the conferees would have been powerless to have put a limitation of a year on this proposed law.

Mr. PEPPER. That is the question to which I am going to address myself. May I begin by saying that section 207 (a) as it was embodied in the House bill provided the number of tons of refined sugar which could come into the United States for so-called direct-consumption purposes? This section provided that—

(a) Not more than 29,616 short tons, raw value, of the quota for Hawaii for any calendar year may be filled by direct-consumption sugar.

(b) Not more than 126,033 short tons, raw value, of the quota for Puerto Rico for any calendar year may be filled by direct-consumption sugar.

(c) None of the quota for the Virgin Islands for any calendar year may be filled by direct-consumption sugar.

(d) Not more than 80,214 short tons, raw value, of the quota for the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands for any calendar year may be filled by direct-consumption sugar.

Mr. President, the Senate adopted a substitute for section 207. The Senate substitute provided:

For the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, not to exceed 80,214 short tons raw value.

I ask the chairman of the committee to ascertain whether or not that number of tons is any different from the number of tons provided in House section 207. He will find the number to be exactly the same in both sections.

In the second place, in Senate section 207 it was provided that Cuba's quota should not exceed 375,000 short tons raw value. Looking at House section 207 it will be found that not more than 375,000 short tons raw value shall be the quota for Cuba in any calendar year. So there is an identical number of tons for Cuba contained in House section 207 and in Senate section 207. On those two points there is no difference between the two Houses.

In addition to that, on page 16 of the bill as it passed the Senate, the quota for Hawaii and Puerto Rico, instead of being stated in tonnage as it was in House section 207, is expressed in terms of percentage; but I assume that no Senator will assert that there was any difference in the number of tons allowed Hawaii and Puerto Rico in House section 207 and the number of tons allowed them in Senate section 207, except that in the Senate provision it was expressed in percentage instead of in tons.

Therefore with respect to Cuba, the Philippines, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico, there are the exact number of tons involved both in Senate section 207 and House section 207. There is no difference between the House and Senate provisions with respect to tonnage of sugar coming into this country for direct consumption.

What was the difference between House section 207 and Senate section 207? It was in the provision that there should be a limitation upon the amount of sugar for direct-consumption purposes in continental United States. That was the new provision in the Senate bill. As evidence that that same opinion is entertained by another authority, I read from page 8766 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, where is set forth the message of the President of the United States to the chairman of the Finance Committee, which the chairman of the Finance Committee had incorporated in the RECORD. The President said:

> The amendment to H. R. 7667 adopted yesterday by the Senate Finance Committee has just been brought to my attention.
> I am delighted to note that the committee recognizes that our Territories and island possessions are integral parts of the United States and cannot be discriminated against, and that the restrictions on refining in those Territories contained in H. R. 7667 constitute such a discrimination.
>
> I regret that an examination of the committee amendment shows that it not only does not eliminate the discrimination, but introduces a new and highly objectionable feature. The discrimination contained in H. R. 7667 is that sugar producers in Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands are prohibited from refining there the sugar which they are permitted to produce under the quota, while there is no similar prohibition on the other areas in the United States. The amendment, which places a refining quota on continental United States at a figure far in excess of the largest quantity of sugar grown there, merely perpetuates this discrimination.
> The amendment proposes to limit by law the quantity of sugar that may be refined in various geographical parts of the United States. This introduces a principle of geographical limitations on manufacturing in our country which has no economic or social justification in this instance and would constitute a dangerous precedent.
> Agricultural legislation, so desired by our farmers, should not be further delayed by the insertion in an otherwise acceptable agricultural bill of manufacturing restrictions. Their elimination would serve the best interests of our agricultural producers, who desire legislation at this session. If interested parties think there should be manufacturing restrictions on sugar refining, that can be embodied in a separate bill and be considered separately.

Mr. President, what was the new matter? What was the difference between the two Houses? It was whether or not there should be a limitation upon the quantity of sugar that may be refined in continental United States, that, and that alone. If, therefore, the conferees desired to adjust the differences between the two bodies, they had ample opportunity to do so by adjusting that difference, because that is the only difference there was.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Am I to understand the Senator from Florida to say that the only difference between the two provisions was that the Senate provision places the quota upon the basis of consumption in the United States?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator understands me correctly except that in the House bill the tonnages were expressed in tons instead of in percentages as in the Senate bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does not the Senator understand that the percentages written into the Senate bill authorize an increase from year to year as the consumption increases?

Mr. PEPPER. I understand the percentages and the tonnages are substantially the same, though there may be a slight variation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is a great student of the sugar question and sugar legislation. Does he not realize that the consumption of sugar has been steadily increasing? Does he not understand that the provision in the Senate bill was a distinct concession to those who believe that the importation of refined sugar from the islands might increase?

Mr. PEPPER. I understand that under the terms of the House bill the same result in the way of an increase would have accrued.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But the Senator is mistaken in that. The House bill fixed a definite and specific amount which could not be increased under any circumstances. The Senate provision authorized an increase upon a percentage basis, and it was upon that disagreement between the two Houses that the conferees came to an agreement.

Mr. PEPPER. If that be the situation, why was it the conference report did not relate primarily to that matter but to the effective date of the restrictions? What difference in date was there between the two Houses?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is a perfectly simple matter to explain to the Senator from Florida. It was because there was a strong movement for the elimination of all restrictions upon refined sugar from the islands. In order to compromise the disagreement there that provision was finally eliminated.

Mr. PEPPER. I hope the Senator will attend this statement which I am about to make. The House and the Senate both provided that the restrictions upon the direct-consumption quota, namely, the restrictions upon the refinement of raw sugar, should as to time be coextensive with the operation of all other restrictions carried in the bill. The Senate and the House both provided that this bill should expire on December 31, 1940, section 513, reading as follows:

> No tax shall be imposed on the manufacture, use, or importation of sugar after June 30, 1941; and the power vested in the Secretary under this act shall terminate on December 31, 1940—

With an exception that is immaterial.

Mr. President, the Senate did not say that there was to be any difference in time in the expiration of the restrictions on raw sugar and the expiration of the restrictions on refined sugar. There was no disagreement as to date between the Senate and the House with regard to section 207. I have stated that there was one difference. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] says there was another difference. Let us assume that the Senator from Wyoming is correct. Then did the conferees confine themselves to those two points of difference? On the contrary, they receded from the Senate amendment increasing the quota for the importation of refined sugar from Hawaii and Puerto Rico, if there was an increase in the Senate amendment, and they receded from the Senate provision that there should be a limitation on refined sugar in continental United States; but they did not stop there. They put in some new matter upon which neither House had acted, namely, that the date of expiration of section 207 should be March 1, 1940, and that the remainder of the bill should continue to operate until December 31, 1940—a difference of that fraction of a year between March 1 and December 31.

What was the difference between the two bodies in respect to a matter of date? Each one of the Houses said, "As a matter of policy, we do not desire to discriminate or to distinguish between the time when we will impose a restriction on the quotas of raw sugar and a restriction on the refining of sugar." The conferees have injected a new point of discrimination. They have said, "Not only will we impose these objectionable quotas on the importation of raw sugar, but we will segregate the refined-sugar provision and the raw-quota restrictions, allowing one to expire March 1, 1940, and the other December 31, 1940, respectively."

If the Senate had said "December 31, 1940", and the House said "January 1, 1939", and the conferees had fixed the date at December 31, 1939—a date between the two extremes—that would have been a matter in disagreement between the Houses with respect to which the conference committee could have functioned; but I say that these conferees have done the same thing as if they had said, in so many words, "We are not in favor of these restrictions operating contemporaneously. We think they should be segregated, that the restrictions on refined sugar should be limited to a shorter time than the restrictions on the quotas of raw sugar."

I ask the Senator from Wyoming, what was the difference in date between the Senate and the House?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall be very glad to answer the Senator from Florida. The difference is simply that in the House bill the provision definitely and specifically, year in and year out, limited the amount of refined sugar that could come in. The Senate passed a bill which allowed an increase of that amount year by year. It strikes me that since the Senate allowed an increase of the amount of refined sugar that could come in in 1938 over that coming in in 1937, and an increase in 1939 over that coming in in 1938, and an increase in 1940 over that coming in in 1939, it was a perfectly proper compromise, a perfectly proper action of the conferees, to agree that the increase should be complete by the first of January or the first of March, 1940, and embrace the whole field.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Am I to understand that the Senator from Wyoming has the floor?

Mr. PEPPER. No. I thought perhaps the Senator might be interested in making a response to a question; namely, whether both Houses did not desire that the same limitation imposed upon the quota importation as to time should be imposed upon the refining restriction, and whether that part of the year from March 1 to December 31, with respect to which both Houses had spoken, was entirely ignored by the conference report.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I have only this to say: Evidently, the conferees thought it would be a hardship on someone to continue these restrictions from March 1 to December 31. Therefore, the conferees desired to alleviate that hardship and burden upon the one so affected. I submit that somebody is burdened by the quotas of raw sugar which are fixed by the terms of this bill. Would it not, therefore, have been more consonant with their desire to alleviate all burdens imposed by this bill to say that when the restrictions upon the refinement of sugar expire, so shall the restrictions upon raw quotas of sugar expire?

I ask, therefore, with reference to my State, for example, Are we forever to be put in a strait jacket, and to have no hope of ever getting out of the class of those discriminated against; or are we to be able to hope that as soon as possible these ironclad restrictions will be removed, and we shall have the right to produce sugar according to our natural right? I say, why do not the conferees give us the same benefit of the nearness of the termination of this bill that they gave the interests that were the beneficiaries of the conference report? Are we less worthy than they? Whether it be Puerto Rico and Hawaii that were the beneficiaries of the date up to March 1, 1940, or whether it be the refiners of the United States, I contend that we are as good and as deserving as either one of them. That is indicative of the lack of concern which has been manifested for us who suffer under the sugar regulations which have been put in effect by the Congress of the United States.

I did, in all humility, want to submit that the only right and fair thing would be to let the whole bill expire on March 1, 1940. At least, it seems to me that that is the least the conferees could have given us. That would save us at least 10 months of the year. That would make the condition a little bit better for us. I ask, Mr. President, if they could move up the date of the effectiveness of the bill as to section 207 from December 31 to March 1, why could they not have moved up the effective expiration of the whole bill from December 31 to March 1, and let all of us get the benefit of the earlier expiration, and then have the new quotas fixed at that earlier time, when in the season of one year we might have been able to make plantings, perhaps, if somebody had been so good and charitable to us as to allow us a little enlargement in our quota for Florida?

So I had intended to make the point of order that the conferees had inserted new matter in the bill which was outside the scope of their authority, and I had intended respectfully to call that matter to the attention of the Chair. Instead of making the technical point of order, however, if I am in order, I move that the conferees be directed to consider this matter further, and so to report as to make the termination of all parts of the bill the same time.

I make that motion, if it is proper to make it at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion is too late. The report has been made by the committee, and is now under consideration by the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PEPPER. The conference report is before the Senate at this time, and, of course, has not been acted upon. The Senate has it completely within its power to give to the conferees any direction it may choose to give, and it is perfectly proper for the Senate to reject or to suspend the consideration of this report for the time being, and to direct the conferees to return to the conference and see if it is not possible that the date of the expiration of the whole bill be March 1, 1940, or a date which is the same as the expiration date of section 207. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair answer the parliamentary inquiry. The Chair has already stated that in his opinion it is too late to make such a motion. The rule on the subject of instructions to conferees is that it is in order to instruct conferees, and the resolution of instruction should be offered after the Senate has voted to insist on its amendments and ask a conference, and before the conferees have been appointed.

The only recourse the Chair knows of in a case of this kind would be to reject the conference report and ask for another conference, and instruct the conferees, when they were appointed, in any manner the Senate saw fit to instruct them. In this case the Senator did not ask that the conferees be instructed, and took no action in the matter until after the conference was agreed on, and a report made and offered for consideration.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry. Would a motion be in order in substantially this language, that the Senate reject the conference report until a time has elapsed within which it is possible for the conferees to have conferred with the managers on the part of the House to ascertain whether or not it is possible that the expiration date for the whole bill may be made March 1, 1940, or such date as is fixed for the expiration of section 207?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is only one question before the Senate at the present time, there being a complete report, a report which has already been adopted by the House of Representatives. The question is whether the Senate will accept or reject the report. It would be in order, however, for the Senator to make a point of order, and if the point of order were sustained, it would have the effect of rejecting the conference report.

Mr. PEPPER. If I may make a further parliamentary inquiry, are the conferees discharged until the conference report is adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The matter not having been acted on by the House, in a manner they are still functioning.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, until the Senate adopts the report and discharges the conferees, of course, they are still conferees, they have not completed their duties.

Mr. PEPPER. That is what I thought. If the managers on the part of the Senate are still in office, as it were, and still capable of discharging their functions, is it not in order, then, for the Senate temporarily to delay the reception of the report, and to instruct the conferees to return to the conference with the managers on the part of the House to seek to ascertain whether or not the expiration date of section 207 and all other parts of the bill may not be made the same?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If a motion to recommit, having the same effect as a motion to disagree, were adopted, then the Senate would have a right to instruct the conferees. But while the matter is in the status in which it is now, of course, no instructions can be given.

Mr. CONNALLY. When the conferees make a report, it is a completed job, and it is up to the Senate to adopt or reject the report. If the Senate rejects it, that has the effect of what the Senator from Florida wants to do, the Senate reappoints the conferees, and they go back and reconsider. But the Senate cannot amend the report, nor do anything except vote it up or vote it down.

Mr. PEPPER. I am quite well aware of that. I am not trying to delay the legislation. I certainly am not disposed to filibuster, or anything like that. My suggestion would be to give until the meeting of the Senate tomorrow noon to see whether or not the conferees could not make the periods coextensive.

I wish to make one other inquiry. May instructions be added to a motion to recommit?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to recommit may carry with it instructions to the conferees.

Mr. PEPPER. I move that the conference report be recommitted to the conferees, the present managers to continue to act on the part of the Senate, with instructions from the Senate to report back at the convening of the Senate tomorrow, whatever the time may be, and to advise the Senate whether or not it is possible for them to get an agreement with the House conferees that the same expiration date shall apply to all parts of the bill, whatever the expiration date may be.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Florida.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

REGULATION OF PRODUCTION AND MARKETING OF SUGAR

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, as in executive session, on behalf of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I report for the calendar Executive T, Seventy-fifth Congress, first session, an international agreement regarding the regulation of production and marketing of sugar, and an annexed protocol concerning transitional measures, signed at London on May 6, 1937, with a reservation, and I submit a report (Ex. Rept. No. 20) thereon.

I make this report at this time merely that the agreement may be placed upon the calendar in anticipation of an early adjournment of Congress, with the understanding that the Senate will not be called upon to act upon the agreement unless and until the pending sugar bill shall be approved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and the treaty will be placed upon the Executive Calendar.

FLORIDA O. M'LAIN—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HUGHES submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2229) for the relief of Florida O. McLain, widow of Calvin E. McLain, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 2.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

JAMES H. HUGHES,
ARTHUR CAPPER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
JOHN M. COFFEE,
FRANCIS CASE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

CONSTRUCTION OF SMALL RESERVOIRS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. O'MAHONEY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2512) to authorize an appropriation for the construction of small reservoirs under the Federal reclamation laws, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

ALVA B. ADAMS,
JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
GERALD P. NYE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
COMPTON I. WHITE,
JOHN J. DEMPSEY,
PAUL R. GREEVER,
FRANCIS CASE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Wyoming whether, under the terms of the conference report, any funds are called for?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The House bill provided that the appropriation should be made from the reclamation fund. The Senate bill provided that the appropriation should be made from the relief fund. The conferees were of the opinion that in the circumstances it would be better to have the appropriation from the reclamation fund, and that is the sum and substance of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

DAMAGES FOR TRESPASS ON LANDS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. KING. Mr. President, during the call of the calendar I interposed an objection to the consideration of Senate bill 2953, involving trespass on timber and other products upon lands of the United States.

The Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] happened to be out of the Chamber at the time the bill was called, and I desired to confer with him in regard to the measure. Since that time I have conferred with the Senator, and I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2953) to provide a measure of damages for trespass involving timber and other forest products upon lands of the United States, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 2, line 9, after the words "liable for", to strike out the word "double"; and on page 3, line 1, to strike out the word "comprise" and insert the word "compromise", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act, whenever any person, firm, or corporation shall willfully, fraudulently, negligently, or without lawful authority, damage, sever, or remove, or cause to be damaged, severed, or removed, any timber, tree, shrub, or other forest product upon any lands of the United States, including ceded Indian lands, and lands within the former Oregon & California Railroad grant or the Coos Bay Wagon Road grant, title to which is in the United States, or upon any lands embraced in unperfected claims held under any of the public-land laws, such person, firm, or corporation, or any person, firm, or corporation receiving or purchasing such timber or other forest product, shall be liable for damages to the United States for such timber or other forest product, as hereinafter provided.

1. In the case of an unintentional or mistaken trespass, the trespasser, or any purchaser of the timber or other forest product, shall be liable for the standing value of the timber or other products.

2. In the case of a willful trespass, the trespasser, or any willful purchaser of the timber or other forest product, shall be liable for triple such value, but an innocent purchaser shall be liable for only double such value.

SEC. 2. Nothing in this act shall prevent any miner or agriculturist from clearing his land in the ordinary working of his valid mining claim or in the preparation of his farm for tillage or from taking the timber necessary for his improvements or for other domestic use upon his claim. And nothing in this act shall interfere with or take away any right, authority, or privilege under any existing law of the United States to cut or remove timber from any public lands, nor shall this act apply to cases of turpentine trespass.

SEC. 3. The head of the department or agency having jurisdiction over the lands is hereby authorized, before suit, to compromise any claim arising under the foregoing provisions where, in his opinion, the acceptance of an amount less than the penalty prescribed herein is in the public interest.

SEC. 4. No action for damages accruing under this act shall be maintained unless it is commenced within 6 years from the time the cause of action arose.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSAL OF PUBLIC LANDS IN WYOMING

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7867) to amend section 11 of the act of Congress approved July 10, 1890 (26 Stat. ch. 664), relating to the admission into the Union of the State of Wyoming.

The bill provides that the State of Wyoming may dispose of public lands conveyed by the State of Wyoming at the rate of $5 an acre instead of $10 an acre. The bill has been passed by the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SPRINGFIELD-GREENVILLE MEMORIAL COMMISSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library I report back favorably without amendment Senate Joint Resolution 211.

Mr. BULKLEY. I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, does the joint resolution carry an appropriation?

Mr. BULKLEY. It authorizes a small appropriation of $2,500.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Ohio?

There being no objection the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 211) establishing a Springfield-Greenville Memorial Commission to formulate plans for the construction on Memorial Common, Springfield, Ohio, of a monument to commemorate the Battle of Piqua, and for the construction of a memorial building to commemorate the Treaty of Greene Ville at Greenville, Ohio, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby established a Commission, to be known as the "Springfield-Greenville Memorial Commission", and to be composed of nine Commissioners, three to be appointed by the President of the United States, three Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House. Such Commission shall consider and formulate plans for designing and constructing a permanent memorial to George Rogers Clark in Springfield, Ohio, and for designing and constructing a memorial building at Greenville, Ohio.

SEC. 2. Such Commission may, in its discretion, accept from any source, public or private, money or property to be used for the purpose of making surveys and investigations, formulating, preparing, and considering plans for the construction of such memorial, or other expenses incurred, or to be incurred, in carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution.

SEC. 3. The Commission shall report its recommendations to Congress as soon as practicable.

SEC. 4. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500, which shall be available to defray the necessary expenses of the Commission for the performance of their duties hereinafter prescribed. Disbursement of sums herein authorized to be appropriated shall be made upon vouchers approved by the Chairman of the Commission.

The preamble was agreed to.

JOHN E. T. CLARK

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Bill 7458, being Calendar No. 1280, for the relief of John E. T. Clark.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7458) for the relief of John E. T. Clark was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

THE JUDICIAL POWER

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, for discussing a subject not at this time before the Senate I make due apology.

Mr. President, a number of persons, respectable in character, have complained against the exercise of the power of the courts of the United States to declare acts passed by Congress unconstitutional. Some of the complainants take the view that since we derived our legal procedure from England and that inasmuch as the British courts did not exercise the power to declare an act of Parliament void, it was, therefore, unprecedented and unauthorized for courts of the United States to explore an act of Congress with a view of ascertaining if such act was within the power of the National Legislature.

It will be remembered that the colonial governments in America were grants from the King and were connected with Great Britain through the medium of the Crown and not through Parliament. The colonial charters were in fact constitutions, and the words "our constitution" in the Declaration of Independence have particular reference to the colonial charters or grants. These charters differed somewhat as to the powers granted or denied, but they all appear to have contained the provision that local legislation enacted by the Colonies should not be contrary to the laws of England; hence the colonial laws were frequently tested by the charter or by the law of England, and some acts of colonial assemblages were annulled because they did not stand the test as to whether they were in accord with the constitution; that is to say, with the colonial charter—the grant. Thus the American colonists became familiar with that system and practice.

In tyrannical governments the supreme magistracy, or the making, construing, and enforcing the law, is vested in one and the same man or one and the same body of men.

In a government where one and the same magistracy makes, construes, and enforces the laws, whether such magistracy be lodged in one man or in a body of men, there can be no public liberty.

It is true that in Great Britain the courts at the time of the formation of our Constitution, recognized the supremacy of acts of Parliament. Such recognition, however, did not flow from any legislative immunity from review but flowed from the fact that Parliament acted in a double capacity—that is to say, as legislature and as court. Parliament possessed legislative and judicial power. Parliament was a court, the old curia regis or aula regis—a court established in England by William the Conqueror in his own hall—long before Parliament possessed the legislative power. In other words, when our American Government was formed there were reposing in Parliament both legislative and judicial power; hence, an act of Parliament was both supremely legislative and supremely judicial.

In this connection it must be remembered that when our Constitution was formed much care was taken to see to it that the three powers of government—to wit, the judicial, the executive, and the legislative—should be lodged in different magistracies—different officials—and that these powers should not be permitted to repose in or be exercised by one and the same magistracy.

The Constitution of the United States (art. II, sec. 1) says:

The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America—

And (art. III, sec. 1) that—

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts—

And so forth. Bear in mind that the executive power shall be vested in a President and the judicial power shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and so forth, but the Constitution did not vest in the Congress all legislative power, but only such powers as were granted and enumerated. The Constitution says that all legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress (art. I, sec. 1).

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Senator is now making a very clear distinction, and is taking the ground of the Democratic platform, for which I congratulate him.

Mr. ASHURST. When my remarks have the approval of such a great lawyer as my worthy friend, the distinguished Senator from Utah, I feel as if I am entitled to stand up a little more nearly straight. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I ask Senators to observe the scrupulous phrasing wherein executive power is granted to the President, judicial power to the Court, but that only such legislative power as is granted, is lodged with the Congress; and this was done because the makers of the Constitution desired it to be crystal clear that the Congress was to be of limited power and that certain rights and powers of the States were not granted to the National Government, but were reserved to the States. The States possess all the rights and powers not denied to them by the Federal Constitution, whereas Congress possesses only such power as was granted to it by the Federal Constitution.

The British Parliament was not a body of men with delegated, limited authority. It was a body of men supremely legislative and supremely judicial.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to my friend the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. Our Federal Government is a Government of granted powers, is it not?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MINTON. Then, certainly, the Executive could not have any more Executive power, or the judiciary could not have any more judicial power, than that which was granted.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is one of the closest students of the Constitution in this body, and I have drawn inspiration and comfort from his views.

The Congress of the United States is a body of men with delegated, limited authority, with no judicial power except as to impeachments and the qualifications of its own Members, and it is not even supremely legislative, as the States possess the powers that were not granted to the Congress. The belief that Congress possesses absolute and unlimited power is a devastating error into which many well-meaning persons have fallen.

The Constitution makers would have recoiled from the suggestion of granting to Congress the judicial power, and they would have recoiled with repugnance and alarm from the suggestion of granting to the judiciary the legislative power.

Some of the ablest lawyers, not only of our time but in bygone days, complained with not a little reason against judge-made law.

Legislative power is the power to make laws. Judicial power is the power to declare laws. Executive power is the power to enforce laws:

The power to declare the law, of course, comprises the duty to determine what is the law and what is not the law. Article VI of the Constitution, among other things, says:

> This Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof * * * shall be the supreme law of the land * * *.

An act not made in pursuance of the Constitution is, of course, not a law. The judicial power may not make laws, but must declare, when its jurisdiction is invoked, whether an act of Congress is in pursuance of the Constitution; and if not made in pursuance of the Constitution, it is not a law.

A judicial review of acts of Congress is not an offshoot of English law, but is an American development arising from colonial practice out of a wholesome effort to keep separate the legislative power and the judicial power. It would be baleful to public liberty in our country for the legislative and the judicial powers to be centered in one and the same magistracy. Our genius of government is built upon the separation of the legislative, the executive, and the judicial power; and I doubt if, upon serious second thought, any enlightened friend to civil liberty will argue that these three powers should be centered in one and the same magistracy.

The legislative powers granted to Congress are enumerated and limited, and such limitation was not by chance, was not fortuitous, was not accidental, but was deliberate. Instead of seeking to acquire the judicial power, we in Congress would more truly serve our country by confining our operations to our legislative power.

It is true that our powers as Members of Congress are limited; but, nevertheless, if properly exercised, they are of sufficient amplitude and grandeur to give scope and opportunity to the most zealous champions of true progress and needful reforms, the most redoubtable defenders of liberty, the most eloquent tribunes of popular government, and to soothe and assuage the most fevered ambition.

There have been insinuations, unjustly indulged in, of course, that whilst seeking judicial power we have at the same time been abdicating some of our legislative powers. We would better first prove that we are faithful guardians of the power we now possess before we begin to try to acquire the judicial power.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to express my gratitude to the able Senator from Arizona for his interesting judicial review.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield before he proceeds?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. ASHURST. Permit me to say that I have read with care and approval the address delivered before the Bar Association of the city of Charleston, W. Va., in January 1936, by the Honorable John H. Hatcher, President of the Supreme Court of Appeals, State of West Virginia; I also read with care and approval the able speech of the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], delivered before the State Bar Association of Virginia, and also the article written about a year ago by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona, with that generosity which is only exceeded by the great distances and spaces of his own State, does me too much honor.

I desire to add just a word with reference to the nomination and confirmation the other day of Senator BLACK to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. Some of the newspapers seem to have undertaken to put some of us in the attitude, because we voted for his confirmation, of abandoning the views we had entertained on the Supreme Court reorganization bill. I take this opportunity not only to approve the general principles announced so lucidly and so magnificently by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], but to say that about 6 weeks ago I had heard a rumor that Senator BLACK was being considered for the vacancy on the Supreme Court. Without indicating to him that fact or any knowledge that I had, I provoked a discussion with him as to his attitude on the Supreme Court measure and the debate which took place in this body.

I asked whether or not he believed in the doctrine of judicial review, whether or not the Supreme Court had the power, and, having the power, would exercise it and should exercise it when it was of the opinion that an act of Congress was beyond the constitutional power of the Congress.

Senator BLACK assured me that he does believe in the doctrine of judicial review, does believe the Supreme Court has the power, and that whenever it is apparent that an act is beyond the constitutional power of Congress, it is the duty of the Supreme Court so to declare and hold it null and void, or, rather, to refuse to enforce it. That is all the Court does. It does not declare an act of Congress null and void. It merely says, "No; the Court will not enforce the act", and the act remains on the statute books.

I wanted to make it clear as to the newly appointed and confirmed Associate Justice—I have no authority to speak for him, but I do have authority to speak for myself—that in voting for his confirmation I knew I was voting for the confirmation of a man who believes in the splendid judicial traditions of America and in maintaining the doctrine of judicial review, which is essentially and distinctively an American doctrine, or, rather, an American development. Even in the Colonies, as was so well said by the Senator from Arizona, the privy council sitting in London declared null and void certain acts of the colonial legislature, declaring them in violation of the colonial charter.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. Is it not true that during the 10 years intervening between the Declaration of Independence and the writing of the Constitution more than 400 acts of Congress were declared void?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not believe there were that many. There were several, but not such a large number. From 1776, the time of the Declaration of Independence, until the Constitutional Convention of 1787, acts of legislatures were held unconstitutional. I do not have the data with me, but I have it somewhere available, because I gathered it in anticipation of a speech I intended to make against the Supreme Court reorganization bill, but that speech was rendered unnecessary by the collapse of the bill. In a number of States, during the time of the Revolution and on up to 1787, State judges and State courts held unconstitutional many acts of their own State legislatures. George Wythe, the teacher at whose feet sat John Marshall and Thomas Jefferson, as a judge wrote one of the Virginia decisions holding that an act of the Legislature of Virginia had transgressed the constitution of Virginia, holding it null and void, and stating that it was his duty as a judge to stand with sword in hand and to strike down that act of the Legislature of Virginia. If I am not mistaken, Connecticut was one of the States whose judges, during the period of the Revolution and afterward up to 1787, declared unconstitutional acts of the State legislature.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator referred to the Judiciary reorganization bill, which he said had collapsed.

Mr. CONNALLY. I hope permanently, but perhaps just temporarily.

Mr. ASHURST. It is not my purpose now to revive that controversy.

Mr. CONNALLY. I know it is not.

Mr. ASHURST. It seems to me that it is due to the President, and certainly it is due to myself, to say that during the course of the hearings on that bill—which occupied many weeks; we heard 85 witnesses, and 1,500,000 words of testimony were taken—the Senator from Arizona, who had the honor of presiding over the hearings, asked many of the witnesses if the bill, should it become a law, would take any judicial power from the court; and every witness who was thus interrogated replied that the bill, if it should become a law, would take no judicial power from the courts.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I bear witness to the correctness and accuracy of what the Senator from Arizona has said. Of course, the bill as presented did not deprive the Supreme Court of any judicial power. The Supreme Court would have had just the same power to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional with 15 Judges as with 9 Judges. The Senator from Texas did not intend to advert to that measure, except that some of the press have seen fit to ascribe inconsistency to some of us in having voted for the confirmation of Mr. BLACK and having opposed the Supreme Court reorganization bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the charge of inconsistency did not disturb my friend from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator from Texas should be convicted of inconsistency, he would be very pleasantly associated with the distinguished and eminent Senator from Arizona. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will permit me, I desire to say that in the Nation at large there has been a vast deal of good-natured raillery over the inconsistency of Senators here or there, including myself.

As Raymond Clapper, in a recent article, said, if, upon a roll call, the face of every Senator who had been inconsistent should turn red, the Senate would resemble a convocation of boiled lobsters. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona is a wise man. He is a learned man. He is an erudite man. He speaks correctly. What is inconsistency? Is it inconsistency to change one's mind? Well, a man who never changes his mind has not much mind, or at least his mind does not function.

Mr. ASHURST. He does not study much.

Mr. CONNALLY. If we do not learn, if we do not progress, if we do not develop, if we do not grow intellectually, we do not amount to much. There is nothing to the charge of inconsistency.

So, Mr. President, in the matter of the court bill I am sure the Senator from Texas voiced the sentiments of others associated with him in opposing that measure. We were not against the President of the United States. We were not against the administration. Many of us have been rather faithful followers of the administration. But here was a great, fundamental issue as to which I was convinced that the attitude of the President was wrong. Being so convinced, I knew where my duty was. My duty was to stand by the views and convictions of myself, and try to represent the people of my State and the Nation. Those who ascribe unworthy and improper motives to men on this floor have not a really proper viewpoint or appraisal of the motives which actuate Senators who are trying to do their duty to their country and to their constituencies.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, AUGUST 19, 1937

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, early in the morning our prayer shall rise to Thee. The whole creation is burdened with the exuberance of thy life and everywhere is hallowed ground. Heavenly Father, when brazen doubt comes, and when temptations assail, we need Thee so; we pray for mastery and joy in difficulty. With supreme faith may we cast our bread upon the waters. Lead us to the magical streams that are replenished from above, and with serenity may we face the future. Out of the depths of our being we pray Thee, blessed Lord, to deal availingly with the stupidity, the madness, and the infernal power of war where it is raging in its fiercest and its most monstrous form. Do Thou crown with the greatest wisdom our President and all others who are clothed with him in authority. May our beloved country remain the guardian of the world's peace and honor, and forbid that its spirit should ever again be fired with the frenzy of war. In the name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

RESIGNATION

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication.

The Clerk read as follows:

AUGUST 19, 1937.

SIR: I beg leave to inform you that I have this day transmitted to the Governor of Ohio my resignation as a Representative in the Congress of the United States from the Fourth District of Ohio, effective this date.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

FRANK L. KLOEB.

Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 288

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 287, incurred by the Committee on the Judiciary, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $10,000, including the expenditures for the employment of experts, clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee or by any subcommittee thereof, conducting such investigation or any part thereof, signed by the chairman of the committee and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

With the following committee amendment:

SEC. 2. That the official committee reporters shall be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Accounts. The House passed House Resolution 287 authorizing and directing the Committee on the Judiciary to investigate the organization and operation of and the administration of justice in the courts of the United States inferior to the Supreme Court. The House having ordered the committee to make this investigation, another arm of the House must now provide the committee with the necessary funds to do its work. The chairman of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. SUMNERS of Texas] introduced the resolution which I have presented, and yesterday he informed the committee he hoped to complete the duties you have placed upon his committee for less than $10,000, which as you know from past experience is a reasonable request.

Mr. Speaker, the Judiciary Committee has always been very careful with the funds that have been allocated to it from the contingent fund through resolutions reported by the Committee on Accounts. Below is a statement showing the amount that was appropriated for the Committee on the Judiciary for investigations, and so forth, in the Seventy-second, Seventy-third, and Seventy-fourth Congresses.

Date		Amount authorized	Unexpended balance
June 9, 1932	H. Res. 239 (Louderback)	$5,000	$1,590.74
May 8, 1933	H. Res. 132 (Lowell)	5,000	4,800.28
June 9, 1933	H. Res. 172 (Ritter)	2,500
Jan. 30, 1934	H. Res. 214 (Ritter)	2,500
		5,000	1,642.37
Mar. 6, 1936	H. Res. 441 (Ritter) (managers)	2,500	1,774.01
June 13, 1933	H. Res. 189 (receiverships)	5,000
Jan. 30, 1934	H. Res. 215 (receiverships)	7,500
June 15, 1934	H. Res. 443 (receiverships)	5,000
	Total	17,500	7,003.59

Total amount—
Authorized	$35,000.00
Expended	18,189.01
Unexpended balance returned	16,810.9

You will see by this statement that the committee received in all $35,000. That it expended $18,189.01 and that it returned as unexpended balance $16,810.99.

The Committee on Accounts, having given consideration to the resolution, recommend that the same do pass with the following amendment:

SEC. 2. That the official committee reporters shall be used at all hearings held in the District of Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN], a minority member of the committee.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, on the 5th day of last February the President of the United States sent a message to Congress recommending the reorganization of the judicial branch of the Federal Government. The message dealt with four present needs:

First. To eliminate congestion of calendars and to make the judiciary as a whole less static by the constant and systematic addition of new blood to its personnel.

Second. To make the judiciary more elastic by providing for temporary transfers of circuit and district judges to those places where Federal courts are most in arrears.

Third. To furnish the Supreme Court practical assistance in supervising the conduct of business in the lower courts.

Fourth. To eliminate inequality, uncertainty, and delay now existing in the determination of constitutional questions involving Federal statutes.

In that message the President of the United States stated that the judiciary found itself handicapped by insufficient personnel. He stated there was need for legislative action. That a growing body of our citizens complain of the complexities, the delays, and the expense of litigation in the United States courts. He emphasized that there were injustices and inequalities in our courts. He emphasized that modern complexities call for a constant infusion of new blood in the courts. He emphasized that a lowered mental or physical vigor leads men to avoid an examination of complicated and changed conditions. His message read:

Little by little new facts become blurred through old glasses fitted, as it were, for the needs of another generation; older men assuming that the scene is the same as it were in the past, cease to explore or inquire into the present or the future.

Mr. Roosevelt requested an increase in the number of judges of all courts without exception.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. In a minute.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman knows that what he is stating has absolutely nothing to do with the resolution. We are not going to investigate the Supreme Court.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Yes; I want it understood that this has nothing to do with the Supreme Court.

In my opinion the message of the President was well received by the minority party, by the country as a whole, with the exception of his proposal to pack the Supreme Court. For years the people of the United States have held the Supreme Court in great respect. They felt, and still feel, that the Supreme Court is their last resort in the safeguarding of their freedom. They know that as long as our Supreme Court remains free from political manipulation, the right of freedom of speech, the right of freedom of press, the right to worship God, will not be denied. They know that with proper appointments to the Supreme Court, Jews will have the same rights as gentiles; Catholics will have the same rights as Protestants; the Negro will have the same rights as any other race. Their hopes for equality in all respects depends upon who sits on the Supreme Court. They well know the importance of each appointment to that great tribunal. They know that it is no place for a bigot, they know that it is no place for one who is prejudiced, one who is blindly attached to some creed, some belief, that is un-American. They know that it is no place for one who is intolerant, narrow-minded, or illiberal to others opinions, especially as to one's right to free speech and one's right to worship God as he pleases.

With the retirement of Judge Van Devanter, it is unquestionably true, that the large majority of the Members of this body believed and were justified in believing, that there was one among our Membership who would fill his place admirably. This colleague, greatly respected in this body, greatly admired throughout the country for his ability, his statesmanlike qualities, for his true Americanism seemed to possess every requisite for the appointment. Had he received the appointment to the Supreme Court, we who know him are convinced that prejudice, bigotry, intolerance, would be free from all his decisions. We, his colleagues, who know him best, know that his conclusions would be reached with fairness to all.

Today, that respect colleague, who did so much to defeat the Supreme Court proposal to pack the Supreme Court has introduced a resolution requesting the authorization to investigate various practices in the inferior courts of the United States. He appeared before the Accounts Committee requesting $10,000 for that purpose. I trust this body will unanimously pass the resolution.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. For a question only.

Mr. MICHENER. I hope the gentleman will yield for a short observation.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman make it short, because we have business to transact in the House today and we want to get away and have a little caucus among ourselves.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, when the resolution upon which this resolution is based was before the House for consideration I opposed certain of its provisions, and my reasons are in the RECORD. I favored the general purposes of the resolution. I did not want to send out a "smelling committee" to spy upon the courts. I hope that nothing like that is going to happen, and I feel that our chairman will see to it that this money will be used in an investigation of the organization of the courts and the changes needed in the courts, and not for the purpose of intimidating the courts and making them fearful of the Congress. I have been assured that there is no intention of setting up a quasi grand jury, made up of members of the Judiciary Committee, to go about the country investigating complaints against Federal judges. A committee of the Congress supervising the conduct and checking up on the decisions of the judiciary is not compatible with the independence of the judiciary. The Executive appoints, the Senate confirms, and the House must not attempt to dictate. The Congress may pass the laws, but its powers cease there.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and the amendments thereto.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

ESTABLISHMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE ADMINISTRATION

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tonight to file a minority report on the bill (H. R. 8277) to extend the merit system, to extend the Classification Act of 1923, and for other purposes, reported by the Committee on Government Organization, and that it may be printed with the report of the majority.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech made by the President of the United States at Fort Raleigh, Roanoke Island, N. C., on August 18, 1937, at the exercises commemorating the three hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the birth of Virginia Dare, the first child of English parentage to be born on the American Continent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a message from the Honorable Anthony Eden, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs for the Government of Great Britain, and read by me yesterday at Fort Raleigh.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

WILDLIFE RESTORATION PROJECT

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2670) to provide that the United States shall aid the States in wildlife restoration projects, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman explain this matter.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill was prepared by the Conservation Committees of the Senate and House in collaboration with certain national wildlife conservation associations and agencies. The bill passed the Senate several weeks ago, but with some safeguarding and clarifying amendments. By unanimous vote, it was reported to the House by the Committee on Agriculture with amendments that changed the appropriation to an authorization.

As amended by the House committee the bill provides that there is authorized to be appropriated an amount equal to the excise tax of 10 percent on sporting guns and ammunition, to be allocated as grants-in-aid on the basis of one-half on area and one-half on the amount of hunting licenses that are sold in the several States of the Union. Twenty-five percent of the fund is to be met by the States and 75 percent of this fund, which since 1932 has been paid by the sportsmen of America under this excise tax into the Treasury, shall be used if this bill passes for their benefit in developing and conserving this great national resource, the one that the President told us several years ago was sadly depleted, the one that many of us know will be gone forever unless adequate steps are taken dealing with a scientific management of land and water areas in order that our birds and animals may have an opportunity to breed and multiply.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. What is the amount of the excise tax that has been paid into the Treasury?

Mr. ROBERTSON. The amount is approximately $3,000,000 a year.

Mr. RICH. Is that money in the Treasury at the present time? Is the money that was paid in by the sportsmen intact in the Treasury Department at this time?

Mr. ROBERTSON. No. It goes into the general fund. This does not affect the Budget for the fiscal year 1938. The bill specifically provides that, if passed, the appropriation shall be for the fiscal year 1939 and thereafter.

Mr. RICH. Then the Appropriations Committee will have to make an appropriation of $3,000,000 annually toward this fund?

Mr. ROBERTSON. It will. That is the authorization. I do not know that we can compel the committee to do it, but we would expect the committee to do so.

Mr. HOPE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOPE. This measure authorizes the appropriation of the proceeds of a specific tax which was levied originally for the purpose of raising general revenue. As far as I know, we have no precedents for legislation of this kind. I am wondering if the gentleman can tell me whether or not there is any precedent of this kind?

Mr. ROBERTSON. One precedent on all fours is the reclamation fund, which is raised for a specific purpose from the people of a locality and paid into the Treasury. This money is earmarked and held for reclamation purposes, and becomes a revolving fund.

There have been numerous instances where proceeds from taxes have in effect been earmarked and reappropriated, although the money went into the general fund.

I may give the gentleman another reason why the sportsmen of the country feel this measure should pass, and that is, the Congress plans to write a new tax bill in 1938, at which time it is proposed to work out, if possible, a better basis of taxes in place of putting certain so-called nuisance taxes on special groups. It is my understanding that the manufacturers of guns and ammunition and the sportsmen who buy and use their products are willing that this particular tax be continued after this year, providing the proceeds from it are used for this great purpose.

I may say to the gentleman from Kansas that there are now 5,000,000 members in the American Wild Life Federation and the membership is rapidly growing. There is not a State in the whole Union which is not interested. No bill has been presented at this session which has created so much interest among so many people and held out to them so much hope that at last the Federal Government will recognize the importance of this subject and deal adequately with it.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the gentelman from New York.

Mr. ANDREWS. I may say to the gentleman that this measure has the complete support of the New York State Conservation Commission.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And of every State department, and of every conservation agency and private association in the United States of which I know.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FADDIS. Speaking of a precedent for the appropriation of taxes of this kind, there is the fact that the gasoline taxes in various States are earmarked for road construction.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And, of course, the license taxes for hunting and fishing have always been earmarked in all the States.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. In addition to the unanimous reports submitted by the House Committee on Agriculture and by the Senate committee, is it not a fact that the special committees on wildlife in both the Senate and the House have voted for this bill?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Absolutely. We are all in harmony.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to my colleague the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. This bill undertakes to establish the precedent of turning back to the special interests that have paid the tax the total tax collected by the Federal Government. If we adopt this practice, it means that those who pay a tax on perfumery have a right to ask us to use the taxes paid on such products for the development of the perfumery industry and that those who pay taxes on fur are entitled to have that tax used to develop the fur industry. I think this is such an important bill that it should be considered under a rule of the House in Committee of the Whole, and I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Will the gentleman withhold his objection until we can explain this a little further?

Mr. TABER. If there is any way of meeting the objection I have raised I shall be pleased to have the explanation made.

Mr. ANDREWS. This is merely an authorization.

Mr. TABER. An authorization is just as bad as an appropriation. It is the custom when authorizations are brought in to say that it is merely an authorization, and it is the custom when an appropriation is not brought in to say that the Committee on Appropriations is thwarting the will of the House.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. The gentleman stated that this was establishing a precedent. Does the gentleman recall that under the Tobacco Control Act when a tax was levied on tobacco the proceeds were returned to the tobacco producers? This was true of the Cotton Control Act and of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. There are numerous other cases in which we have levied a tax on a particular industry and then used the proceeds for the benefit of that industry.

Mr. TABER. This is not that kind of tax. This is a tax which was levied for the purpose of obtaining revenue for the general fund of the Treasury.

Mr. BOILEAU. By this bill we state that we consider this tax as being in the interest of conservation.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. I may say to the gentleman from New York that he is absolutely in error when he states this fund goes back to the people who paid the taxes.

Mr. TABER. It is for their benefit.

Mr. ROBERTSON. It is for the benefit of the Nation.

Mr. ANDRESEN of Minnesota. It is for the benefit of all the people in this country. I think the gentleman is making a mistake.

Mr. TABER. I object, Mr. Speaker.

CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT OF MEXICO

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437) relative to the determination and payment of certain claims against the Government of Mexico, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statements are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437) relative to determination and payment of certain claims against the Government of Mexico, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

"SEC. 5. Section 6 of the Act approved April 10, 1935, creating the Special Mexican Claims Commission, and for other purposes, is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 6. The Commission shall complete its work within three years from the date on which it undertakes the performance of its duties, at which time all powers, rights, and duties conferred by this Act upon the Commission shall terminate. If the President finds the Commission has completed its work prior to such expiration date, he may terminate all such powers, rights, and duties of the Commission by Executive order.' "

And the Senate agree to the same.

S. D. McREYNOLDS,
SOL BLOOM,
JOE W. MARTIN,
Managers on the part of the House.
KEY PITTMAN,
TOM CONNALLY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 437) relative to determination and payment of certain claims against the Government of Mexico, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

On amendment no. 1: The House joint resolution provided for the establishment of a new Commission to complete the work of the Special Mexican Claims Commission. The Senate amendment provides that such Special Commission shall continue such work during its existence and thereafter a new Commission shall be established to complete such work. The House recedes.

On amendment no. 2: The House joint resolution contemplated that the powers of the Special Mexican Claims Commission would expire on the expiration date originally fixed in the act of April 10, 1935. The Senate amendment extends such expiration date for 1 year. The House recedes with an amendment extending such expiration date for 1 year but providing that the President may terminate the powers of such Special Commission within such year if he finds it has completed its work.

S. D. McREYNOLDS,
SOL BLOOM,
JOE W. MARTIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, in 1934 an agreement was entered into between the United States and Mexico for the payment of certain claims arising from 1910 to 1920, involving the payment of $500,000 a year until something like $5,500,000 had been paid. Up to the present time three of the payments have been made.

In 1935 we passed an act providing for a Special Claims Commission to go through all these claims and determine those which were really due. We put a limitation of 2 years on the life of this Commission, and this limitation expires on September 1. The Commission has finished its work, with the exception of some claims which are in with the general claims, and the General Claims Commission is to determine how many of the special claims shall go back to the Special Claims Commission. The bill as it passed the House provided for payment of the pro-rata part of these claims which have been allowed, and provided further that when these other special claims arise, which is to be determined soon, the Secretary of State should set up a commission for the purpose of passing on such claims. The Senate amended that bill by extending the power of the present Commission for 1 year. The House has agreed to this amendment with the understanding that the President may terminate the Commission at any time, whenever it completes its work.

The main purpose of the bill, of course, is to let the Government begin paying on these special claims that have been allowed, a pro-rata part, and when other special claims are allowed, with the payments being made in the future by the Mexican Government, the pro rata will be made.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. FISH. As I understand this situation, the United States Government does not pay out any money at all. This is money received from the Mexican Government to pay certain claims that United States citizens have had against the Mexican Government.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. FISH. And the gentleman simply wants to extend the time, and it will not cost us any money ourselves, and I take this occasion to state that I am very pleased to find one country in the world that pays its claims to American citizens and I believe they ought to be encouraged, and I hope the conference report will be agreed to.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. As I understand, this Special Commission had to approve or reject all claims filed within a certain time.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. They had to go through them and determine that question.

Mr. FISH. And they have either approved or rejected these claims.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes; except certain claims in the hands of the general Mixed Claims Commission.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I understand that, but the Mexican Government has made two or three of these $500,000 payments, and it is true, is it not, that although the Special American Commission has approved the claims that are valid in their judgment, yet not 1 cent has been paid to the claimants.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. And that is exactly the reason for the passage of this bill which provides that immediately upon the passage of the bill they will begin paying their pro-rata part on these special claims out of the money already received from the Mexican Government.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. I happen to have some personal knowledge of some of these claims that I know are meritorious; some of them are, perhaps, 20 years old and although the Commission has approved the claims they have not yet paid the pro-rata part that these claimants are entitled to.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. And the reason they have not is because they have not authority, and this bill will give them such authority.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. May I ask the gentleman another question in this same connection. After the Commission has approved the meritorious claims, as I understand it, they will then total the approved claims and pro rate the money that the Mexican Government has paid. Can the gentleman tell us the total of the approved claims and how much will be paid on each. I mean what percentage on an approved claim can a claimant expect?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I am very sorry, but I do not have that information.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. It will be very small, will it not?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I do not know.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Do I understand that American claimants will have this extra time, as proposed in the Senate amendment regarding an extension of time, within which to submit additional proof with respect to the claims that have not been approved?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Only those claims in the general Mexican Claims Commission to determine whether there are any special claims in that list over which this Commission has jurisdiction.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. Are we to understand the Mexican Government has actually paid into the Treasury of the United States at least $1,000,000, or two payments of $500,000 each?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes; and I think more than that.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. But there is money now available?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. If all claims have been passed on and either approved or rejected, it is high time that something was being paid to these deserving claimants. I cannot see where there is any excuse for further delay. To my knowledge some of these claims are more than 20 years old.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I may say to the gentleman that as soon as we get this bill passed the Government will then have the right to begin making these pro-rata payments.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. They have already had 2 years.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. They did not have the authority.

Mr. THOMASON of Texas. They were exercising authority and they have had some money on hand for a long time. Why not at least start payments even on the installment plan?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. RICH. How much more money does the gentleman expect to get on these claims?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. About $5,500,000 in all.

Mr. RICH. From Mexico?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. RICH. And the gentleman feels sure that Mexico is going to pay that money?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes; they have been meeting their obligations right along, paying $500,000 the 1st of January of every year.

Mr. RICH. Then we ought to take off our hats to Mexico, and we ought to have some strings on it.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. We have their promise and they have always met their obligations.

Mr. RICH. As the gentleman knows, we certainly need the money.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

DISTRICT COURT AT GLASGOW, MONT.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 537) to provide suitable accommodations for the district court of the United States at Glasgow, Mont.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I think the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR] should make a little explanation and, under reservation of objection, I desire to ask him a question or two about the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, this bill is for the purpose of providing suitable accommodations for the holding of Federal court at Glasgow. You will all recall the Fort Peck Dam Reservation. The Government has already purchased several millions of acres of ground there, and there are 7,000 people now at Fort Peck and 2,000 at Wheeler on this dam reservation, of which only the Federal courts have jurisdiction over civil and criminal cases arising within that territory. It is also located very close to an Indian reservation where causes which can only be tried in a Federal court arise. Glasgow is about 60 miles from the Canadian border, where smuggling cases are constantly before the Federal court. It is located 153 miles east of Havre, the nearest point at which Federal court is held. It is located about 150 miles from the Dakota line.

In other words, anyone who has business before the Federal court on the east end of Montana has to travel a distance of about 300 miles from the east end of the State to the city of Havre, taking the officers, taking the jurors, and the witnesses a distance of about 300 miles. The Attorney General in his report on this bill points this out:

> Glasgow is situated in Valley County in the northeastern portion of the State. It is 153 miles east of Havre, the nearest place to it which court is now held. The territory which would be served by terms of court at Glasgow comprises, in addition to a number of counties, the Fort Peck Indian Reservation and the Fort Peck Dam Site Reservation, and is adjacent to a portion of the Canadian border near which a considerable number of smuggling cases originate.
>
> I am informed by the Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget that the proposed legislation would not be in accord at this time with the program of the President.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Yes; I yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. Does legislation already provide for holding court at this place?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Yes. It was authorized in 1928. Further, the Government has already or will shortly call for bids for the construction of a post-office building at this point, which has been authorized, and which will cost $140,000. If this court building is provided for now it will simply mean another story on this building, and be constructed, according to general information, at a cost of about 40 percent less than it would cost if the post-office building were completed and later Federal court facilities provided for.

Mr. SNELL. In asking for a special term of the Federal court up in my own district, they insisted that quarters be furnished without expense to the Federal Government. I have never known of any bill like this, where we come in and pass a special bill to build a building in which to hold a special term of a Federal court.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. This is Senator WHEELER's bill. He introduced it in the Senate, and as I understand it the same question occurred to him, and it was decided an authorization was necessary before the appropriation could be made. Senator WHEELER secured the passage of the bill in the Senate. This serves a territory in which there are in the neighborhood of 125,000 people who would have to travel a distance of all the way from 50 to 300 miles to get to the Federal court at Havre.

Mr. SNELL. I admit all that, and I think the gentleman is right in that, but it is the method of procedure. As far as I know, we have never followed this method. If the department wants to make an arrangement when they build this Federal building, they can make an arrangement for holding the Federal court, but I have never known a case where the Congress has definitely authorized the making of arrangements in a specific case like this, and I can see no reason for a specific bill of this kind at this time.

Mr. GREEVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. GREEVER. As a matter of fact, is not the main necessity for this bill to take care of the great number of smuggling cases that they are now unable to take care of on account of the distance to the Federal court from the place where these witnesses live?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Yes; the gentleman is correct in that, but in addition to that, there is another serious phase. We have all those people living on the Fort Peck Dam Reservation and the State courts have no jurisdiction of their affairs.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Yes; I yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. MILLS. Is it not a fact that if the House passes this bill it will save the Government money in the transporting of prisoners about 175 miles?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Yes; the gentleman is correct.

Mr. SNELL. But why cannot this be done without the passage of this bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. It cannot be done.

Mr. SNELL. I know they have done it.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. But two wrongs do not make a right.

Mr. SNELL. It is done all over the country. We do not make special authorizations for things of this kind.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. As I understand the bill, the gentleman is asking only for an authorization?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. That is all.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If the gentleman is asking only for an authorization, he cannot hope to benefit from it in this session of Congress.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Senator WHEELER is going to try to secure an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill to provide for the appropriation, because it is absolutely necessary that this building be constructed if we are going to have any facilities for Federal court proceedings.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. LANHAM. Is it not true that after this bill is passed and this authorization given, inasmuch as the Federal post office is being constructed in this city of Glasgow, the Procurement Division would then have authority, with this legislation, under our general public-building appropriation, to construct this district court?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not know. I thought if he was expecting to provide for this legislation in this session of Congress he would have to do something with reference to the deficiency bill. We will not have any more deficiency bills on this side.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. The deficiency bill is now in the Senate.

Mr. LANHAM. As a matter of fact, I do not believe that necessity arises. There would not be necessity for a specific appropriation because under the general appropriation of funds for public buildings the Procurement Division would have authority to go ahead.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I think the gentleman is right.

Mr. SNELL. Have they not been doing this without specific authority by a bill similar to this?

Mr. LANHAM. I am not definitely advised. Perhaps they have. I am not sure about that.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In order to join the United States district court facilities with the Post Office there has to be some special legislation.

Mr. LANHAM. I understand they cannot do it without this legislation.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. RICH. If the Post Office Department has authorized the money for the construction of a post-office building, then are we to believe that this appropriation will be added to the post-office appropriation so that they can construct a court in conjunction with the post-office building?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Exactly. The gentleman is correct. In addition to that, it has been estimated that if these court facilities are provided for now while the construction of this building is in progress it will save the United States Government about 40 percent of the entire cost in doing it.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman says that Senator WHEELER is going to add a special appropriation to the deficiency bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. He is going to attempt to do so if we secure the passage of this bill.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. What is the amount of that?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. It is a little less than $100,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to provide suitable rooms and accommodations for holding terms of the district court of the United States in the Federal building proposed to be constructed in Glasgow, Mont. The limit of cost for such building is hereby increased by such amount not in excess of $100,000 as may be necessary for that purpose; and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sums as may be necessary not in excess of $100,000 in addition to the sums heretofore appropriated and allocated, for the construction of such building.

SEC. 2. So much of section 92 of the Judicial Code, as amended, as heads "Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Glasgow, Lewiston, and Havre are furnished free of all expense to the United States" is amended to read as follows: "Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Lewiston and Havre are furnished free of all expense to the United States."

With the following Senate amendment:

Page 2, line 5, strike out the word "heads" and insert the word "reads."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

POLLUTION OF THE WATERS OF THE POTOMAC RIVER

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 162 to permit the States of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, and the District of Columbia to enter into a compact or agreement respecting the creation of a Potomac Valley conservancy district for the prevention or abatement of harmful pollution of the waters thereof.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman of the opinion that the consideration of the matter will take any substantial time?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I do not think it will.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is behind in its schedule very largely on this other matter.

Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, just to ask one question. I notice, in reading the list, some States were omitted. For instance, the State of Connecticut.

Mr. MANSFIELD. This is just on the Potomac River.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Just the Potomac River?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 162

Resolved, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby given to the States of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, and the District of Columbia to negotiate and enter into a compact or agreement providing for the creation of a conservancy district to consist of the drainage area of the Potomac River and the main and tributary streams therein, said district to be organized and maintained for the purpose of regulating, controlling, preventing, or otherwise rendering unobjectionable and harmless the pollution of the waters of said Potomac drainage area by sewage and industrial and other wastes, upon conditions that a suitable person shall be appointed by the President of the United States from the Department of the Treasury who shall participate in said negotiation as representative of the United States, and shall make a report to Congress of the proceedings of any compact or agreement entered thereto: Provided, That any such compact or agreement shall not be binding or obligatory upon any of the parties thereto unless and until the same shall have been approved by the legislatures of each of said States and by the Congress of the United States.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that the Chair has promised to recognize the Delegate from Alaska and cannot recognize any other Members until the contested-election case is taken up.

RESOURCES AND COMMERCE OF ALASKA

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Concurrent Resolution No. 24.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 24

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President is requested to prepare or cause to be prepared by the present departments and agencies of the Government, and within the regular appropriations of such departments and agencies heretofore made for the fiscal year 1938, and to report to the Congress within 30 days after commencement of the second session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, a comprehensive plan for the development of the resources of the Territory of Alaska, and the expansion and development of the facilities of commerce between the United States and Alaska, and within the Territory. The plan so prepared and reported to Congress, may, in the discretion of the President, embrace a statement of such works and facilities to be established in Alaska as may be desirable for national defense. Said report to contain such information as will aid the Congress in conducting investigations to determine what is to be done with the resources of Alaska.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think we should have a little explanation of this resolution that we may know whether it is going to cost additional money and just how far they expect to go.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, this will cost the Government no additional money, and it is expressly so provided in the concurrent resolution. The various departments of the Government now have in their files a mass of information about Alaska, but it has never been coordinated nor brought together. What we seek to do by this resolution is to ask the President to put this information together in a compact form and to submit it to Congress, with his recommendations, at the next session for the consideration of the Congress.

Mr. SNELL. Why is it necessary to have this done by resolution? If the departments have all of this information at the present time, why cannot the President tell the heads of these bureaus to present it?

Mr. DIMOND. It is likely that the President can tell them to do it, but it has never been done through all these years, and I believe it will not be done unless Congress asks for it.

Mr. SNELL. If we pass this resolution, is the gentleman sure there will not be another bureau set up or additional expense involved to get this information?

Mr. DIMOND. So far as I know anything about it, it will not cost the Government a cent. It merely calls for a report to Congress of information and data that is now in the possession of the Government and the President's recommendations with respect thereto.

Mr. SNELL. And it is definitely understood that there is no appropriation connected with it?

Mr. DIMOND. It calls for no appropriation.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield.

Mr. NICHOLS. I may say to the gentleman from New York that the resolution specifically provides that it must be done within present appropriations and within the present departments. Not even additional personnel can be appointed under it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from Alaska?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ELECTION CONTEST—ROY v. JENKS

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 309.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-one Members are present, a quorum.

The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Arthur B. Jenks is not entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives in the Seventy-fifth Congress from the First Congressional District of the State of New Hampshire.

Resolved, That Alphonse Roy is entitled to a seat in the House of Representatives in the Seventy-fifth Congress from the First Congressional District of the State of New Hampshire.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, pending the consideration of this resolution I ask unanimous consent that general debate may be extended for 2 hours, to be confined to the resolution, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] and myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that general debate upon the pending resolution be limited to 2 hours, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD]. Is there objection?

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, on this side of the House it is earnestly desired that we have an hour and a half on a side. I appeal to the chairman of the committee to give us an hour and a quarter on a side and we will try to get along with that, unless other matters make it so extremely important to cut the time shorter.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman from North Carolina, of course, has the right to move the previous question at the end of an hour and probably has the votes to order the previous question, and he could yield such time out of that hour as he desired. The gentleman from North Carolina, it appears to me, has been very generous, especially on Thursday of the last week of Congress. It is my personal view that it would be better for all concerned and for the humor of the House if we confined this to the reasonable time of 2 hours.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate the fact that some people might consider 2 hours fairly reasonable; and we appreciate the fact, as the gentleman says, that you have the votes; but as a matter of fact these election contests for the last 20 years, regardless of which side has been in power, have not always been decided just because the side in power had the votes. I think, as a general rule, they have been fairly decided.

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, I said that the gentleman from North Carolina had the votes to carry the previous question at the end of an hour.

Mr. SNELL. I understood what the gentleman said and what the gentleman had in mind; but does not the gentleman think he could be generous enough to give us an hour and a quarter whether the other side wants that much time or not?

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman from North Carolina does not object, I have no objection. I simply want to say that I think the gentleman from North Carolina was very generous in his suggestion to begin with.

Mr. SNELL. If all we are going to have is an opportunity to talk, you better give us another 15 minutes.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I modify my request and ask unanimous consent that general debate shall be confined to the resolution, shall not exceed 2½ hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts and myself; that at the end of that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina modifies his request and now asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending resolution shall be confined to the resolution, shall continue for 2 hours and 30 minutes, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Massachusetts; that at the conclusion of this time the previous question shall be considered as ordered.

Is there objection?

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I be allowed to file a substitute motion during that period?

Mr. KERR. I do not agree to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR] is recognized for 1¼ hours, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] is recognized for 1¼ hours.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I realize that most of the Members of the House have had very little time to consider this important matter; so I shall endeavor to state as well as I can the facts concerning this contest and the law which the majority of the committee thinks should determine the matter.

In the consideration of the case a majority of the committee recognized the fact that this House possesses all the functions of a court of law and a court of equity, and that it may use any method it wishes in order to safeguard the integrity of an election and make secure the intention of the voters in any congressional district. No rule of the House or Federal or State statute can be interpreted as mandatory or obligatory when it defeats the right of this House to be the judge of an election, the judge of the returns, and the qualifications of its membership.

Mr. Speaker, the majority of the committee does not take the position that returns of duly appointed election officials are not prima-facie evidence of their correctness and that ordinarily the burden is not upon the contestant to impeach this return. But in this case it does take the position that a recount of the votes cast for Congressman in the First New Hampshire District at the general election held on November 3, 1936, rebuts the presumption of correctness of the official returns and shifts the burden upon the contestee to show that the said returns were not correct.

I call attention to the case of Gooding against Wilson, in the Forty-second Congress, in which this rule and principle was laid down. It was stated in that case—

That the official count is prima-facie evidence of the correctness thereof, but it may be overthrown by evidence, especially when there are circumstances indicating the probability of a mistake. A recount properly conducted is such evidence, and there is no presumption of fraud in such a recount, or in the keeping of the ballots previous to it. To establish the presumption of such fraud the party denying the correctness of the recount must show circumstances indicating not merely the fraud could have been committed, but that there was at least a probability that it was committed.

Mr. Speaker, in the case at issue the statutes of New Hampshire provide for a mandatory recount of the ballots upon the request of any candidate for Congress or any other office in that State, and the recount, differing from the official returns, rebuts the presumption of the prima-facie correctness of the return. And the burden then shifts as a matter of law to the contestee to show that the recount is incorrect, if he still relies upon the official returns.

Chapter 43, sections 94, 96, and 101, of the act covering the New Hampshire election laws provides that if any person for whom a vote was cast and recorded for any office at a biennial election shall, before the expiration of 60 days, apply in writing to the secretary of state for a recount of the ballots given for all persons voted for such office, and shall state in the application the names of the opposing candidate, the secretary of state shall appoint a time for the recount—not earlier than 15 days.

Section 96 of said chapter 43 further states that at the time and place indicated or appointed, the secretary of state shall count the ballots. The various candidates and the counsel shall have the right to inspect the ballots and participate in such a recount under such suitable rules as the secretary of state may adopt.

It provides further that the secretary of state may employ such assistants as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Within a few days after the election held on the 3d of November, A. D. 1936, the contestant in this case, Mr. Roy, filed an application with the secretary of state to have the votes cast in this congressional election recounted; and the secretary of state, assisted by his assistant secretary, after receiving the ballots from all the precincts in the district, made a thorough recount of said ballots, and in that recount it was disclosed that the contestee, Mr. Jenks, had not received a majority of the votes cast.

On the first official returns Mr. Jenks received 51,920 votes and Mr. Roy 51,370 votes. On the first official returns, it gave Mr. Jenks a majority of 550 votes. After this recount provided by law the secretary of state found that Mr. Jenks had lost 241 votes in the recount of the ballots and that Mr. Roy had gained 309 votes, which totaled 550 votes. The secretary of state then made the declaration that each of them had received 51,579 votes and that it was a tie.

Immediately after the vote was computed by the secretary of state, both of the parties, Mr. Roy first and then Mr. Jenks, served notice on the ballot law commission of the State, which was another body of election officials, created under the New Hampshire election laws, chapter 25, section 91, for a further and final hearing, as provided in section 101 of chapter 43 of said laws.

The ballot law commission undertook, pursuant to law, which provides in the case of a recount for any office before the secretary of state that there may be an appeal from the said finding to the ballot law commission and the said commission shall consider all objections and the findings of the secretary of state and may, if it finds good cause, change the declaration of the secretary of state.

When the case came before the ballot law commission, which had the final disposition of it, the commission decided that there were only 108 protested votes in the count of the secretary of state, and that this number would be all that was necessary for them to observe in order to determine who had received a majority of the votes cast. After full discussion by both bodies, as appears in the record, they accepted the count of the secretary of state and considered only 108 votes, which were protested by one party or the other, out of the 103,000 votes which were cast, in order that they might determine who really had received a majority of the votes cast in this election. The ballot-law commission made the following order, which I call to the attention of the House:

It appearing that both the contestants were represented by competent counsel at the recount of the ballots by the secretary of state and that the count by the secretary was not questioned by either contestant except as to relatively few ballots, and that upon protest of his count of a ballot the secretary of state thereupon attached to the protested ballot a memorandum showing how it was counted by him and by whom his count was protested, it appears unreasonable to the commission at this time to undertake to reinspect and recount all of the ballots cast.

The commission therefore rules that at the hearing upon the merits of the petition of Mr. Roy and Mr. Jenks now pending, it will accept the count of the ballots made by the secretary of state at the recount except only as to such ballots as were protested at the recount by one or the other contestant, and the hearing will be limited to consideration of the ballots so protested.

Therefore, it is evident that the commission itself was so satisfied that the count of the secretary of state was correct that it limited its observation in the determination of this matter to only the 108 protested ballots out of the 103,000 votes cast. After counting these ballots in the presence of these gentlemen and their representatives, the ballot law commission, which consisted of a Democrat and a Republican, appointed by the Governor, and the attorney general of the State—two Republicans and one Democrat—adjudged that the contestant had received a majority of 17 votes.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from North Carolina suspend a moment to receive a message from the Senate?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

THE HOUSING BILL

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (S. 1685) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the eradication of slums, for the provision of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes, with a House amendment, insist on the House amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. STEAGALL, GOLDSBOROUGH, REILLY, WOLCOTT, and FISH.

ELECTION CONTEST—ROY v. JENKS

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, before the argument on this case is closed you will find that the decision in this election contest will be determined on a matter of 34 votes which the contestee alleges he received in Newton Precinct, the town of Newton, N. H., and which he contends were not counted for him or were not in the ballot box when the recount of the vote was made.

I call your attention to the fact that at the recount before the secretary of state and the recount and adjudication by the ballot law commission the question of a mistake of 34 votes was not raised by the contestee or his attorney. I am not surprised that they did not raise the question for the reason that when the secretary of state recounted these ballots he found there were discrepancies in 114 precincts of the 129 in the district.

As further evidence of unusual discrepancies between the original return made by the election officers and the recount by the secretary of state, the election officers found that Anna Rudd, a Farmer-Labor candidate for Congress against Mr. Roy and Mr. Jenks, received 197 votes in the district, and the recount by the secretary disclosed that Anna Rudd received 252 votes. To show you that the discrepancies as between the returns of the officials and the recount of the secretary of state were most pronounced in this election, the recount further disclosed that Alice Flynn, independent candidate for Congress against Mr. Roy and Mr. Jenks, received 720 votes, whereas she was given only 332 votes by the election officers. The recount showed she had received more than double the number of votes shown by the returns of the election officials of the several precincts in the district. Therefore, I am not surprised, and I do not believe the House should be surprised, in view of the fact these discrepancies are so apparent that neither the contestee nor his diligent attorneys raised the question, at either the recount before the secretary or the recount before the ballot law commission, that he had received 34 votes more than were accounted for in the town of Newton. It was quite evident at both recounts that the contestee was short these 34 ballots; it was thoroughly discussed before the secretary of state.

I read now a further statement of the ballot law commission:

That of the ballots cast for Representative in Congress for the First Congressional District on the 3d day of November 1936, Mr. Roy received 51,695, Mr. Jenks received 51,678, and Mr. Roy having the highest number of ballots cast was duly elected, and the commission therefore finds and rules that Alphonse Roy having received the largest number of votes at the biennial election November 3, 1936, for Representative in Congress from the First Congressional District of the State of New Hampshire, he is hereby declared to have been duly elected to that office and entitled to a certificate of election.

Ten days after the declaration of the ballot law commission the contestee, Mr. Jenks, notified the Governor and State council to hold up the election certificate and petitioned for a rehearing before the ballot law commission.

Evidently, the Governor notified the ballot law commission again that Mr. Jenks wanted a rehearing, and they gave him a rehearing, and the record of this case discloses that at that rehearing, for 3 days, they discussed the question of whether or not the election returns from Newton or the count of the ballots cast at Newton, was determinative of how many people voted for these two candidates. For 3 days they discussed this and would not decide it. Then the contestee, Jenks, came in after two counts and asked for a third count and said he had received 34 more votes at Newton than had been counted for him and, mind you, 34 more votes than were actually put into the ballot box for him. Then it was that the commission decided they would have another recount of all the ballots, when the determination of this question as to the 34 ballots claimed by Jenks in Newton precinct would have settled it right then, and they knew it. However, they decided they would give the contestee, evidently, another chance, and they would count all the ballots that had been cast. So they went ahead and for 4 days they indulged in recounting, for the second time, all the ballots that were cast, and upon this recount——

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. No; I cannot yield.

Upon the recount made by this commission they returned that Mr. Roy, the contestant in this case, had a clear majority of all the votes of 24. They increased his majority by 7 and although they found that he had 24 more votes, they decided that 34 votes were cast in the Newton election precinct which were not counted, and which were not in the ballot box on either of the recounts for Mr. Jenks.

This brings us to the real question in the case, as the majority of the committee see it, and that is what is the best evidence of how many ballots were cast in the Newton ballot box and for whom were they cast. The return of the election officers who made a mistake, in 114 out of 129 precincts, and who had failed to give the ladies who were running for Congress, one of them 33 percent of her vote, and the other 60 percent of her vote or the ballots themselves, which have been preserved inviolate and no evidence whatever of their ever having been molested or tampered with? We maintain the best evidence is to open the ballot box, whose integrity is not impeached and which has been kept inviolate, and see how many votes were put in there and for whom they were cast?

The rule of law in respect of this is elementary, and I will hasten to give you an authority or two about it.

It was held in Butler against Leham, in the Thirty-seventh Congress, "where the ballot boxes were produced by the official custodian, sealed, and in the same apparent condition as when deposited with them, then under these circumstances the burden of proving that they had been tampered with is upon the contestee"—or upon Mr. Jenks—

And this burden could not be sustained merely by showing that they had been left in a situation where it was possible for some unauthorized person to have tampered with them. There was no proof in this case to render it probable. The contestee called the election officers to swear that their returns were correct; but in the opinion of the committee, this testimony neither impairs the case of the contestant nor strengthens that of the respondent. Officers who had declared upon their official oaths that the returns made by them were true would not be likely to come into court afterward and swear that they were false. It was not necessary to determine whether the incorrectness of the returns was due to fraud or mistake, the committee was convinced that the recount represented a true state of the vote.

I quote again in reference to the law in respect of this point the principles laid down by Paine on elections at section 786:

When the statute expressly provides for the preservation of the ballots by a particular officer for the specific purpose of determining the right to a public office, the ballots are the highest and best evidence for that purpose, and if preserved as the law requires, are the only conclusive evidence of the result of the election; the certified statement and declaration of the officers of the election are prima-facie evidence only.

The probative force of the ballot as evidence is, of course, determined by how it is preserved after it is cast. I have not time to take the brief here and call your attention to the oath of all the officials who held this election on the third day of November. Certainly, the contestee cannot claim he was not in the hands of his friends. Seven out of nine officers belonged to his party, the secretary of state was a member of his party, and the ballot law commission was composed of two Republicans and one Democrat and, certainly, the contestee, Mr. Jenks, in this case, cannot complain about what these gentlemen found about these things, and I want you to remember this.

The controversy is on the question as to how many votes Mr. Jenks received in Newton precinct, and whether the poll list and tally sheets of the election officials or the ballots kept and sealed inviolate are the best evidence as to how many votes were cast and who they were cast for. If the House does not find that Mr. Jenks, the contestee in this case, received 34 votes that were not counted for him, because they were not in the ballot box at any recount, then he is defeated for Congress by 20 majority. These officers who have the election made statements, and a succinct statement of each and all nine of them is set forth in the majority report. They said there were 458 votes cast there, that they checked the ballot list, and that 458 passed by, and the tally sheet showed 458 votes were tallied, but when they were put on the witness stand and testified to these facts they also testified concisely and conclusively that in Newton precinct every ballot that was voted was taken out of the ballot box it was voted in and put in a container and sealed up and sent to the secretary of state, and they further testified that it was impossible for anybody to remove 34 votes from that ballot box, and they further testified that they sent it sealed to the secretary of state, who testified it came to him in that condition. There is no impeachment whatever as to the preservation of these ballots and the preservation of their integrity—none whatever. It is said something must have become of them. It is a pure speculation founded on no fact; something evidently came of a great many of the ballots which were cast or counted wrong in this congressional election; there was a mistake by the officials in 114 out of 129 of the precincts. There was a discrepancy on the recount, especially upon the recount of the secretary of state.

I think I have taken enough of your time and in conclusion I call attention to the rule of law that obtains and that is accepted, I think, by everybody, as the law relative to which is the best evidence, the return of election officers, or the ballots themselves, when they have been preserved inviolate.

In Haley against Reidelberger, it was held that where the clerk had possession between the time of the original count and the recount, he being the proper custodian thereof, and who kept them in a closet in his home, and where there was no evidence of tampering with the ballots, that the recount of the ballots should prevail over the election judges' return and that "any discrepancy would be attributed to the error of the judges."

That is still the accepted principle of law that applies in a controversy of this kind. It was further held in Roberts v. Drake (205 Ind. 452) that the ballots were the controlling factors and not the tally sheet.

Those who advocate that Mr. Jenks be kept seated will tell you that the tally sheets and the poll list is better evidence than the ballots themselves. That is not the holding of the courts of this country. It has been universally held that the ballots are the controlling factors when controversies of this kind arise and that tally sheets cannot take precedence over ballots.

In Srum v. Slankard (134 Ark. 42), it was held that where the ballots were in sealed envelopes and the seals were intact, the court accordingly accepted the ballots as the best evidence.

The contention on the part of the majority of this committee is that there have been four counts of the ballot cast in this election, that the second count determined there was a tie, that in the third count it was determined that the contestant had received a majority of 17 votes, that the fourth count determined that he had received a majority of 24 votes, and that the recount of these ballots is better evidence than the tally sheets and the poll list, which the gentlemen say Members ought to accept here and declare that there were 34 votes cast in the Newton precinct ballot box for the contestee that were never found there, and they were guessing for whom they were cast. This House ought to accept these recounts and hold that the ballots as counted and as preserved inviolate are the best evidence and are determinative of this controversy.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. How does the number of ballots in this precinct correspond with the tally sheet?

Mr. KERR. The tally sheets say there were 458 votes cast in that ballot box, but the vote for the Congressman discloses on the first recount, before the secretary of state, that he received only 390 votes, and the contestant received 100 votes, and when they were recounted by all the recounts, it disclosed that the contestee had lost 34 votes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. But all the ballots were there?

Mr. KERR. Every ballot was there and counted there and recounted.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. Yes.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The number of votes cast in that precinct were how many?

Mr. KERR. The tally sheet and the poll list say there were 458 votes cast.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I mean the actual votes that they say were 34 less always from beginning to end in the tally sheet.

Mr. KERR. Yes; more than that, because there were 62 people there who did not vote for anybody.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Admitting those 34 votes we will say were cast by somebody, how can gentlemen on the other side prove they were cast for him?

Mr. LAMNECK. I would like to ask how the gentleman explains the fact that the election officers in tallying those ballots showed there were 34 more votes than ballots after they were counted, because my vote is going to be determined on whether you can show that is the fact.

Mr. KERR. Our contention is that it was not a fact, because those same officers who made the poll list and tally sheet put every vote that was cast back into the ballot box into a retainer ballot box and sent it to the secretary of state.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KERR. No. I do not yield any further, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, just a very brief outline of the case from me. There might be need of plain speaking in this case, but we are appealing to the fairness of the House. The Speaker has well stated the seriousness of the vote we are about to cast. A faithful, industrious, splendid man has served with us now for an entire session of Congress. I shall not bore for water, but he has proved himself all of that, and for your satisfaction it ought to be stated he has an abiding faith today in the fairness of this House and has asked for time that he may speak for himself. Politics do not seem to enter into his nature. I have been on this committee for many years. Usually the committee has been extremely fair.

The chairman and I are friends of long standing. I have great sympathy for him today in trying to bolster up a bad case. He has tried to set aside the election authorities of the State of New Hampshire. He made this remarkable statement to you, "That it was the duty of the contestee to prove that he was elected." Think of it. Why should Mr. Jenks have gone any further? He was declared elected from the State of New Hampshire. It is entirely up to the contestant to prove that the decisions rendered were not in fact rendered upon the evidence or otherwise erroneously made. Our chairman comes to this Congress with only 39,000 votes, and only 40,000 votes cast for congressional candidates in his congressional district. This man has had to reckon with 103,000 votes, yet the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR] pleads with you to accept the determination of the ballot law commission on that part of their duty in which they insisted that the intent of the voter should be persuasive. The directory laws of the State of New Hampshire were set aside by them in counting the votes. When, if ever, 103,000 voters are recorded in Mr. KERR's district in North Carolina, I think we will hear a different argument. I think they would insist that the directory features of the law should be observed; he would urge that the votes of those people who do not know how to vote properly should not be counted. Yet he applauds the work of the ballot commission of New Hampshire in that respect, but when it comes to the missing ballots he does not applaud the ballot commission in their determination, although it was a unanimous decision. No. It makes a difference whose ox is gored, does it not?

Other speakers will talk about the law in the case. I am not a lawyer. I have had long experience with lawyers. Precedents can be glibly recited to bolster up both sides of a case. However, these 34 ballots were missing. If Mr. Roy's 100 ballots that he received in the town of Newton should have been found missing when the secretary of state finally opened the container, we would then hear a different story, would we not? That should be sufficient to abolish the argument about the ballots being kept inviolate. Of course, there was an opportunity to purloin 34 ballots. How would you enjoy having your ballots recounted under such conditions? One hundred and three thousand ballots scattered over a huge table and counted by people who had been working all the day and night before on other recounts, and where spectators were milling around?

We have had cases presented to us before where ballots have been recounted after that same manner. Certainly an opportunity to filch 34 ballots and hand them to a spectator is very possible. Do not say there was not opportunity. A thief is always cunning and it is difficult to actually see him in the act. Newton was the only place where there were missing ballots. There were many discrepancies, of course, but not missing ballots. If all the ballots were there, they might be the best evidence of the intent of the voter, but when they are not there it surely is not the best evidence, and other evidence must be relied upon.

If you are interested in precedents read the minority report and you will see where precedents have been cited to offset any presented by the other side.

I regret to mention this fact, but the House must have noted that after 3 or 4 days of evidence being taken and certain tie votes had been taken in the committee, then and then only the existing vacancy was filled. I can only say I am sorry for any Congressman who would be selected at such a moment and for such a purpose. I have very great appreciation for the gentleman from Oklahoma. He is brilliant. When he finally came on the committee I thought a whirlwind had struck us, and you will not be surprised at this because of the ability which he has shown in the last 3 years that he has been a Member of this body.

The first question I asked when the committee met on the case was: "Is this vacancy to be filled?" An evasive answer was given which made me feel that it was not to be filled. I do not question the motive, the honesty, or the fairness of the gentleman from Oklahoma. Open-minded? Of course he was! But I say it was an unfortunate position. I would hesitate to be selected under conditions like that. I would seem to be taken for granted.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GIFFORD. I have but 10 minutes. I have yielded a great deal of time to others. I would like to yield to the gentleman. This is a serious contest and I am withholding myself from my usual method of procedure in argument. My client, if I may call him such, has an abiding faith in the fairness of this House. I want to say nothing to prejudice his case in any manner. I simply plead for impartial judgment in his case. We must not arouse prejudice. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time to be given to other speakers who have earnestly requested to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has consumed 9 minutes.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who has a special message in this case in which the Members will be greatly interested.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, Members will realize by this time, I am sure, that the solution of this controversy must be found in the little town of Newton, N. H. May I sketch very briefly the events which led up to the Newton situation? As the gentleman from North Carolina has stated, a recount was held by the secretary of state upon the application of Mr. Roy. Upon that recount the vote was declared a tie. A certain number of ballots were protested and application was made to the Ballot Law Commission of New Hampshire, which is the highest body in that State to pass upon elections, to settle the matter. Upon that count, Mr. Roy was declared elected by 17 votes. The gentleman from North Carolina has told you that shortly thereafter, it being then about the middle of December, Mr. Jenks, or his representatives, appealed for another hearing before the ballot law commission.

The gentleman from North Carolina has criticized the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. Jenks], or his attorneys, for bringing up in that application for a second hearing, the alleged shortage of 34 votes from the Newton district. He criticized him for not having mentioned that fact before. I may say that the evidence shows that he could not have mentioned it before, because he did not know about it. The shortage was noted first, as I recollect, by a man named Esterbrook who noted in the newspapers that in the recount by the secretary of state 424 voters were accounted for but he remembered that 458 voters had voted in Newton. He called the attention of the Governor, or perhaps Mr. Jenks and his attorneys did so, and the Governor asked the ballot law commission to look into that. They did and reached a unanimous decision. This decision was joined in by Mr. Harry Lake, a Democrat, a well-known citizen of New Hampshire. They reached the unanimous decision that by some means or other it was actually the fact that 34 votes had been cast in Newton and yet not counted by the secretary of state when he opened that ballot box. The ballot law commission did not pretend to say what had become of those 34 votes, but it did say that 34 more ballots were put in that box on election day in Newton than were counted in the secretary of state's office at Concord, the State capital.

Mr. GAVAGAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. GAVAGAN. And is not that unanimous decision of the ballot law commission in conformity with the returns made by the tally clerks, one a Republican and one a Democrat, and with the tally sheet?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; but please be brief.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. What I am interested in and what I think others on this side are interested in is how can we tell for whom the 34 missing ballots were cast?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I must proceed, but I yield for a brief question.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Can the gentleman inform the House whether or not the secretary of state of New Hampshire is a Republican or a Democrat?

Mr. WADSWORTH. He is a Republican.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one more question just to get this settled before he starts on the main part of his argument?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. No one, so far as I know, has ever seen those 34 ballots or ever counted them.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; they have been seen. They were seen by the election officials of Newton.

Mr. HEALEY. How about the State ballot law commission and the secretary of state?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They were not seen by them; that is true. Now, I must proceed.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman proceed from that point and tell in his opinion what happened to the ballots from the time they were sealed at Newton until they got to the secretary of state's office?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall endeavor to trace them. And now, Mr. Speaker, I ask not to be interrupted.

The election board, as we call it in New York State—they may call it by another name in New Hampshire—which conducted the election at Newton was headed by an officer called the moderator.

The moderator at Newton was a Democrat, a man of high standing in the community. He is an elective officer. He is elected in the town. He had been moderator for several years. He was reelected and reelected, the people having complete confidence in him, although the town is strongly Republican.

Other members of the election board are the three selectmen elected in the town of Newton, as in all New Hampshire towns. Each party had two watchers present all the time.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Will the gentleman yield? Who appointed the watchers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. They were appointed by the respective political parties.

That accounts for 3 selectmen, 4 watchers, which makes a total of 9, the moderator, 10, and the town clerk, a lady by the name of Mrs. Hayford.

The total population of the town of Newton, as I recollect it, is 823 men, women, and children. It is a typical little New England town where everybody knows everyone else. Under the State law of New Hampshire it is the duty of the secretary of state to send, a certain number of days before election, the required number of ballots to every town and precinct in the State. The number is calculated by the secretary of state on the basis of the number of registered voters in each town.

On that basis the secretary of state sent in a sealed package 720 ballots to the town of Newton. The town clerk, Mrs. Hayford, testified she received that number of ballots, namely, 720, the legal number. Under the law of New Hampshire, when the voting is over, it is the duty of the town clerk and the election board to return to the secretary of state, after holding the box for a period, all the ballots that had been sent to the town—the voted ballots, the spoiled ballots, the unused ballots, all of them. Seven hundred and twenty were received at Newton, but when the secretary of state got them back there were only 686. There is one point. There is that difference in the first instance of 34 ballots—34 were missing.

Where were they? I cannot say. Neither can anybody in this case. That there were 34 missing there is not the slightest doubt.

Let us go into that election board room a moment. The voter presents himself at the polls. A man named Kelly, one of the election officials, greets him. To Mr. Kelly the voter gives his name. Kelly has the list of registered voters before him. Mr. Kelly calls off the name, for instance, "Arthur Abbott." The moderator hands Mr. Abbott the ballot. Kelly puts a check mark opposite Abbott's name. Abbott proceeds to the polling booth and votes his ticket, comes out of the booth, and there sits Mrs. Hayford, the town clerk, with another check list. His name is called again as he comes out, and it is announced, "Arthur Abbott has voted", and she puts a check mark opposite his name.

The testimony shows that Kelly at the entrance of the polls and Mrs. Hayford at the other end of the line, as it were, compared notes throughout the day to see if their lists checked with one another.

I have the two check lists here. Here is one of them. I have never seen a more carefully done job than this. The check marks are put opposite each name firmly, with uniform pressure of the pencil and with uniformity in the size of the check mark. There are 458 check marks on this check list, kept by Kelly, opposite the names of the people who voted. You will notice on this check list there are 19 checks in red ink or red pencil.

Those votes are not in this case at all, being those of absent voters, to whom a ballot had been mailed and who sent in their ballots. But under the law of New Hampshire absentee voters may vote only for Presidential electors and not for Congress or for any other local officer. So those 19 are out of this.

Subtracting the red-checked absentee voters, you will find 458 names checked on that check list. Just look that over and see if you ever saw a better job.

Let us take Mrs. Hayford's check list at the other end of the line. She checked at the left of the name. She also checked the absent voters. There were 458 names checked. Look this over. It is a most amazingly, carefully done thing. Look at the names of the people registered in that town, a typical old-fashioned New England community where everybody knows everybody else.

Can anyone say with any chance of being taken seriously that the 11 people on that election board made 34 identical mistakes? Can anybody contend that Kelly at one end of the line and Mrs. Hayford at the other end of the line made 34 identical mistakes and put on that list 34 people who did not vote? Why, it is impossible. The chances of such a thing happening are beyond all computation.

When the polls were closed the evidence shows that the first thing the board did was to compare those two check lists and that it reached the conclusion by the check lists that 458 people voted. The next thing they did was to take the ballots out of the box. They piled them in piles of 25 without unfolding the ballots, just to see how many ballots were in the box. They counted them, all 11 people being present.

On their first count they made it 460. They looked at the check lists and said, "There is something wrong. It is 2 out of the way." So one of the persons present, in the presence of all the others, started to count them all over again and he found an error of 2. The number of ballots was 458, conforming exactly with the two check lists.

Then they proceeded in accordance with law to open the ballots and count them for the several candidates. I have here the tally sheet kept just as neatly and carefully as an old New England conscience would see to it. I hold it up before you. Up here are the straight Republican ballots which were counted. They counted the straight ballots first, both Republican and Democrat. That is the custom I think in many election boards where we use paper ballots. Two hundred and thirty-five straight Republican ballots were taken out of that box. Over here, straight Democratic ballots—72. Of course, Jenks got 235 there and Roy got 72 over here, because they were all straight ballots.

Now we get down to the splits. Jenks received 61 votes on split ballots. His total, therefore, is 235 plus 61, which is 296. Roy had 72 straight ballots and received 28 split ballots, a total of 100.

Mr. THOM. Three hundred and ninety-six? Where are the rest of them? The gentleman has stated there were 458.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes. The others did not vote for these candidates, but voted for other candidates. The gentleman has asked me where the rest of the votes are. Of course, there were other candidates for Congress. The remainder voted for them or for no candidate.

Mr. THOM. Does the tally sheet show the votes for the independent candidates?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does. It shows the whole thing. The gentleman can look at the tally sheet. The tally sheet gives the marking of the votes for Congress.

Mr. THOM. Yes, I know; but does not the tally sheet show the votes cast for those two independent candidates?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It does; if I can find it.

Mr. THOM. Perhaps I can find it, and the gentleman can go along with his statement.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; here is the tally sheet.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LAMNECK. Was any evidence presented to show that any of the ladies and gentlemen checked on this check list did not vote although they were shown as voting?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. Here is the part of this case which I do not approach with a great deal of pleasure. You will admit that this whole thing rests on how many people voted in Newton. Was it 458, as these check lists, the testimony of the inspectors, and the tally sheet all confirm, or was it 424, which is the number counted out of that Newton ballot box by the Secretary of State? That is the whole thing.

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In just a moment. I want to answer the question which has just been asked.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD], and I, wanted to find out the absolute truth about this thing, regardless of the unanimous decision of the Ballot Law Commission in New Hampshire, and moved and urged that the committee either with its own members or by accredited representatives, proceed to the town of Newton. All we would have to do would be to call on 458 people, whose names we have. We could call on them and ask the simple question, "Did you vote?" Not "How did you vote?" but "Did you vote?" Then we would know, would we not?

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. KERR. Did not the contestee in this case, Mr. Jenks, have an opportunity when the evidence was taken, to call all of these people and ask them why they did not vote?

Mr. WADSWORTH. The chairman of the committee persists in contending that the burden is on Jenks. It is not. The burden is on Roy. If Roy doubted that 458 people voted in Newton, as found by the commission, why did he not go up there and disprove it?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. As I understand the argument of the gentleman, and I have a lot of faith in it, we are short 34 ballots?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. In order to unseat this man are we not called upon to assume that these 34 ballots were cast for the other man?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Is not that the case?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Without these 34 ballots, Jenks is not elected.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. That is what I say, in order to unseat him we must assume that the 34 missing ballots were cast for the other man.

Mr. WADSWORTH. No. Let me put it this way. The ballot law commission decided that 458 people voted in Newton. This having been decided, the only evidence as to who got those 34 votes is the tally sheet, and there you are. We have the names of every voter and we have the tally sheet, conforming exactly with the total number of names of voters.

As contributory evidence, let me remind you of this. Thirty-four ballots were missing from that box somehow or other. Roy did not lose a vote. He had 100 on the recount, as he had in the Newton election returns. Jenks lost 34, and every other Republican candidate on the ticket lost 34, 33, or 32.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. NICHOLS. Can the gentleman from memory remind me of the place in the hearings where the evidence appeared that votes were missing for candidates other than candidates for Congress? The evidence is probably in there, but can the gentleman call it to my attention?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I cannot call the page, but such evidence was given.

Mr. NICHOLS. I just do not recall the evidence.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. With how many votes was Jenks credited by the ballot law commission? Two hundred and ninety-six votes for him are shown on the tally sheet.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HEALEY. How many votes did the ballot law commission credit him with having received?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In its final decision?

Mr. HEALEY. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Two hundred and ninety-six.

Mr. HEALEY. But previous to that time?

Mr. WADSWORTH. In the previous decision, 34 less than that; that is, before the discrepancy in Newton was discovered.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The gentleman has stated there were 11 persons who were conducting and supervising the election. Has their testimony appeared in the record?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Their testimony was taken by the ballot law commission in its final examination of the Newton situation and every one of them testified just as I have told the story.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Democrats and Republicans.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Democrats and Republicans, unanimously, and the presiding officer, the moderator, was a Democrat. They all insist that 458 people voted and they knew every one of them and checked their names.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Will the gentleman trace now at this point what happened to the ballots from the time they were sealed and left the town clerk's office until they went from the town clerk's office to the office of the secretary of state, because that is an important link.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield before he begins tracing that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I cannot answer two questions at once.

Mr. WILCOX. This is in that same connection. Did I understand the gentleman to say that those conducting the election piled the ballots up in piles and found that the exact number was in the ballot box that was reported on the tally sheet?

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is true.

Mr. WILCOX. And the 34 ballots disappeared after that?

Mr. WADSWORTH. After that.

Now, after the votes were all counted, checked, and double checked, and the tally sheets kept and the returns telephoned or telegraphed to Concord, as is the custom—"Newton votes so and so"—the ballots were put back into the box and the box was sealed, and the seal was signed by five of the election officers. Then under the law it was put in the custody of the town clerk, Mrs. Hayford. She took it to her house. It must be held there under the New Hampshire law for a given period of time, in order to give candidates an opportunity to get a recount. A recount was demanded, the secretary of state sent to Newton and to all the other towns and precincts for all the boxes and the Newton box arrived with the rest.

Mr. CRAVENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not just now.

The box was opened along with many other boxes. What degree of confusion existed there, it is very, very difficult to decide. There was great excitement about this case, tremendous excitement. The room was filled with people, the testimony indicates that the counters employed by the secretary of state sat around a horseshoe table and inside the horseshoe, as it were, spectators were present. I am not sure there was actual disorder. One man was requested to leave for some reason or other; perhaps, he threatened to make a row. The ballots were all piled on that table and the whole 103,000 were counted. It was not noticed in that recount, which was the first one, that 34 ballots were missing from Newton. No one knows where they are today, but that they were actually cast no sensible man can deny when you look at these two check sheets and the tally sheet; and in view, also, of the fact that while the secretary of state sent 720 ballots to Newton, only 686 were returned; 34 missing. The ballot law commission in its final decision, unanimously reached, said 34 ballots were missing, and that they belonged to Jenks in accordance with the tally sheet record. That is the whole thing.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I would call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the evidence from the record discloses that when the ballots in question left the polling place and went to the town clerk's home the ballots remained in her home for a period of 12 days; that the town clerk was a widow who had one boarder living at her home; that there was plenty of opportunity for individuals to come and go in that house; and the testimony shows that she did leave the place alone at various times, and these ballots were in a pasteboard box in a small cupboard or room there that was accessible to anyone that may have come into that particular place. It would have been a simple matter for unscrupulous individuals to have tampered with the ballots while in her possession. In the election cases I have had as a lawyer the trouble usually has centered around the town clerk's office, because of the lack of proper facilities to adequately protect them. Under the proof in this record, I submit the tally sheets are better evidence than the ballots.

I further submit that the case of Haley v. Reidelberger, which was decided by the Supreme Court of Illinois, and cited by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR], should be read in full by every Member, and you will find that our courts have laid down the rule that to entitle the ballots to overcome the returns he must show that they have been so kept that there was no reasonable opportunity to tamper with them, otherwise their effect as evidence is destroyed (Struberger v. Ownly, 290 Ill. 380; Haley v. Reidelberger, 340–158).

I hope that if the resolution is recommitted that the committee will carefully examine this point from the standpoint of evidence surrounding the ballots in the town clerk's home during the 12 days they were in her home.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, my friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has made a very ingenious argument. I have the highest regard for the Senator's ability and for his integrity and for his ability to make an appealing statement.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Not at this time, please.

The gentleman states that it is almost physically impossible or humanly impossible for anyone to doubt that these 34 votes were cast. He bases his argument upon the tally sheets. The evidence shows beyond any shawod of a doubt that over three-fourths of the returns from each voting precinct in that congressional district were in error to some degree. I want to know, if these votes were cast, where in the world are they now, and name some one or call any one of those election judges by name who said that he or she ever saw a single one of them.

Now, here is what the evidence shows and I challenge anyone on this side or anyone on that side to disprove it. Those election judges said that every vote that was cast in that election was placed in that box and, furthermore, they said that they placed a seal about 4 by 10 inches on that box. Where? Over the cord that tied the box. What else did they say? "Each one of us signed our name on that seal", and what further evidence do we have? Each one of them further testified that when the votes were counted at the secretary's office, the seal had not been disturbed, and "our signatures were identically as we placed them on there and so was the seal in its identical spot." They further testified that it would be an almost physical impossibility to remove that seal because they put some extra type of glue on it. That is conclusive.

Let me show you the defect in my friend's argument. He says why did not the contestant go out to voters in that community of Newton and ask these 458 alleged voters how they voted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no. I said to ask them if they voted.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Then the gentleman invites every one of them to impeach his ballot and, of course, they would not do that. I will show you why he did not do it. It was the contestees' duty to do it. The ballot commission on two different occasions declared the contestant the winner, on two separate and distinct counts, and some 10 days after the ballot law commission had declared Mr. Roy the winner, somebody did some second guessing, did they not? Ten days after that it was the gentleman's side that then for the first time recollected that there was a discrepancy in the Newton box. Ten days later somebody did some second guessing, and if it was thought there was any irregularity at that time it appears to me that the reasonable and logical thing to have done would be for the contestee to have gone into Newton and made some investigation, and yet he did not do it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would the gentleman be willing that the committee do that now?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Why, I have no objection to that, if it is in any way practical, but the gentleman knows that that would not work.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It would be practical. We have the names of every one of those people.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. KITCHENS. Does the record show the names of the voters who cast their votes in that election in Newton?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. No.

Mr. KITCHENS. Then there is no way to tell how one voted at all?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. None whatever. It would be just inviting every man to impeach his own ballot when you went in there.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. With reference to the 34 missing ballots——

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. I do not like to say that they were missing. I do not think they were cast.

Mr. McCORMACK. The ballot law commission must imply the infallibility of those ballots in order to seat Mr. Jenks.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. They just said, "Here are 34 votes that no one has ever seen"; and, Mr. Speaker, let me say that the election machinery, from top to bottom, from the humblest precinct election machinery up to the highest, the majority of the personnel of that organization was predominantly Republican, and now they come in and say that 34 votes were cast, and no living human has testified to that directly, no living human has seen one of those votes, much less 34 of them; and now at this late date they come in and say, even though no one has ever seen them, all 34 of them were Republican votes. Mr. Speaker, that taxes my credulity.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman please tell me this: Is it so, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] says, that the election officials checked those ballots first and found there were 460, and then rechecked them and found 458 when they put them in the box?

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. Oh, I do not mean that there was anything dishonest about the matter and nobody has ever alleged dishonesty. Human beings make errors, and that is what happened in this case because the ballot box itself shows somebody made an error.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Is that the fact?

Mr. NICHOLS. That is in the evidence.

Mr. THOMAS of Texas. I may have misunderstood the gentleman's question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 18 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON].

ROY V. JENKS ELECTION CONTEST CASE FOR MEMBER OF CONGRESS FROM FIRST DISTRICT OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, the election contest case now before the House for its decision is the result of a petition filed by Alphonse Roy, Democrat, to set aside a duly authenticated certificate of election awarded, in conformity with law by the Governor of the State of New Hampshire, to Arthur B. Jenks, Republican, as Representative of the First Congressional District of New Hampshire.

Prior to the issuance of such election certificate the result of the election, which had been held on November 3 last in the first congressional district had been questioned. In accordance with the procedure provided by the laws of the State of New Hampshire the result of the election was finally determined by the State ballot commission after recounting the ballots and giving full consideration to the respective claims of the contestants through their legal representatives.

STATE BALLOT COMMITTEE DECIDES IN FAVOR OF JENKS

The decision of the State ballot commission, the highest tribunal in the State of New Hampshire for this purpose, and therefore the court of last resort in said State, awarded the election to Arthur B. Jenks, he having received a majority of the votes cast at said election, and declared him entitled to represent the First Congressional District of New Hampshire in the House of Representatives.

In accordance with this finding by the State ballot commission, and in compliance with the law of the State, the Governor of New Hampshire issued in due form to Arthur B. Jenks a certificate of election. Upon the basis of this duly authorized and authenticated certificate the House of Representatives accepted Mr. Jenks as a Member of this body and he has served with honor and distinction throughout the present session until this time.

HOUSE ELECTION COMMITTEE SETS ASIDE DECISION OF STATE BALLOT COMMISSION

The question of his continued membership is now before this House for decision. The Committee on Elections No. 3, has rendered a report that sets aside the orderly procedure that was followed in the State of New Hampshire to determine the person entitled to represent the first congressional district in this House and recommends that the seat now held in this House by Arthur B. Jenks be taken from him and given to Alphonse Roy.

QUESTION INVOLVES RIGHT OF PEOPLE TO HAVE REPRESENTATIVES OF THEIR OWN CHOOSING

The question that is raised by the committee action extends beyond the mere personal rights or privileges of the two individuals concerned in this contest and becomes important and far reaching because it directly involves the right of all the people of the First Congressional District of New Hampshire to have the person of their own choosing to represent them in the House of Representatives. This is a fundamental right of the people of every congressional district. In this case the choice of the people has been ascertained and determined, after full and fair hearing in the manner provided by the laws of New Hampshire, by the duly authorized body for that purpose in the State of New Hampshire.

A full and fair consideration of the evidence produced before the State ballot commission and the Elections Committee of this House, does not reveal any reason, either in fact or law, that justifies the setting aside of the findings of the highest election tribunal in the State of New Hampshire awarding the seat in Congress, now under contest, to Mr. Jenks. There is every reason, however, to justify the findings and entitle them to be given full faith and credit by this House, and thereby establish the right of Mr. Jenks to continue to occupy the seat now held by him.

NO PARTISAN CONSIDERATION SHOULD BE PERMITTED TO DICTATE THE DECISION

In presenting my views and conclusions as a member of the committee that has had this contest under consideration, I realize that I am addressing a House that is overwhelmingly Democratic. There are only 88 Republicans in the House out of a total membership of 435. And, after making further allowance for the Progressives and Farmer-Laborites who hold membership in the House, the Democratic Party has at the present time 330 Members. Therefore, it can be readily seen that if this question is decided upon a partisan basis, Mr. Roy, the Democratic candidate, will be seated, and it is folly for me to take the time of the House in presenting my thoughts and the judgment I have reached that is contrary to the views of the Democratic majority of the committee, and whose views, if adopted, will deny to Mr. Jenks the right to sit as a Member of this House.

It is my intention, notwithstanding the hopelessness of the case if it is to be decided upon a partisan basis, to present my thoughts to you in the hope that the spirit of fair play and impartiality that has characterized both Democratic and Republican Houses of Congress in the past when considering election contests will prevail today. If such is the case, then all thought of partisanship will be displaced and a judicial attitude commensurate with the dignity of this House will prevail. Not only the dignity of the House, but also the overwhelming strength of a vast Democratic majority might properly and reasonably dictate such a course as the proper attitude of a political party numerically strong to an opponent numerically weak.

IN PAST JUDICIAL ATTITUDE HAS PREVAILED

An examination of the records of contested-election cases in this House shows that for more than a quarter of a century, with a few exceptions, very few in fact, the action of this House in deciding these cases has been upon a judicial rather than a partisan basis.

The following table of cases from the Sixtieth to the Seventy-fourth Congresses, inclusive—1907–37—illustrates graphically their nonpartisan disposition. Those upon which action was taken unanimously are indicated thus: (U).

It will be seen that during a period of 30 years covering 15 Congresses, 77 contested-election cases were brought, 2 were withdrawn, 58 were decided by the House unanimously, 3 were undecided.

Only eight cases could be said to have been decided on partisan grounds.

Of the 58 cases decided unanimously, 17 Democrats and 1 Progressive were sustained in a Republican House, 23 Republicans were sustained in a Democratic House, 8 Republicans in a Republican House, and 7 Democrats in a Democratic House.

These facts show pretty conclusively that in the consideration of contested-election cases in more recent years they have been decided judicially. There is less ground, if any, in the present House with its overwhelming Democratic majority, for partisan action.

During my examination into the precedents established in election-contest cases I have observed the attitude that has characterized the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN], chairman of one of the election committees of this House, in his conduct of these election-contest cases when referred to his committee. At all times he has assumed a judicial, rather than a partisan, attitude. I have such confidence in him and the honesty of his judgment I would be willing if I were a contestant or contestee, to abide by his personal judgment. I, as a Republican, pay that tribute to a Democrat. I am certain if this case had been referred to his committee Mr. Jenks would be seated.

It is because of this record of the past that shows such few instances of partisan action that I assume to present the views that seem to me would justify this Democratic House in seating Mr. Jenks.

I am confident that if you consider all the facts as well as the law applicable to this case and no feeling of partisanship is permitted to influence or control your judgment, that you will find abundant reasons to justify you in refusing to follow the report of the committee that would deny to Mr. Jenks the seat in this Congress to which he was elected and entitled to under all the rules of the game.

COMMITTEE ACTION

I am fully aware of the difficulty that is presented to anyone who attempts to have the membership of the majority party take any action contrary to the recommendation of a committee. This custom in the House is based upon the theory that the committee has had a greater opportunity to study the question that constitutes the subject matter of the report. This, however, applies more particularly to subjects of legislation than to contested-election cases, as will be seen by a reference to the many instances in which the House has disregarded election-case recommendations by a committee and decided the particular case upon a basis that seemed fair and honorable to the House. It is with this thought in mind that I desire to lay before the House membership facts and circumstances that justify the rejection of the committee report in order that justice may be done to the gentleman who is now the sitting Member from the First Congressional District of New Hampshire.

PRINCIPAL ISSUE

There are two issues to be decided in this case. One relates to the improper marking of certain ballots, sufficient in number to change the result of this election, and the other relating to the status to be accorded to 34 missing ballots, likewise sufficient to change the result of the election. The latter is probably the principal issue in this case, because it has received more attention than the first which I have just mentioned. For the reason that it has received more attention than the first, I will direct my immediate attention to it.

The State Ballot Commission of New Hampshire confonted with this issue, namely, whether 34 ballots were missing from the total cast in the town of Newton, and, if so, then for whom should they be counted, after consideration of all the facts unanimously determined that the 34 ballots had been cast and were then missing from the total number of ballots cast in the town of Newton. The ballot commission further unanimously determined from the tally sheet containing the result of the election in Newton that the 34 ballots had been cast for Mr. Jenks. Upon this finding the State ballot commission determined unanimously that Mr. Jenks had received a majority of all the votes cast in the election and was the duly elected Representative of the First Congressional District of New Hampshire. Thereupon the Governor and his council issued a certificate of election to the House of Representatives. Mr. Jenks was permitted to take his seat as a Member of the Seventy-fifth Congress and has served as such since the convening of Congress on January 5 last.

It is interesting to note that the State ballot commission, the final tribunal in the State of New Hampshire and which determined the contest in favor of Mr. Jenks, is a nonpartisan commission. It is composed of one Democrat, one Republican, and the attorney general of the State.

The contestant, Mr. Roy, took exception to the ruling of the State ballot commission and filed a notice of contest in this House. The majority of Elections Committee No. 3 of the House has upheld his protest and decided in his favor. The recommendation of the committee being that Mr. Jenks be unseated and that Mr. Roy be granted the same. The decision consequently sets aside the determination heretofore made by the State Ballot Commission of New Hampshire.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLVERTON. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. The gentleman from New Jersey is an eminent lawyer, one of the best in this House. Assuming that a recount by personal contact with the Newton voters is made, which the gentleman contends for, would support the theory that 34 additional votes were actually cast, I would like the gentleman to discuss, if he has time, this question from a legal standpoint, because as I understand the cases from Illinois and Arkansas which were cited in the majority report, even though those facts would be present, they would still contend that the controlling factor would be the ballot box itself; while, on the other hand, the gentleman takes a different legal view.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I have the gentleman's question. The cases to which the gentleman has referred and to which the majority report refers do not hold what the gentleman thinks they hold. In other words, those cases were predicated upon the finding that there had been no tampering with the ballots. Now, as there is proof in this case that the ballots had been tampered with, of course the principle of law referred to in those cases does not apply to this case. If there has been tampering with the container and 34 of the votes have been taken out of the container, then it is not a true picture of the actual votes cast. The cases are abundant that sustain the principle with the qualification I have mentioned. Under the circumstances the official tally sheets and the check list kept by the local election officers constitute proper evidence to be considered in determining the number of persons who voted.

BASIS OF COMMITTEE DECISION

The majority of the Election Committee has based its decision on the fact that as 34 ballots were not in existence at the time of the recount the State ballot commission had no right to determine that they had ever been in existence. They held their absence at the recount was evidence they had never existed, and therefore could not be counted for Jenks, even though the local tally sheet at Newton, kept in accordance with the requirement of law, showed that the 34 ballots had been voted in favor of Mr. Jenks.

MINORITY VIEWPOINT

The Republican minority members of the Election Committee claim, that as the undisputed proof before the committee shows that these 34 ballots were actually voted and actually counted by the local board of elections in Newton, that the State ballot commission and this House, as judge of the election of its own Members, is justified in counting these 34 ballots for Mr. Jenks, and, in fact, is in duty bound to do so. To do otherwise is to disfranchise the 34 voters whose ballots, through no fault of their own, have been lost, strayed, or stolen, and to deny to the citizens of the First Congressional District of New Hampshire the right to have the Representative of their own choosing.

FACTS SUSTAIN MINORITY VIEWPOINT

It will be readily seen that the essential fact to be established that justice may prevail for either of these contending parties, is first and foremost, whether the 34 votes were actually cast.

The evidence in this respect produced before the committee does not admit of contradiction. It has not been disputed by contestant, Mr. Roy, nor has it been in any sense denied, weakened, or any doubt cast upon it. It can be taken as an established fact in this case that the 34 ballots were actually cast in the election.

The fact that these 34 ballots were cast in the election is established by the uncontradicted testimony of all the nine election officials who participated in conducting the election at Newton. Some of them were Democrats and some were Republicans. No one was produced by contestant, Mr. Roy, to dispute, contradict, or in any manner whatsoever change the facts established by their testimony. In all my practice at the bar for over 30 years I have never seen any fact more completely and satisfactorily established than the essential fact in this case, namely, that the 34 ballots afterward missing had been cast in the election for Mr. Jenks.

These nine election officials, some Democrats and some Republicans, unanimously under oath swore that the ballots had been cast and were counted by them for Mr. Jenks as appeared by two separate tally sheets, one of which had been filed with the State librarian, as required by law, immediately after the election and before any question of missing ballots had been raised or any contest contemplated. This evidence, as I have previously stated, was never contradicted or even disputed.

Furthermore, the election officials in this little town of Newton were of a type that commanded the respect and confidence of the citizens of Newton. One of these election officials had served as such for 40 years. Another for 17 years. The moderator, or judge of election, who had charge of its proper conduct was a Democrat. His reputation for decency, honesty, and integrity was such that he had been elected to this office for many years although it was a Republican community. Something of his standing can be understood when it is realized that at the very election, the result of which is now in dispute, he was a Democratic candidate for member of the general court. Certainly self-interest if no higher motive was present to see that the election was conducted fairly and honestly. Three of the other election officers were selectmen in the town of Newton, having been elected to that office by the citizens of Newton, and because of such became election officials as well for Newton. The town clerk, a kindly widow, who as such town clerk kept the tally or tabulation of votes as designated to do by the law of New Hampshire. She likewise was an elected official and had served for something like 14 years. She has the confidence and respect of her fellow citizens like no other in the whole town. No act of hers has ever been questioned nor her integrity in the performing of her public duties a subject of suspicion. The remaining election officials consisted of four inspectors or clerks, two Democrats and two Republicans, each of whom were selected by the voters of their respective parties in the manner provided by the law of New Hampshire.

Thus, it can be seen that this board of nine election officials charged with the proper conduct of the election were far and above the average and of a kind that would naturally instill confidence and belief in their honesty, integrity, and ability. Nothing can more surely establish the uprightness and honesty of the election results tabulated by this board of election and publicly announced on election night immediately after the completion of their duties, and filed with the State officials as required by law by the first mail leaving Newton following the close of the election.

Is it any wonder that the State ballot commission was willing to accept the tabulation of results made and filed by this board in accordance with the provisions of the law of New Hampshire? What I cannot understand is the unwillingness of the majority members of the House Election Committee to deny the request of Mr. Jenks that these election officials be brought to Washington for examination to again, if necessary, establish the essential facts in this case first hand. Nor would the majority members do so upon motion of the minority members. Failing in this, the minority sought to have the moderator, a Democrat, and the town clerk, a Republican, subpenaed to come to Washington and again swear to the facts. This likewise was voted down by the majority members. It was also proposed that the committee or designated members of the committee go to Newton and take testimony. This was denied, as was also the motion of the minority that the testimony be taken in Newton of the citizens whose names appeared on the voting list as having voted in order that it might be ascertained beyond any doubt, with first-hand testimony, as to whether the 34 who were alleged to vote had, in fact, voted. The testimony could have been taken in 2 or 3 hours of time once the committee or its designated agent went to Newton. This one act would have settled beyond any quibbling the right and justice in this case. Mr. Jenks sought through his legal representative to have the committee take such action, and the minority members likewise sought to have the committee do so, but, in each instance, the majority members of the committee voted against it. This action of the committee cannot, in my opinion, be justified upon any fair or impartial basis. It indicated clearly an intention to decide this case without regard to the evidence that was procurable and that would establish beyond any possibility the truth of the testimony given by the election officers and thereby the right and justice of Mr. Jenks' claim to the seat in Congress he is now occupying.

BRIEF STATEMENT OF ESSENTIAL FACTS—(1) 720 BALLOTS SENT TO NEWTON

Under the law of New Hampshire the secretary of state was required to send 720 ballots for the election in the town of Newton. He testified that he had caused the same to be done. The printer testified that such number had been printed, sealed, endorsed, and sent to the town clerk. The latter and other election officials testified to having received the package of 720 ballots.

(2) MANNER OF CONDUCTING ELECTION

Prior to election day a registry of persons entitled to vote in Newton had been prepared by the proper officials and given the publicity required by law. It showed 579 persons entitled to vote.

On election morning when the polls opened this official list of registered voters was in the pelling booth in the custody of the town clerk as required by law. A duplicate copy was in the possession of another election official of opposite political faith to the town clerk.

After ascertaining that the correct number of ballots were on hand together with the registry of persons entitled to vote the polls were declared open by the moderator, or judge of election, a Democrat who had been elected to that important office for a considerable number of years immediately prior to this election. There were nine different election officials having charge of conducting the election in Newton. Some were Republicans and some Democrats. Five of them were duly elected town officials and the remaining four were selected by the Republican and Democratic Parties in the manner provided by law. One of these officials, as I have already said, had acted as an election official for 40 years, another 17 years, another 14 years, and practically all of them a substantial number of years.

When a prospective voter appeared his or her name was publicly announced, whereupon the clerk would place a check mark opposite the name on the registry list indicating that the voter had appeared in person to vote. A ballot was then given to the voter by another of the election officials. The voter would then enter the booth to mark the ballot. After having done so the name of the voter was again announced, as the ballot was delivered to the moderator to be placed in the election box, and this time the name would be checked on the registry held in the custody of the election officer of the opposite political party to the one who held the duplicate. Thus a double record was kept of every voter who appeared to vote. The first check was made when the voter was handed a ballot and a second check when the ballot was placed in the election box. One check kept by a Republican and the other by a Democrat.

(3) 458 VOTERS CAST THEIR BALLOTS IN PERSON IN NEWTON ON ELECTION DAY

After the close of the polls on election night, and before the ballot box was opened, examination of the check lists was made to ascertain the number of persons who had voted. Both check lists were examined and it was found that they both agreed as to the number and the identity of the persons who had voted. Both lists showed that 458 persons have voted in person—a public announcement of this fact was then made. It was further testified by the officers who did the checking of the lists that, with only a few exceptions, all the persons who voted were actually and personally known to them.

After the number of persons voting had been ascertained the moderator then opened the ballot box in the presence of the election officials and the citizens who were present. The ballots were taken out and placed on the table in front of the election officials. Before the ballots were opened a count of them was made in which all the election officials participated. The count showed 458 voters who had appeared and cast their ballots.

(4) MANNER IN WHICH BALLOTS WERE EXAMINED AND TABULATED

When the number of voters and the number of ballots were found to agree, the moderator then proceeded to call off each ballot in order that the tally clerks might record the number of votes received by each candidate. As a check upon this important feature of the election count, an election official of the opposite political party to the moderator observed each ballot as it was announced by the moderator. As a further check it was passed to the other election officials in order that they might observe that it had been correctly announced.

The tabulation of the announcements made by the moderator was made by two tally clerks, one Republican and one Democrat. And, to insure accuracy and avoid discrepancies or disputes, both of these tally clerks were watched in their respective markings by another election official of the opposite political party.

It is important to note that in these essential features of this case and in all others there has never been any difference in the testimony of these nine election officials who conducted the election in Newton. They have all agreed, Democrats and Republicans, and so testified under oath, that 458 persons voted in person on election day and that the tabulation of the tally clerks correctly set forth the number of ballots cast for each candidate. In fact, the Democratic moderator was the first one who called attention to the fact that the vote as tallied by the State ballot commission was wrong because it was 34 votes short in the total number that had been cast in Newton.

DISPOSITION OF BALLOTS AND TALLY SHEET BY ELECTION OFFICIALS

In accordance with the requirements of the election law, upon completion of the tabulation all the votes that had been cast in the election, 458 in number, were deposited in a container. There was also placed in the same container all of the unused ballots, as required by law, making 720, the number originally received from the State printer through the secretary of state. This box was then wrapped, sealed, and signed by the election officers and delivered into the custody of the town clerk, as required by law.

The tally sheet showing the result of the election and the number of votes cast for each candidate was then properly sealed in an envelope and mailed immediately by the town clerk to the State librarian, as required by law. In a similar manner the election returns from the 129 towns and wards in the First Congressional District were filed. A tabulation of these returns showed that Roy received 51,370 votes and Jenks 51,920 votes.

RECOUNT OF VOTES BY SECRETARY OF STATE

Upon announcement of this result, Roy applied for a recount of the ballots under the direction of the secretary of state, as provided for in the election laws of the State of New Hampshire.

This recount by the secretary of state was conducted on November 24, 1936. In the presence of the attorneys for the respective parties the secretary of state passed judgment upon the ballots. The tabulation of votes showed that Roy had received 51,679 votes and Jenks a similar number, 51,679 votes. The secretary of state thereupon declared that there was a tie vote.

APPEAL TO STATE BALLOT COMMISSION

Both Roy and Jenks appealed to the State ballot commission. This commission consists of one Republican and one Democrat and the attorney general of the State. It is the final tribunal under the laws of New Hampshire for the settlement of election contests.

In the conduct of this appeal both of the contesting parties assumed the count of ballots by the secretary of state was correct with the exception of 108 ballots protested by the parties at the recount conducted by the secretary of state. The action of the State ballot commission therefore was confined to deciding to whom the 108 protested ballots should be credited. After making decision as to these ballots, a tabulation of the votes was made that showed Roy to have received 51,695 votes and Jenks 51,678.

DISCOVERY THAT 34 BALLOTS WERE MISSING FROM THE COUNT

Shortly after the result of the recount had been announced and published in the newspapers of the State, the moderator of the election at Newton, and who, as before stated, was a Democrat, noticed a discrepancy in the total number of votes announced by the State ballot commission as having been cast in Newton when compared with the number shown on the official check list and tally sheet to have been voted at the election. The State ballot commission tabulation showed 34 less votes than had been actually cast in the election at Newton.

This information was immediately brought to the attention of Mr. Jenks. He thereupon appealed to the State ballot commission to reopen the case and permit proof to be submitted that the 34 missing ballots had in fact been cast for him and that as a result he was entitled to be declared the duly elected Representative from the First Congressional District.

STATE BALLOT COMMISSION ORDERED CASE REOPENED—PROOF SUBMITTED SHOWING 34 BALLOTS MISSING

The State ballot commission immediately ordered the case reopened and directed that a recount be made of all the ballots then in existence. Proof was then submitted to the State ballot commission to establish the fact that 458 votes had been cast in the election of the town of Newton. That only 424 were in existence at the time of the recount, and, that the 34 missing ballots had been cast and voted for Mr. Jenks.

The State ballot commission after hearing the testimony of the secretary of state, deputy secretary of state, State printer, State librarian, the nine election officials of the town of Newton, including the moderator, selectmen, town clerk, and four inspectors or clerks, together with many other witnesses, and after examining the official check lists and tally sheets determined upon this uncontradicted testimony that 34 ballots were wrongfully removed by someone unknown to the commission, from the ballots cast in the town of Newton, between the time they had been cast and the time the ballots were recounted by the secretary of state and that the 34 had been cast for Mr. Jenks and should be counted for him.

The tabulation of the result of this recount by the State ballot commission showed that 51,649 votes were cast for Jenks and 51,639 votes were cast for Roy. The ballot law commissioners therefore declared:

That Arthur B. Jenks, having received the largest number of votes for Representative in Congress from the First New Hampshire District, be, and hereby is declared to be duly elected to that office and entitled to a certificate of election.

CONTESTANT HAS NOT PRESENTED ANY FACTS TO CONTRADICT THE FINDING THAT THE 34 MISSING BALLOTS WERE FOR JENKS

The issue presented in this case therefore resolves itself into a question of how many persons voted in Newton on the election day and for whom did they vote.

The official check list and tally sheet show conclusively that 458 persons voted in person. This fact has never been contradicted by Roy, the contestant. No evidence was introduced by him to change or deny it in any manner whatsoever. Nor has contestant made or suggested, direct or indirect, any charge of fraud against any of the Newton officials. In other words it can be taken as an established fact that 458 persons voted and 458 ballots were in the box sent by the town clerk to the secretary of state.

When the ballots were counted by the secretary of state he found only 424. It is apparent therefore that 34 ballots became missing sometime between their shipment from Newton and the counting taken in the secretary of state's office.

Nine election officials at Newton testified that all of the ballots, 458 in number, were put in the box and sent to the secretary of state. The box containing the ballots was kept in a room by the secretary of state to which he had the key and also the custodian of the State capitol had a key. Whether this box was tampered with in this room no one knows. If the wrapper and seal had been preserved by the secretary of state as required by law it would have been a great help in determining the question whether the ballot box had been tampered with while in the custody of the secretary of state or before. The deputy secretary of state testified that he did not take any special notice or give any particular attention to the condition of the wrapper or seal before the package was opened. It further appeared that the wrapper and seal had not been preserved as required by law. It is most unfortunate that the secretary of state did not preserve these important pieces of evidence as he was required to do by law and particularly in view of the fact that he had been an opponent of Jenks in the Republican primary and had failed to get the nomination.

There was also another opportunity presented to tamper with these ballots which arose as the result of the careless manner in which the secretary of state's office force conducted the recount of the ballots. To facilitate the count a long table, horse shoe in shape, was provided. Around this table numerous employees and representatives of the respective parties were gathered. Hundreds of ballots were spread out over the long circular table as the recount of several towns would be underway at the same time. The room was crowded with spectators who were permitted to stand in close proximity to the ballots. It has been admitted that the taking of ballots from the table was possible. How, by whom, or in what manner the 34 ballots were taken is not known, but the fact remains they disappeared. The taking of these particular ballots was made all the more easy because the Newton ballots when laid on the table were divided into separate piles—the Republican ballots in one pile and the Democratic in another pile—thus facilitating and making easy the taking of Republican ballots. The fact remains that it was 34 straight Republican ballots that were taken. The loss of 34 votes is not only shown in the number of votes tabulated for Jenks by the local board at Newton but in the same manner all the other Republican candidates on the ticket suffered a loss.

It is regrettable that in conducting the recount of ballots in this close election that the secretary of state or his employees did not take greater care to preserve the ballots from tampering, loss, or other fraud. The careless manner in which this important duty was fulfilled—or, speaking more accurately, was not fulfilled—is astounding. The situation is all the more embarrassing for the secretary of state because he has been a candidate against Mr. Jenks. While I realize that Mr. Jenks nor anyone else has charged the secretary of state with personal responsibility, yet the fact remains that it was his duty under the law to preserve the ballots from tampering or loss, and in this he failed. Likewise it was his duty to preserve the wrapper and seal, and his duty in this important matter was not fulfilled.

MAJORITY REPORT ADOPTS A THEORY NOT BASED ON FACT OR LAW TO UNSEAT JENKS

The majority report, without regard to the sworn testimony of the 9 election officials, all of them being persons of high and unimpeachable reputation in the town of Newton, has discarded the fact that 458 duly qualified citizens of Newton cast their ballots and holds that only 424 voted. The action of the committee, therefore, has disfranchised 34 voters and enabled the committee thereby to declare Roy elected instead of Jenks.

The Democratic majority of the committee, to accomplish its purpose, has declared that as there were only 424 votes in existence at the time of the recount, therefore there never was more than 424. To hold this they have by inference charged every one of the nine election officials at Newton, including their own Democratic representatives on the election board, with false, untrue, and perjured testimony. Every one of them under oath had testified that 458 ballots had been cast and that all of these ballots had been placed in the box as sent from the election booth to the secretary of state's office. The character and standing of these nine election officials is, as I have already said, above reproach in their community. I am convinced that when it becomes known in the First Congressional District of New Hampshire that a Democratic elections committee in a Democratic Congress have by their act branded these estimable citizens of Newton as perjurers and conspirators, the resentment will be so strong that in the next election the voters of that district will rise as one to show their resentment and return Mr. Jenks to this House by a majority that will be outstanding and measured in thousands, and thereby vindicate not only Mr. Jenks but also the election officers who have been so unjustly accused. There is no justification for this overwhelming Democratic House to go to such a length to seat one more Democrat. One more on the Democratic side or one less will make no difference in the result of legislation. Nor will one more or less make any difference on the Republican side from this standpoint.

If the Democratic House today by its vote sustains the committee in the outrageous action that it is taking, disregarding the sworn facts in this case, casting aside all established precedents of this House, and the acknowledged law of the land, it will be stabbing the citizens of this congressional district in the back and rendering one of the most serious blows to Democratic strength and prestige in the State of New Hampshire that has ever been given. Remember that the First Congressional District of New Hampshire went overwhelmingly for President Roosevelt. The fact that Mr. Jenks, a Republican, was elected in that district, running far ahead of the Republican ticket, is an indication of the high regard in which he is held by Democrats and Republicans alike. Therefore, if this stabbing in the back is carried through today, you are striking Democrats as well as Republicans. The answer will be given in no uncertain manner. The people of America like fair play. To utilize the great Democratic strength of this House in such an unworthy cause is neither American in spirit nor worthy of the great principles for which the Democratic Party stands. This will, indeed, be a fateful day for the Democratic Party in New Hampshire if the recommendation of the Democratic majority is carried out and the seat taken from Mr. Jenks which he now occupies. And the result will not be confined to the next congressional election alone but will also find expression in just as pronounced a form in the senatorial election to be held at the same time. The resentment will be so great against the Democratic Party for having done this wrong that every candidate of that party will feel the effect and suffer as a result.

DEMOCRATIC MEMBERSHIP OF COMMITTEE INCREASED AFTER HEARINGS HAD BEEN CONDUCTED A WEEK AND ALMOST FINISHED

Notwithstanding the fact that the Elections Committee that conducted the hearings in this case for the House was overwhelmingly Democratic, the membership being five Democrats and three Republicans, there was added another Democrat, making the total of six Democrats. This action of "adding" to the committee is sought to be justified by the fact that there was a vacancy on the committee that had not been filled since Congress convened. No objection could or would have been made if the additional member had been appointed before the hearings started, but it was not done until after the hearings had progressed for a week and almost finished. Never in my experience as a lawyer have I heard of the membership of a court being increased after the hearings were almost over. The injustice of such a course is plain enough, but absolutely unexplainable, upon any fair basis, is the right of such an individual to sit in judgment of the case. But that is just what happened in this very case, and the appointment was made without the intention to do so ever being brought to the attention of the Republican minority members of the committee, so that an objection could be made on the floor of the House. Certainly, no fair-minded person would justify such a course of action.

DEMOCRATIC MAJORITY OF COMMITTEE PREVENTED TAKING FURTHER EVIDENCE OF NEWTON OFFICIALS AND VOTERS TO ESTABLISH TRUTH THAT 458 VOTED

In conclusion, permit me to again remind you that the real fundamental fact to be determined in this case relates to how many persons voted in Newton on election day. The 9 election officials swore that 458 persons had voted. The check lists showed the names of the 458 people who had voted. There were 458 ballots in the box. The 458 votes appeared on the tally sheets credited to the different candidates. Notwithstanding all the direct, clear, and positive testimony of the 9 election officials, the Democratic majority of the committee has ignored this fact entirely and said that as only 424 ballots afterward appeared on the recount, that this was conclusive evidence that only 424 had originally been in existence.

The folly of such a contention is striking. It is hard to realize that six Members of Congress, the Democratic members of the Election Committee, would be so naive as to believe that there could not have been nor was there any tampering with the ballots after they left Newton.

It would be just as ridiculous if a man left home with $50 in his pocket and a pickpocket stole it unknown to him for any of us to conclude that he never had the $50 when he left home; and if in addition to the testimony of the man, you have the corroboration of nine reputable people who saw him put the $50 in his pocket and leave home, you can then begin to realize how outstandingly ridiculous it is for the Democratic majority to take the position that because only 424 votes showed up at the recount therefore there never were 458 in existence.

It is fortunate the thief did not take all the ballots because in such a case the Democratic majority opinion if carried to the logical conclusion would have resulted in a finding that no one had voted at Newton on election day.

If the majority opinion was the law of the land there would be many strange situations to arise to make the law appear ridiculous. For instance, if the cashier of a bank or any other trusted employee was given the custody of $458 and at the end of the day was only able to return $424, I wonder if the majority would be willing to conclude that he only had $424 given to him in the beginning and that it would be therefore unfair and unjust to charge him for the whole amount of $458 originally given in his custody. The average person would readily understand there was a loss of $34. However, even though nine persons saw the transaction and swore to the fact it would evidently make no difference to the six Democratic members of the committee who have denied Mr. Jenks the benefit of the 34 votes originally given to him by the voters of the First Congressional District.

VOTERS OF FIRST CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT SHOULD NOT BE DISFRANCHISED

There is no right more highly cherished than the right to express our will at the polls. Nor is there any right in the exercise of which greater care should be observed to see that the individual has full and free opportunity to exercise it. The right of the 34 persons who have been disfranchised by the act of the Democratic majority of the Election Committee is just as precious to each of them as our own right. Furthermore, the importance and far-reaching effect our individual votes have in the affairs of our Nation and State is well illustrated by the fact that the counting of these 34 ballots, or the failure to do so, determines a congressional contest in which over 100,000 votes were cast. Any 34 votes or less anywhere in the district have the same effect. But it is more than 34 votes that will be affected. By not counting these ballots the effect of the nearly 52,000 ballots cast by voters for Mr. Jenks are set at naught. These 34 are therefore entitled to be counted not only because of the individual right of the 34 voters directly affected but also because of the effect it has in disfranchising and setting at naught the votes of the 51,649 who voted for Mr. Jenks.

OPPORTUNITY SHOULD HAVE BEEN GIVEN TO THE 458 VOTERS AT NEWTON TO PROTECT THEIR VOTES

Every member of the committee recognized that the real fundamental issue in this case is whether 458 persons voted, as sworn to by the nine election officials, or 424 as claimed by the Democratic majority of the committee. While the evidence of the nine election officers was neither contradicted nor denied, and the check lists and tally sheets corroborated the fact, yet the minority members were willing and urged that the committee or its representatives go to Newton and ascertain again by direct evidence whether in fact they had done so. No one could contend against the fairness and justice of this suggestion. It would have given every man and woman who voted at Newton an opportunity to protect their ballot. It would not have been necessary to ask any other question than "Did you vote?" Not "How did you vote?", for this was unnecessary in view of the fact that all the 458 were tabulated on the tally sheets. Thus there would have been no violation of the secrecy, to which every voter is entitled, as to how they voted. It would have been merely "Did you vote?" If there were 458 answers, "I did", then the question was settled by the corroboration of 458 witnesses in addition to that of the nine election officers. But, strange as it may seem, this motion made by the attorney for Mr. Jenks and also by the minority members of the committee was voted down by the Democratic members.

The motion will in all probability be made again in the House. It is so eminently fair that I feel it should be made again, in the hope that the membership of the House may take different action than that taken by the committee. In this connection it is also proper to note that the Republican minority members of the committee also sought to invite the election officials at Newton to come to Washington to give their testimony direct to the committee. This was also refused and voted down by the Democratic majority. It was then suggested that the moderator and town clerk, one a Democrat and the other a Republican, be requested to come to Washington to testify. This effort of the minority was likewise voted down by the Democratic majority.

CONCLUSION

It will be noticed that I have made no considerable reference as yet to the ballots improperly marked that were counted for Roy. My distinguished colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] has already made reference to the matter. Because of the insufficient time remaining I will make no further reference to them than to say that in no sense of the word do these ballots give any evidence of the intention of the voters to cast these ballots for Roy. They have failed to carry out either the word or spirit of the law that the intent of the voter shall be made plain in the manner required by the election law. These ballots are sufficient in number to change the result of this election. It is unfair and unjust that they should be so used. These improperly marked ballots should not be counted for either candidate.

In closing my remarks I do so with an appeal that partisanship be cast aside and that no other consideration shall enter into the decision of this case than a desire that truth and justice shall prevail. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. JENCKES].

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, as a Member of this House of Representatives bearing the name Jenckes, I desire to be heard. I am a Democrat. I shall always be a Democrat. I believe in the principles of the Democratic Party. I believe in the utterance of Thomas Jefferson, that great Democrat, who said:

No government has a legitimate right to do that which is not good for the governed.

We today are discussing the case of Alphonse Roy versus Arthur B. Jenks, from the First Congressional District of

New Hampshire. This is a contest between a Republican and a Democrat. Naturally, my sympathies would be with the Democrat. But, after carefully studying the majority and minority reports on this case, I find this House of Representatives is faced with a great responsibility—the responsibility of taking just and proper action, fitting and in keeping with the dignity of the House of Representatives of the United States. The evidence brought out in both the majority and minority reports is conflicting, and I, therefore, appeal to this House of Representatives to consider this election contest with great care and from the viewpoint of maintaining the honor and the dignity of this House of Representatives.

While Arthur B. Jenks is a Republican from the great State of New Hampshire, and VIRGINIA E. JENCKES is a Democrat from the great State of Indiana, we are both interested in defending the integrity of the name "Jenks." I am sure that Arthur B. Jenks does not want to be seated if he is not lawfully entitled to be seated, and I am just as sure that Mr. Alphonse Roy does not want to be seated unless he is lawfully entitled to be seated. Therefore, the responsibility rests upon this House of Representatives to get first-hand, authentic information, in order that we might proceed in a manner which will accord equal justice.

I therefore appeal to the Members of this House of Representatives to have a special committee appointed, empowered, and authorized to proceed to the First Congressional District of New Hampshire to take affidavits of witnesses and gather proper evidence, and then present these affidavits and evidence to this House of Representatives for final action.

I appeal to this House of Representatives to withhold action until this is done. My interest in this matter is actuated wholly by my desire as a woman and as a Member of this House of Representatives to see that justice is accorded Mr. Arthur B. Jenks, Republican, as well as Mr. Alphonse Roy, Democrat.

In this manner we of the majority party in this House of Representatives of the United States will prove to the people of the Nation that we are using our majority vote in a fair and just manner in accordance with the requirements of genuine statesmanship.

I thank you. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I was not a member of the committee considering this question and I knew nothing of the case until coming on the floor today. Immediately on coming here I made it my business to read both the majority and minority reports in this matter. After reading the majority report I was inclined to feel that Mr. Roy should be seated; however, after reading the minority report I became absolutely convinced that the gentleman from New Hampshire, Mr. Jenks, should be seated. I am satisfied that the debate, as presented this afternoon, should convince each and every Member of this House that Mr. Jenks is entitled to a seat in this body.

In the first place, it seems to me without question that 458 votes were cast in that little town of Newton. You will remember that the tally sheets, the registration sheets, the check-off sheets—two separate check-off sheets—showed 458 names of people who had voted on that day. When the ballots were counted they thought there were 460. So they recounted and found there were actually 458 who voted, showing conclusively, in my opinion, that there were 458 ballots on the table immediately after the polls were closed on that day when the ballots were counted.

Of that 458, the tally sheets and all the testimony agree, and the testimony is undisputed, there were 235 straight Republican votes. There being 235 straight Republican votes, Mr. Jenks received that many votes on the straight Republican ballots. Later on, when they had the recount, 34 of those straight Republican votes were found missing. That is borne out by the fact that all of the Republican candidates on the recount lost approximately 34 votes. Some of them lost 32, some 33, and some 34, and some 35, due to other mistakes, but all the Republicans lost 34, which says conclusively that the 34 votes that were missing were straight Republican votes.

I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Elections a question if I may have his attention. There are on the lists presented by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] 288 names that were checked off. Now, I have lived in a small community and I can imagine in that small community if there is an election contest the people sitting around the town of Newton, everybody being interested in it, and engaging in a lot of discussion. There were several of those people who were supposed to have voted. Four hundred and fifty-eight were supposed to have voted. I presume there was not an intelligent, interested citizen of that community who did not have a chance to check over the 458 names. It seems to me if 34 names were on that list as having voted who did not vote, some of those 34 would have made it known that were credited with having voted when, as a matter of fact, they had not voted. [Applause.]

I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Elections if a single man or woman on that list of 458 names has let him know or let anyone else know that they did not vote on that occasion.

Mr. CARTER. There was not one on the list who said they voted for Mr. Jenks either.

Mr. BOILEAU. The list showed there were 34 people who did not vote although they were credited with having voted on that list, and coming from a small community myself, I say some of those people would have made the fact known that they had not voted. This is preposterous and ridiculous.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. Jenks]. [Applause.]

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I take the floor very reluctantly this afternoon and against the advice of a number of my friends. But I would not feel that I was exercising my duty in this Congress to 103,000 voters in the First Congressional District of New Hampshire if I did not have a word to say in reference to this matter.

Another reason I am taking the floor this afternoon is because, under the majority decision of the committee, 34 legally registered Republican voters in the town of Newton went to the polls and voted, according to the testimony of the 9 duly accredited election officials, and if you accept this report and adopt the resolution you will be disenfranchising 34 honest people of my State.

Mr. Speaker, there is another reason why I am taking the floor today, and that is because the conclusions of the majority of this committee state to nine election officers in New Hampshire that "We do not believe your testimony under oath."

I would not be doing my duty as a representative of those people if I did not rise and say something in their behalf and in their defense. I do not have a silver tongue; I am not an orator; I cannot lift you up to the heights with eloquent oratory; but I can talk to you in good, plain New Hampshire language that I learned years ago.

The gentleman from Texas, a member of the committee, would have you believe that after the ballot-law commission had decided my opponent was elected there was some conniving to bring about this question in reference to the 34 ballots about which there has been so much discussion. Let me tell you the story.

When the ballot-law commission rendered the decision, I said, "I am satisfied with the decision of the Ballot Law Commission of New Hampshire. They are a regular body. They are the highest election tribunal in the State of New Hampshire." I got ready to go to Florida to spend the winter. Ten days after that decision was rendered I was called on the telephone one Sunday morning by a man whom I had never seen and did not know. He said to me, "Mr. Jenks, we have been reading in the newspapers down here about the difference in the votes that were counted by the secretary of state and the vote that was cast in this town." He said, "I wish you would look into it." So many reports and rumors had come to me that I was just tired of the whole thing, and I said, "I am not interested any further." He stated, "We feel very badly down here to have people think we cannot count votes any better than to miss 34 in this little town where we have such a small vote." He pleaded with me to take up the matter with the Governor.

That was Sunday. Monday morning I telephoned to the Governor of the State and said, "Governor, have you issued the certificate to my opponent?" I supposed he had done so. He said, "No. We are having a meeting this morning of the Governor and council." (In the interim the Governor had been absent from the State, attending a Governors' conference at St. Louis, Mo.) I told him some information had come to me which I would like to look into. He said, "If you will send me a telegram about it, I shall be very glad to read it to the council, and I think they would be willing to wait and give you an opportunity to come before them." Until 4 o'clock that afternoon they held up this matter. I got into my car and went right down to this little town of Newton. You have been told that the moderator there is such a respected Democrat that he was elected moderator of the town. I went to Newton, and he showed me all the figures of their election there and told me the story. I took those nine election officials right to Concord before the Governor and council, and they testified under oath what has been told you here this afternoon about the number of ballots which were cast there, how they were recorded, how they were checked off, how they were counted and recounted, and the whole story. I do not have time to review all that. There are many things I wish I could go over, but I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that there was no conniving in getting votes and getting another count. I have told you the incident as it happened.

The Governor and council decided the evidence was sufficient for me to go the next day before the ballot-law commission, which I did, and the commission said the evidence was sufficient for them to recall their order to the Governor and council to issue the certificate to my opponent.

One fact has not been brought out here about the security of these ballots. I do not believe the fact has been mentioned that these ballots were sent to Concord for the recount in the statehouse. They were put in a storeroom there and kept in the storeroom for 10 days. There were two keys to the storeroom—one held by the secretary of state and the other held by the superintendent of the building. So there was an opportunity in some way for access to have been obtained to those ballots.

A resolution is going to be offered this afternoon providing that the members of this committee themselves go to Newton, or delegate someone to go in their place, to take the affidavits of the people who voted in Newton. All those people, Republicans and Democrats, are so worked up over this thing that the committee will not have to subpena them—they will come right to the town hall of their own accord. The testimony can be taken in 3 days' time at a very small cost to the Government. I have witnessed millions of dollars being voted in this Chamber during the past 7 months, but if the Government cannot afford to spend a few hundred dollars in having this done in order to verify the facts and determine to whom this seat rightfully belongs, then I shall be very glad to pay the expenses of the committee myself.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Did the gentleman state that he took nine individuals to Concord?

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. I stated that I took the nine election officials.

Mr. RANDOLPH. How many were there altogether?

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. There were nine.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman took the entire number?

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. I took the entire number; every one of the election officials. There are nine of them.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Regardless of party?

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. It was stated here that there were 11, but there were 9.

Mr. TOBEY. Democrats and Republicans.

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. Democrats and Republicans; all who had anything to do with that election.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. I cannot yield; I am sorry.

Mr. Speaker, I realize what an honor it is to be in this, the greatest legislative body in the world. I am not a politician. I do not know anything about politics, but I do know that I feel it is a wonderful honor to be a Member of this splendid body of men and women. [Applause.] I cannot conceive of any man or woman here being so unfair as not to be willing to have this investigation made, when it could be made so easily, and then there would be no question whatever about this matter. I wish I could draw a picture of those honest, substantial, God-fearing people who live in this little town of Newton, snuggled away in the hills of New Hampshire. They were born there and have lived there all their lives. I cannot conceive of those people, some of whom have served the town for 40 years, testifying under oath to something that is not true.

In conclusion, may I say that I have been a businessman for 30 years, and I have enjoyed my business life, but I have never enjoyed 8 months of my life as much as I have enjoyed the 8 months I have spent here in this Hall. I have taken but little time to talk on the floor; I have observed, and I have listened. I want you to know that it seems to me there has been the greatest fairness shown here. True, there has been some bitterness evidenced at times; some things have been said here which I do not think it is policy for any side to say, but nevertheless they have been said. But I want to tell you that one thing which I shall treasure and cherish as long as I live is the memory of the 8 months I have spent here with you men and women. I have especially enjoyed working with the members of the Committee on Labor, which has had under consideration this most important wage-and-hour bill. The gentleman from Texas has tried to intimate that there was connivance about those 34 votes. I have sat with the gentleman from Texas on the Labor Committee all through this session, and I wonder if the gentleman thinks I am the type of man who would connive. Here is another Congressman [Mr. RANDOLPH] with whom I have sat on the Labor Committee, and also for a short time with the chairman of that committee, the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON]. I do not know what their impression of me is but I want to tell you that I would not connive for all the seats there are in Congress. [Applause.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman has asked what the chairman of the Labor Committee thinks of him. May I say I have never worked on any committee with a more fair-minded or better member than the gentleman. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time only because the gentleman from New Hampshire referred to me as one of his colleagues on the Committee on Labor. Regardless of the controversy now raging, I may say that I have found the gentleman to be a man of splendid attainments and of personal integrity. I have enjoyed working with the gentleman on the committee to which he has alluded. [Applause.]

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. What is the political complexion of the board of officials which had to do with the counting of the ballots?

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. On the State ballot law commission there are two Republicans and one Democrat, but their opinion was unanimous. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR of New York. Mr. Speaker, since last November immediately following this election, I have been familiar with this case. I was consulted about it in New York in November and in Washington many, many times thereafter, and the matter has been the subject of discussion among the Speaker, the majority leader, the Democratic national committeeman from New Hampshire, the contestant and others. At no time did I ever think the issue was difficult or possible of dispute. As a matter of fact, I was consulted about mandamusing the Republican Governor of New Hampshire to issue this certificate, and for the first time I heard today he was out of town at that time. I did not understand at that time that he was out of town. There were no suggestions made but what he arbitrarily refused to issue the certificate, having just been elected as a Republican Senator from New Hampshire. His Republican election board certified to him that the Democrat had been elected, but he refused to certify.

Nobody in this House ever wants to deprive a sitting Member of his seat, arbitrarily. I can say that I have never seen an election contest in this House decided on arbitrary, partisan lines. I have seen the Republicans seat Democrats; and I have seen the Democrats, just in the last Congress, seat a Republican; but by the same token, if the man outside is entitled to his seat, he should be seated, no matter how genial and kindly and honorable the sitting Member is or how valuable a member of any committee he may be, much of which I have heard today, of a sentimental nature.

The issue in the pending case is simple and clear. The Republicans want to count 34 ballots for the Republican, with no suggestion that anything ever happened to these ballots whereby they might have been destroyed or caused to disappear; but remember always that the Republicans want to seat their colleague on the results as appear on the tally sheets that he got 34 ballots somewhere, which ballots cannot be produced and never were in existence as any of the proof shows.

When Mr. Roy, the Democrat, started out to contest the first announced results of the election, the tally sheets showed he was defeated by nearly 600 votes; so he had to prove, and the count of the ballots proved, that the tally sheets were incorrect in many, many districts. There is no dispute about that. The Republicans cannot and do not contend against that. Of course you cannot determine an election on a tally sheet as against the absolute proof evidenced by counting the actual ballots cast.

The suggestion of a committee going and asking the voters how they voted or if they voted will not work. It is absolutely ridiculous. Nobody here would want any such inquiry in his district of the voters as to how they voted, because some of his own relatives who voted against him would say, "Sure, I voted for him." [Laughter.] Are you going to ask the voters "if they voted"? That is just as ridiculous and has never been seriously suggested before in any election contest in America. Are you going into a small Republican town in New Hampshire, which has been Republican controlled for years, with a Republican mayor, council, tax appraisers, licensors, and so forth, and ask a businessman "if he voted", without getting the one and only answer, "Yes"? They talk about "Democratic" inspectors in Republican New Hampshire! Why, of course, we know the kind of "Democrats" those heroes are, usually like the Democrats in up-State New York—for years they register "Democratic" solely so that they can get that job of election inspector on election day and aid the Republicans in controlling the election machinery. Are you going to ask the businessmen in this town, who do not want to offend any of the political powers that be—all Republican, the Republican Governor, the Republican Senator—are you going to "Mr. Jones" and ask: "Mr. Jones, did you vote?" What is he going to say?

Of course there is only one answer he will make, "Sure, I voted." He will say that whether he did or not vote. He is going to be looking for a license, a favor, and to earn this he stayed away from the polls, he will not admit it.

You cannot get the facts by such an investigation. Everybody on that list that the inspectors put down as voting is going to say he voted. Everybody knows what happens in small election districts. The election officials vote many persons who never go to the polls, but few will admit they did not go.

I have never seen an election contest that presented such a clear-cut issue. The suggestion by the Republicans here is that you take oral proof, that you take secondary proof, not only as to the existence of the phantom 34 ballots but as to how those 34 alleged voters voted. For 25 years I have participated as counsel in election contests and I have never yet heard a full-grown man make such a suggestion.

It has never been suggested before in an election contest in my memory before any election board or any court, probably for the single reason it would be laughed out as moronic.

There is only one solution to this contest, to seat the Democrat contestant, who is clearly entitled to his seat. That should be done no matter how regretful we may feel about unseating the distinguished, genial gentleman from New Hampshire, the Republican, who has so ingratiated himself with his Labor Committee and the Progressives of this House by voting with them on certain measures. While I regret the consequences to him, I am more concerned in the working out of justice to the Democratic contestant, Alphonse Roy, of Manchester, N. H., a distinguished citizen of that State and a stalwart Democrat, who has fought the battles of his party for many years. He won his seat.

He was elected in spite of the manipulations of the Republican machine. To deny him the fruits of his victory would be by far a greater injustice than the painful duty of unseating the distinguished and genial gentleman, Mr. Jenks, who all of a sudden became such a friend of labor and progressive legislation.

Justice cannot lie on both sides. Right, and the decent, fair thing to do, is never on the fence. In my humble opinion, having lived with this case, my conscience directs me in only one direction, without equivocation or demagoging as to being fair and square.

I have been a Member of this House for 14 years, and in all that time, in any election contest, I have never seen one Republican vote to seat a Democrat no matter how strong the merits have been in favor of the Democrat. I appreciate that some of my Democratic colleagues are perplexed by the issue raised in this case, and want to do the fair and square thing. Let me say to them, however, that no matter how close the issue, no matter how conscientious they may feel about further investigation of the facts, no single solitary Republican will vote his conscience.

It would be strange if scores of you Democrats were concerned with an issue in this case, if no single one of the 89 Republicans were not so concerned; yet I am willing to wager that the conscience of no single Republican will stand in the way of seating his colleague. Such is the partisanship solely on that side of the House in these election contests.

It is rumored here that some Democrat may move to recommit this resolution. In view of what I have just said, I cannot believe that. Surely no one on this side of the aisle who is a real Democrat could lend himself as a tool to the partisan, conscienceless Republican minority. I do not believe that can happen.

If right is right, if we are going to be fair, just, and equitable, and be able to look at ourselves in mirrors, there is only one conclusion to arrive at in this embarrassing situation—to seat the man really elected last November to the House of Representatives from the First District of New Hampshire, the Honorable Alphonse Roy, of Manchester.

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Florida rise?

Mr. WILCOX. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WILCOX moves that this resolution be recommitted to the committee; that the committee be and hereby is authorized, empowered, and directed to take or cause to be taken the testimony of the 458 Newton residents shown by the town election records to have voted there in person on November 3, 1936, and such further testimony as the committee may consider relevant to better enable it to determine the issue raised by this case; and that the committee be authorized to expend such sums in its investigation as it may deem necessary, and report its findings and recommendations to this House at the next session of Congress.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the House divided, and there were—ayes, 196, noes 91.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 231, nays 129, answered "present" 3, not voting 66, as follows:

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, we of the committee are in a quandary in reference to the motion to recommit just adopted by the House and would ask that the Speaker examine the motion, if that is possible, and advise us what we are directed to do under the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. It is not within the province of the Chair to undertake to direct the committee. The Chair feels the House itself, under the terms of the motion, has directed the committee as to the procedure.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, a further parliamentary inquiry as to whether provision is made in the motion to recommit to defray the expenses of the committee that will go to New Hampshire in order to carry out the order in the motion?

Mr. SPEAKER. The Chair may say that the motion in part provides that the committee be authorized to spend such sums in this investigation as it may deem necessary to report its findings and recommendation to the House at the next session of Congress.

TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2901) to amend subsection (e) of section 9 of the Trading With the Enemy Act, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say that the request of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER] is agreeable to the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may we have an explanation of what the bill provides?

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, this is simply an amendment to the Trading with the Enemy Act.

By amendment to section 9 of that act passed in 1920 the United States was prohibited from making agreements with nationals who were our friends in the war because of the fact that we took none of their property and they took none of our property. However, it develops that Alsace-Lorraine, that was at that time German territory, is now French territory. We have considerable property that belongs to people of that district who are now really Frenchmen. We can enter into no reciprocal agreement with France without this amendment.

This bill gives the authority to the Secretary of State and the State Department to enter into reciprocal trade agreements on particular occasions and by reason thereof we will return to citizens of Alsace-Lorraine, who are now citizens of France, about $270,000 worth of property that we hold, belonging to them, and for which we have no title, and in return, by reciprocal agreement, we will get $400,000 for American citizens who were naturalized before 1920 by reason of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, this bill passed the Senate and has been unanimously reported by the Ways and Means Committee of the House. I am sure no one will have any objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subsection (e) of section 9 of the Trading with the Enemy Act, as amended, is amended by inserting after the words "unless such nation in like case extends reciprocal rights to citizens of the United States" a colon and the following: "Provided, That any arrangement made by a foreign nation for the release of money and other property of American citizens and certified by the Secretary of State to the Attorney General as fair and the most advantageous arrangement obtainable shall be regarded as meeting this requirement."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OFFICE OF AUDITOR GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. FRED M. VINSON, from the Select Committee on Government Reorganization, reported the bill (H. R. 8276) to establish the office of Auditor General of the United States, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 1606), which was read the first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Union Calendar and ordered printed.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have until midnight tomorrow night to file a minority report on the bill just reported by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FRED M. VINSON].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

LEVEES, FLOOD WALLS, AND DRAINAGE STRUCTURES IN THE OHIO RIVER BASIN

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 7646, an act to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the conference report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I object to reading the statement in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report and statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7646) an act to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: "Provided further, That if after investigation the President finds that States, political subdivisions thereof, or other responsible local agencies are unable by reason of their financial condition to comply with the requirements as to local cooperation with respect to providing lands, easements, and rights-of-way for any projects authorized by the Flood Control Act of June 15, 1936 (Public Act No. 678, 74th Congress), the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936 (Public Act No. 738, 74th Congress), and by this amending act, he is authorized to waive such requirement on any individual project not to exceed 50 percent of the estimated costs of the lands, easements, and rights-of-way;" and with a further amendment as follows:

Insert: Quotation marks at the end of section 1; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, and 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, and 5, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

"SECTION 9. That section 5 of the act entitled 'An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes', approved June 22, 1936, is hereby amended by adding a third paragraph reading as follows, under the heading 'Mississippi River':

" 'Memphis, Tennessee.—The construction of flood-walls, levees and revetments along Wolf River and Nonconnah Creek for the protection of Memphis, Tennessee, in accordance with the report on record in the office of the Chief of Engineers. Estimated construction cost, $9,000,000. Estimated cost of lands and damages, $4,324,000.' "

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7646) entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments:

Amendments

On amendment no. 1: This amendment to section 1 proposed by the Senate was eliminated and in lieu thereof the following amendment was agreed to, to wit: Disagree to amendment no. 1 and in lieu thereof agree to the following:

"Provided further, That if after investigation the President finds that States, political subdivisions thereof, or other responsible local agencies are unable by reason of their financial condition to comply with the requirements as to local cooperation with respect to providing lands, easements, and rights-of-way for any projects authorized by the Flood Control Act of June 15, 1936 (Public Act No. 678, 74th Cong.), the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936 (Public Act No. 738, 74th Cong.), and by this amending act, he is authorized to waive such requirement on any individual project not to exceed 50 percent of the estimated costs of the lands, easements, and rights-of-way."

By agreement, section 1 was further amended by inserting quotation marks at the end of the section.

On amendment no. 2: Amendment no. 2 by the Senate included all of the preliminary examinations and surveys provided for in the bill as section 5 as it passed the House. In addition, the Senate included preliminary examinations and surveys for other streams. The amendment of the Senate rearranged the grouping of the streams by regions, and hence the order in which the streams included in section 5 when it passed the House has been rearranged. As stated, however, all streams providing for preliminary examinations and surveys included in the bill as it passed the House are included in the bill as agreed to.

On amendment no. 3: This amendment authorizes the Chief of Engineers, in his discretion, to modify the project for the control of floods on the Yazoo River, as authorized by section 4 of the Flood Control Act of June 15, 1936, so as to substitute therefor a combined reservoir floodway and levee plan, provided the total costs do not exceed the present authorization. This amendment is comparable to a similar provision with respect to the St. Francis River in section 4 of the act of June 15, 1936, and the conditions of local cooperation are identical and in accord with said section 4 of the Mississippi River Flood Control Act of June 15, 1936. As stated, the total cost to the Government does not exceed the present authorization, as stated in said amendment no. 3. No additional authorization is required.

On amendment no. 4: This amendment merely amends the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, by adding in the proper place after the words "Willamette River", the words "and tributaries." No additional authorization is required.

On amendment no. 5: This amendment amends the project for the protection of the Pittsburgh area and particularly for the protection of the city of Johnstown, Pa., embraced in the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, as amended by the act that Congress approved April 27, 1937, by providing that if it is found that geological and engineering conditions make it impracticable to construct a reservoir to provide protection for the city of Johnstown, Pa., flood protection will be provided by channel enlargement or other works, provided the total construction costs shall not be increased. No additional authorization is required.

On amendment no. 6: The amendment as adopted by the Senate was eliminated and in lieu thereof the following amendment was agreed to:

"SEC. 9. That section 5 of the act entitled 'An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes', approved June 22, 1936, is hereby amended by adding a third paragraph reading as follows, under the heading 'Mississippi River':

" 'Memphis, Tenn.: The construction of flood walls, levees, and revetments along Wolf River and Nonconnah Creek for the protection of Memphis, Tenn., in accordance with the report on record in the office of the Chief of Engineers. Estimated construction cost $9,000,000. Estimated cost of lands and damages, $4,324,000.' "

Under the amendment as proposed, and under the amendment as agreed to, no additional authorization is provided, and it is understood that no appropriation for the project during the current fiscal year will be made. It is understood that the project will be provided for out of appropriations under the act of June 22, 1936, for the next fiscal year. The amendment as agreed to amends the act of June 22, 1936, by providing a project for the protection of Memphis, Tenn., in accordance with the terms of the act of June 22, 1936.

Memphis was subjected to the highest flood heights in its history during the flood of 1937. While it was expected that this project would be included in the flood-control bill that the House Flood Control Committee plans to report during the next session, it has been included in the pending bill inasmuch as no additional authorization is required and no additional appropriation is expected. Its adoption will enable the local interests to prepare to make the local contribution required by law, which in this case is substantially 50 percent of the costs of construction.

The conferees agreed to Senate amendments 2, 3, 4, and 5. They further agreed to amendments as shown herein and as shown in the conference report in lieu of the amendments no. 1 and no. 6 proposed by the Senate.

The amendments adopted by the Senate and agreed to in conference do not require any additional authorizations or appropriations.

WILLIAM M. WHITTINGTON,
GLENN GRISWOLD,
HARRY L. ENGLEBRIGHT,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order against the report for the time being.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the report on the ground it exceeds the range of the conference. The first amendment attempts to deal with an act of June 15, 1936, while the matters in difference between the two Houses were entirely confined to the act of June 22, 1936.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] care to argue the point of order?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, the point of order is directed to what is known as the amendment agreed to by the conferees in lieu of the Barkley amendment.

The Barkley amendment, as shown by the bill, is as follows:

Provided further, That if after investigation the President finds that any city or town is by reason of its financial condition unable to comply with the requirements of section 3 as to local cooperation he is hereby authorized to waive such requirements in whole or in part.

Mr. Speaker, it is the view of the conferees that the so-called Barkley amendment, which I have just read, has to do with the waiver of the requirements of section 3 not only with respect to the Ohio River but with respect to the entire country. In this connection, with the permission of the Speaker, I call attention to the following colloquy in the Senate at the time of the adoption of the Barkley amendment.

The SPEAKER. In order to expedite decision on this matter, the Chair may ask the gentleman from Mississippi this question: Does the gentleman contend there was anything in the House bill which justified the conferees in extending the language of Senate amendment no. 1 to include States, political subdivisions, and other responsible agencies?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I do say language is to be interpreted as intended by the author and the Senate, Mr. Speaker, and for that reason I was just about to offer the observation which I now bring to the attention of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman kindly point out anything in the House bill which justifies that position?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am trying to give the Speaker the interpretation of the author of the amendment in which he stated that it was applicable to section 3.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may state to the gentleman from Mississippi that the Chair must base his decision on the language of the House bill and the language of the Senate amendment, and not on the interpretation put upon it by a Member of the Senate.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I agree with the statement of the Speaker, but I thought his interpretation might be of benefit in the interpretation of the provision.

The SPEAKER. It might be interesting, but the Chair does not think it would be at all conclusive on the Chair.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the Chair permit me to make this statement, and then I shall conclude, for I have no desire to detain the House. When the amendment was offered, the Senator from Missouri, Mr. CLARK, asked the author if it was applicable only to cities and towns in the Ohio Valley. The author of the amendment replied that it was not, that it was applicable to the entire country. The language here does broaden and does extend the language of the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky in order to do what the Senator from Kentucky, the author of the amendment, stated it would do.

May I also state, Mr. Speaker, that if the point of order lies, we are in the anomalous situation of permitting the President of the United States to waive local cooperation with respect to cities and towns in the Ohio Valley without giving him the authority to waive it with regard to other cities and towns and all other localities in other flood-control acts. In the circumstances, while the point of order may be sound, and I can appreciate that it does enlarge the language of the bill, I appeal to the gentleman from New York, in view of the fact that we constantly have to waive points of order or we would never restrict the language often adopted by the other body, in fairness and justice to the entire country and to all flood-control acts the gentleman would be justified in withdrawing the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York insist on the point of order?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the situation seems to be this: Amendment no. 1 gives to certain States and certain cities and towns referred to and provided for in the act of June 22, 1936, the privilege of applying to the President and gives to the President the right to waive local contributions. This amendment applies not only to the act of June 22, 1936, but also to the act of June 15, but limits it, however, to a 50-percent contribution. The way I see the situation is that if the Federal Government contributes toward the rights-of-way and that sort of thing which the local communities are required to put up, the cost will be four or five times as much as if the localities procured them themselves. I think the proper procedure would be to reject this conference report and move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. May I remind the gentleman that if his point of order is good the amendment, in the opinion of the conferees, and certainly in my opinion, does not apply to all cities and towns included in the act of 1936, but applies only to the cities and towns in the Ohio Valley under the terms of the pending bill as set forth in the first part of section 1.

Mr. TABER. Perhaps that is so.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. May I say further that the gentleman's apprehension that this will greatly increase the cost to the country is not justified, according to my investigations? The fact is that in the Ohio Basin there are some cities, as probably there are in other parts of the country, which are utterly unable to comply with the provision requiring local contributions.

This would give to the President of the United States the power to remit one-half the cost required by law. I personally would like to see a definite yardstick adopted. We hope to have a comprehensive flood-control act at the next session of Congress, and I trust the matter can be adjusted. However, it strikes me that in all fairness every part of the country in the meantime should have the consideration which the author of the amendment intended to give. I urge that the gentleman withdraw his point of order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his point of order?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I feel that I must insist on the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his point of order for a question?

Mr. TABER. I withhold the point of order for a moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. May I ask the gentleman from Mississippi what, if any, consideration was given to the question of damage, aside from lands, easements, and rights-of-way?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I may say that the language there as construed by the War Department embraces lands, easements, damages, and rights-of-way. We have followed the language in the National Flood Control Act.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should like, if I could, to disabuse the mind of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] of any fear with reference to unlimited expenditure.

As I understand it, the only amounts of money that can be expended for all kinds of flood control for all of the country, regardless of what amendments we put on here, are $24,000,000 and $30,000,000, and that is all, without regard to what we may think the potential expenditures might be. All of these things must come under the scrutiny of the President, the Army engineers, the Appropriations Committee of the House, and the Appropriations Committee of the Senate. There will be many checks on this expenditure, and if this is turned down, we Congressmen of the Ohio Valley must go back to our people and say that although we suffered from the greatest flood any civilized people in the world ever knew and although we have been before the Congress for 8 months seeking relief, we have come back empty handed; we have asked for bread and they have given them a stone, and I really beg the gentleman from New York to withdraw his point of order so that we may show these people that the Government of the United States, regardless of politics and regardless of the locality of the individual, has some sympathy for the people who have suffered more than any other people in the country.

Mr. TABER. The burden, of course, will be upon those in the Senate who are insisting upon the Government waiving local contributions and not upon me or upon the Members of the House.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That may be true, but that does not bring relief to our people.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I respect the gentleman from New York as a watchdog of the Treasury. When this amendment was submitted, it gave the President the right to waive the entire contribution. We have an agreement here authorizing the President to waive only 50 percent, and if there is one man in the House who would be justified in yielding, in view of our high regard for him as a watchdog of the Treasury, after your conferees have tried to the limit to protect the Treasury, I believe it is the gentleman from New York. With deference, the burden of preventing discrimination will be upon the gentleman from New York, and not upon the Senate, for I am trying to effectuate the intention of the Senate to the extent of 50 percent.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. Do I understand that the effect of this amendment would be to give the President the right to change the law affecting the purchase of all the levees and rights-of-way along the entire length of the Mississippi River?

Mr. TABER. It would affect everything that is authorized by the acts of June 15, 1936, and June 22, 1936, and also this bill.

Mr. SNELL. And that is contrary to what the Congress has stood for heretofore.

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I do not think and I do not believe this would affect the main Mississippi River. This is intended to protect the people along the Ohio and other rivers. The levees on the Mississippi River are practically completed. The conferees have insisted that if we do this with respect to one flood-control act we should do it with respect to all of them.

Mr. SNELL. Why should not the House stand, as it has always stood, against this proposition, and let it go back to conference?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I believe there must be a liberalization by the Government of the principle of local contribution, and if we cannot apply it to all projects, we can well begin with the emergency Ohio River projects.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] insist upon his point of order?

Mr. TABER. I think I shall have to, Mr. Speaker.

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded. The Chair will ask the gentleman from New York if he insists on his point of order.

Mr. TABER. I do, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] makes the point of order that the conferees have exceeded their authority in agreeing to Senate amendment no. 1, which is in the following language:

Provided further, That if after investigation the President finds that any city or town is by reason of its financial condition unable to comply with the requirements of section 3 as to local cooperation he is hereby authorized to waive such requirements in whole or in part.

This was the original Senate amendment placed in the House bill. In lieu of the Senate amendment, the conferees have agreed to the following provision:

Provided further, That if after investigation the President finds that States, political subdivisions thereof, or other responsible local agencies are unable by reason of their financial condition to comply with the requirements as to local cooperation with respect to providing lands, easements, and rights-of-way for any projects authorized by the Flood Control Act of June 15, 1936 (Public Act No. 678, 74th Cong.), the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936 (Public Act No. 738, 74th Cong.), and by this amending act, he is authorized to waive such requirement on any individual project not to exceed 50 percent of the estimated costs of the lands, easements, and rights-of-way.

In other words, the conferees by agreeing to the language last read by the Chair, have very largely increased the power that was not covered by the House provision and was not covered by the original Senate amendment to the House bill.

There is a long and consistent line of decisions and precedents holding that such powers are clearly beyond the authority of conferees and the Chair regretfully feels compelled to sustain the point of order.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. When a conference report has been thrown out on a point of order is it not the same as if it had been rejected by the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes a parliamentary inquiry as to whether, when a point of order to a conference report is sustained ipso facto, the Senate amendments come before the House for further consideration. Is that the parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. In reply to the gentleman the Chair calls the gentleman's attention to section 3257, volume 8, Cannon's Precedents:

When a conference report is ruled out of order, the bill and amendments are again before the House as when first presented, and motions relating to amendments and conference are again in order.

Mr. SNELL. When this first came back from the Senate there was an important matter that should have gone before the committee for consideration because it entailed expenditure of large amounts of money, and is it a privileged motion to move to consider that in the House at the present time?

The SPEAKER. It is in the opinion of the Chair, because by sending the bill and Senate amendments to conference, the provisions of the rules requiring consideration in Committee of the Whole were waived.

The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 10, after the word "with" insert "Provided further, That if after investigation the President finds that any city or town is, by reason of its financial condition, unable to comply with the requirements of section 3 as to local cooperation he is hereby authorized to waive such requirements in whole or in part."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment, which it is proposed we adopt in lieu of the amendment just read, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTINGTON moves to recede and concur in amendment no. 1 with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"Provided further, That if after investigation the President finds that any city or town is, by reason of its financial condition, unable to comply with the requirements of section 3 as to local cooperation, he is hereby authorized to waive such requirements on any individual project not to exceed 50 percent of the estimated cost of the lands, easements, and rights-of-way."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, under the ruling of the Chair, which I think is unquestionably correct, the proposed amendment confines the authority of the President to waive as to local contribution to the cities and towns of the Ohio Valley and to the authorization of projects that will cost approximately $24,000,000, as provided in the bill. In other words, we have met the other body halfway, and under the ruling and interpretation of the Chair on the point of order by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] this provision applies only to cities and towns in the Ohio Valley, and will relieve and waive, in the discretion of the President, in any particular case any city or town in the pending bill not to exceed 50 percent of the estimated costs of lands, easements, and rights-of-way.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Is not this the first time we have passed any such legislation as this, waiving the responsibility of local communities to provide the rights-of-way, and so forth, in connection with this flood control?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I answer the gentleman by saying that generally there has been heretofore a yardstick and local contribution in all flood-control acts; and also answer further by saying that in emergencies and unusual circumstances, or where there is contribution already made for flood-control work, similar provisions are contained in some of the flood-control acts; but in this case it is understood that the approximate $24,000,000 authorized in the bill will not necessitate an additional appropriation this year, and that the President of the United States is to provide for the work out of the relief and emergency funds of 1937. In this case I do say and answer the gentleman's question by saying that I favor a uniform rule, a uniform yardstick of local contribution, and for that reason I urged that the point of order be withdrawn by the gentleman from New York, but the gentleman insisted upon his point of order; and, knowing that a city like the city of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] and other cities, if this amendment is not adopted, will not be able to comply with the local contribution, I do urge that we meet the other body halfway and agree to the amendment I propose.

In southern New York under the National Flood Control Act of 1936 there are projects authorized aggregating about $27,000,000. And the local contribution is about $6,000,000 under the terms of that act. In the case of the city of Paducah, Ky., the cost of construction is approximately $5,000,000, and the local people there are required to put up 50 percent. It was in the way of an emergency to relieve them from the oppressive provisions of the general act that until the next session of Congress we insisted it be made applicable to all acts and local interests; but the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], by insisting on the point of order, has limited us to these emergency cases and only to those provided in this act along the Ohio River.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mr. FRED M. VINSON. In regard to Kentucky let me say that because of constitutional language, the ceiling of debt in cities and counties and districts is limited from 3 percent to 10 percent on the assessed valuation in those towns, according to the size thereof.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. What does the word "community" embrace, what type of political subdivision?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is city or town. The word "community" is not used in the amendment, but broader language that would have included communities was included in the amendment agreed to by the conferees.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It would not embrace a State or a political subdivision thereof?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is confined to cities and towns.

Mr. CITRON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. CITRON. Would the amendment include the Connecticut River valley?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It does not. It is applicable to emergency projects, not to exceed in cost about $24,000,000, in the Ohio Valley. If the amendment ruled out on the point had been approved, it would have applied to the Connecticut Valley.

Mr. SECREST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. SECREST. Under the Overton bill of last year, did it not provide that the Federal Government should buy the land in the lower Mississippi project?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No. It provided, in the floodways where the Government acquired a strip of land, in many cases 8 or 10 miles wide, for flowage rights, that the Federal Government should provide flowage rights to exceed the amount estimated by the Chief of Engineers, and stipulated in the bill; but under the Overton Act of June 15, 1936, for levees, the same yardstick applied that applies on any other river in the United States under the Copeland Act of June 22, 1936.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should like to answer the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] by saying that if the Barkley amendment, which is amendment no. 1 and which is germane and is not subject to a point of order—if the gentleman from Mississippi would insist upon that amendment, this would be the result: Every city in the Ohio Valley would have the right to go to the President and ask that the Government come forward with the total contribution, but he is not taking the Barkley amendment. He is placing an amendment on the Barkley amendment, which provides that every city, regardless of its financial condition, must pay 50 percent of all damages and all expenses. That itself will shut out most of the cities on the Ohio River. I do not know of but two or three—Cincinnati, Huntington, W. Va., and some of the larger cities—that can meet the requirements. There is no use for this Congress to go through the motions of saying they are trying to give these flooded people relief when you put a yoke around their neck so heavy that they cannot move. There is absolutely no sense in it. Let us be reasonable about it.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a minute?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from New York for a question.

Mr. SNELL. I just want to make this statement: This proposition has been argued in the House for the last 18 or 20 years, of the local communities furnishing rights-of-way, and so forth, and this House has continually, during all that time, taken that position. Every little while there has been an effort made to relieve local communities of that obligation. Nevertheless, I have always taken the position that the local communities certainly should be required to do that much. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] well knows that at the time we started this flood control it never would have been started unless they agreed to do that.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is right, and we have complied with the principle along the Mississippi River and are now complying with the requirements.

Mr. SNELL. That is all right, but when you start relieving them, I know how easy it is to relieve the rest of them; and if you start that here today, I maintain that it would not be but a short time until you will relieve all local communities from any responsibility whatever; and as far as I am concerned, I am not going to stand for it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I respond to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] by saying it is a question of whether we are going to waive the matter so as to permit the President to waive all contribution or going as far as the conferees can go to secure the passage of a bill that will be approved to limit it to waiving it one-half.

Mr. SNELL. You have done well so far, but you have only gone half as far as you ought to.

Mr. CITRON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. CITRON. Is there any reason why we should adopt this amendment which provides for Federal contributions to the land costs in the Ohio Valley, since the same benefits do not apply to other sections of the country that come under the omnibus flood-control bill of last year? I favor the Federal Government paying for all the land costs in these flood-control projects.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The waiver should apply to all flood-control acts, but that question was brought up on a point of order and the point of order was sustained, and we cannot put it in this bill, to make the waiver applicable to all projects, but only to the emergency Ohio River project.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Is not this amendment similar to that which was in the Overton bill last year, that was defeated by the House and which was afterward tried to be put in in conference, and on account of Senator COPELAND it was refused?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is not. There was no similar provision in the Overton bill last year.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. SPENCE. Is it not a fact that unless there is some liberalization in this law it will be absolutely impossible to furnish any help to the people in the cities of the Ohio Valley, who are limited as to their tax rate and as to their constitutional indebtedness? They cannot take advantage of this law unless there is some liberalization of it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, unquestionably that is true. I answer finally, not desiring to take the time of the House, that the amendment I propose is only applicable to the emergency projects in the Ohio Valley, and it is the purpose of the flood-control committee, as was stated repeatedly during this session, to undertake to report a bill covering the entire country, and get a definite yardstick, early in the next session of the Congress.

Mr. SPENCE. Now is the time the Ohio Valley needs help.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. For that reason I favor the principle of the Barkley amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SNELL) there were—ayes 173, noes 22.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITTINGTON: At the end of section 1, add quotation marks.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, there is no dispute or controversy with reference to amendments of the Senate nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5. I ask unanimous consent that they may be considered en bloc.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report Senate amendments nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5.

The Clerk read as follows:

"No work shall be undertaken until the States or other qualified agencies have furnished satisfactory assurances that they will—

"(a) undertake, without cost to the United States, all alterations of highways made necessary because of the construction of reservoirs and meet all damages because of such highway alterations; and

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to amendments of the Senate nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5 and agree to the same.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment no. 6: Page 7, after line 22, insert:

"SEC. 9. That the project for the protection of the city of Memphis, Tenn., from the floodwaters by the construction of flood walls, levees, and revetments along Wolf River and Nonconnah Creek in accordance with plans to be approved by the Chief of Engineers, is hereby adopted and authorized to be prosecuted under the direction of the Secretary of War and supervision of the Chief of Engineers, in accordance with the provisions and conditions of the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 6 and agree to the same with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTINGTON moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 6 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

"SEC. 9. That section 5 of the act entitled 'An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes', approved June 22, 1936, is hereby amended by adding a third paragraph reading as follows, under the heading 'Mississippi River': 'Memphis, Tenn.—The construction of flood walls, levees, and revetments along Wolf River and Nonconnah Creek for the protection of Memphis, Tenn., in accordance with the report on record in the Office of the Chief of Engineers. Estimated construction cost, $9,000,000. Estimated cost of lands and damages, $4,324,000'; and the Senate agree to the same."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, the amendment I propose is substantially the amendment adopted by the other body, but it is clarified and made definite and follows the language in all similar projects in the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1926. It is the amendment agreed to by the conferees.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If the amendment is adopted will not the bill have to go back to conference?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It will not. The Senate can approve the conference report, and agree to the amendment in lieu of amendment 1, adopted by the House.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I shall be pleased to yield, but before yielding, my colleague on the committee understands, I trust, that due to the situation that has arisen through the point of order made against the report we did not have time for the usual explanation and discussion of the report and I could not yield to the gentleman before.

I am now glad to yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a statement on behalf of the Flood Control Committee. We worked on legislation that dealt with the Ohio River Valley and it was the understanding in our committee that year we would consider only projects on that river. I believe we had a message from the President to that effect. We brought in the report with that understanding. We have here a bill that carries in it projects on the Mississippi River and tributaries of the Mississippi River.

I want to say to the House, it was the understanding in the committee we would consider those streams separately next year. At that time we hoped to come in with a comprehensive program and be able to bring in legislation dealing with those tributaries, while this bill was to deal with the Ohio River.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am in accord with the gentleman's statement. We were restricted and we only reported emergency projects in the Ohio River Basin, but it is fair to say that under the terms of the amendment as we now have it rewritten and as I now propose, no additional authorization is made and no appropriation will be made or requested this fiscal year. Personally, I had hoped that projects along the Mississippi be continued as requested by the President, but it is fair to say that the city of Memphis, one of the two largest cities in the lower Mississippi River Valley was subjected to the greatest flood in its history in 1937 and it is entitled to this protection and to this project as much as other parts of the country. We merely anticipated by approving the Memphis project, which undoubtedly the committee would have recommended next session.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERGUSON. Did I understand the gentleman to say this does not increase the authorization?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It does not increase the authorization specifically of the act of June 22, 1936, nor is it believed any such increase is necessary, as many of the projects authorized will not be constructed, and the existing authorization is ample to provide for the Memphis project. No provision is made for increasing the authorization, because it amends the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I notice the total cost of construction is $9,000,000 and the land damage is $4,000,000. Does the city of Memphis assume this property damage?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes; the city of Memphis has to put almost 50 percent in round figures.

Mr. CITRON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. CITRON. Does the Federal Government contribute toward the costs of the taking of land by Memphis?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The fact is that the Government makes no contribution to Memphis and makes no contribution anywhere else except for cities and towns in the lower Ohio Valley, under amendment number as agreed to by the House, because of the point of order of the gentleman from New York.

Under leave to revise and extend my remarks, I call attention to the statement of the managers on the part of the House in the conference report.

The conferees agreed to amendments nos. 2, 3, 4, and 5, as set forth in the statement on the part of the managers. These amendments necessitate no additional authorizations.

The only two amendments, except the clarifying amendment inserting quotation marks at the end of section 1, are amendment no. 1, the so-called Barkley amendment, and amendment no. 6, the so-called McKellar amendment, both proposed by the Senate.

The bill under consideration is an amendment to the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, and is to provide for levees, flood-walls, and drainage structures for the protection of cities and towns in the Ohio River Basin, not to exceed an authorization of $24,877,000. The estimated costs of construction to the Government and the estimated costs of rights-of-way to the local interests are set forth in House Committee on Flood Control Document No. 1, Seventy-fifth Congress, and the projects are in accordance with the report of the Chief of Engineers, as set forth in said document, and as stipulated in section 1 of the pending bill.

It is specifically provided in section 1 that the local cooperation required by section 3 of the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, must be complied with. Section 3 of that act, in describing the local interests, uses the words "States, political subdivisions thereof, or other responsible local agencies." The Barkley amendment as proposed by the Senate used "cities and towns" in describing the local interests, evidently referring to the cities and towns to be protected as emergency projects under the authorization of section 1 of the act.

As disclosed by the debate in the Senate at the time of the adoption of the said Barkley amendment, it was the purpose of the said amendment to apply to the whole country. There was a colloquy between the author of the amendment, Senator BARKLEY, and the Senior Senator, Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I quote from this colloquy, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, August 13, 1937, page 8832:

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Kentucky whether this is a provision to exempt only cities in the Ohio Valley from local contributions toward flood-control projects.

Mr. BARKLEY. This is an amendment to the Flood Control Act of 1936 and the amendment to which I have referred, if adopted, would apply to the whole country.

Mr. CLARK. I have the most intense sympathy with the project and I wanted to know the purposes of the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not limited to the Ohio Valley.

Practically all flood-control projects are embraced either in the Flood Control Act of June 15, 1936, or the National Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936. Many projects protect other legal subdivisions than cities or towns. They protect communities; they protect drainage districts; they protect levee districts. I repeat that the language "cities and towns" is not used in section 3 of the act of 1936.

Again, it was the view of the conferees that the same yardstick granting the President discretion to waive local contribution should apply to the whole country. Such was the evident intention of the author of the amendment. The conferees, therefore, to give effect to the intention of the author of the amendment and the intention of the Senate, agreed upon the amendment proposed by the conferees in lieu of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment proposed by the conferees would be applicable not only to the cities and towns, but to the local interests described in section 3 of the act of 1936, and the very language of the act is used in the amendment proposed by the conferees. Moreover, the amendment proposed by the conferees would limit the discretion of the President to waive so that he would be authorized to waive the local contribution for lands, easements, and rights-of-way for any project not to exceed 50 percent of the estimated costs thereof. Personally, I believe in national flood control at national expense. I believe that the Federal Government should provide for flood-control projects, where the benefits exceed the costs, at national expense.

At the same time, the Federal Treasury must be protected. There was a defect in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kentucky. It authorized the President to waive the local cooperation. The conferees proposed to limit his waiver to not exceeding 50 percent of the estimated costs. The Chief of Engineers makes the estimated costs. If the President is authorized to waive half of the costs, it might be that the costs estimated by the local interests would be adopted. If the costs of the project demanded by the local people exceeded the estimated costs of the Chief of Engineers, the President would only be authorized to waive one-half of the estimated costs by the Chief of Engineers.

The conferees made the provision applicable to the Flood Control Act of June 15, 1936. I am frank to say, however, that I know of no projects along the main Mississippi River that would be benefited. The local people have paid for the lands, damages, and rights-of-way. The levees along the main Mississippi River are practically complete. The local people have furnished the local cooperation and have paid for the rights-of-way, lands, and damages required by the act of June 15, 1936.

The yardstick for local contribution for levees along the main Mississippi River is identical with the yardstick of local contribution for levees along all of the rivers, in the act of June 15, 1936. If the language in the amendment proposed by the conferees, in lieu of the so-called Barkley amendment, is adopted, it makes the waiver applicable not only to cities and towns, but to communities and countrysides. It makes it applicable not only to the cities and towns of the Ohio River Basin, but to the cities and towns of all of the rivers and of all the streams in the two flood-control acts of June 15, and June 22, 1936, and all of the tributaries of the Mississippi River would be included with the Ohio River. The amendment would be applicable to the Ohio River and to the other tributaries of the Mississippi River, but I believe that practically all projects for levees along the main Mississippi River have been completed and that therefore the amendment would not aid levees along the main Mississippi River.

Amendment no. 2 included all of the preliminary examinations and surveys provided for in the bill as section 5 as it passed the House. In addition, the Senate included preliminary examinations and surveys for other streams. The amendment of the Senate rearranged the grouping of the streams by regions and hence the order in which the streams included in section 5 when it passed the House has been rearranged. As stated, however, all streams providing for preliminary examinations and surveys included in the bill as it passed the House are included in the bill as agreed to.

Amendment no. 3 agreed to by the conferees authorized the Chief of Engineers, in his discretion, to modify the project for the control of floods on the Yazoo River, as authorized by section 4 of the Flood Control Act of June 15, 1936, so as to substitute therefor a combined reservoir, floodway, and levee plan, provided the total costs do not exceed the present authorization as stated in the amendment. This amendment is comparable to a similar provision with respect to the St. Francis River in section 4 of the act of June 15, 1936, and the conditions of local cooperation are identical and are in accord with section 4 of the Mississippi River Flood Control Act of June 15, 1936. No additional authorization is required. The total estimated cost is not to exceed the present authorization, as stated in said amendment no. 3.

Amendment no. 4 merely adds to the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, after the words "Willamette River", the words "and tributaries." No additional authorization is required.

Amendment no. 5 amends the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936, as amended, by providing that if it is found that geological and engineering conditions make it impracticable to construct a reservoir to provide protection for the city of Johnstown, Pa., flood protection will be provided by channel enlargement or other works, provided the total construction cost to the Government is not increased thereby. No additional authorization is required.

Amendment no. 6. The bill as reported by the House, as stated over and over again, was confined to an authorization of $24,877,000. It was only partial relief for the Ohio River Basin and confined to emergency projects. The President of the United States requested the Flood Control Committee to continue consideration of other flood-control works along both the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers until the next session of the Congress. No hearings were conducted with respect to projects on the Mississippi River. Provision for all of the cities and towns along the Ohio River would require an authorization of around $140,000,000 or $150,000,000. I repeat to emphasize that as requested by the President the Committee on Flood Control in the House confined the bill to emergency projects and to the exact amount recommended by the President.

Amendment no. 6 provides for flood-walls, levees, and revetments for the protection of Memphis, Tenn. The project is approved by the Chief of Engineers. Undoubtedly it would have been included in the comprehensive flood control bill that the Flood Control Committee of the House plans to report at the next session of the Congress. The conferees recognized that there was merit in the amendment and they were advised it had been approved by the Chief of Engineers. The estimated costs of construction are set forth in the amendment. The estimated costs of the lands and damages are set forth in the amendment. Memphis will be required to contribute from 40 to 50 percent of the costs of construction. While the House conferees urged that consideration of all projects on the Mississippi River be continued until the next session, yet it was recognized that Memphis is one of the two largest cities in the lower Mississippi Valley. The flood of 1937 was the highest in its history. Much of the city is on high land but the commercial and industrial districts of the city were subjected to the highest flood in the history of the city. Much damage was done. The project is meritorious and while the conferees of the House, in maintaining the position of the Committee on Flood Control as requested by the President, stated that undoubtedly the Memphis project would be included in the next flood-control bill, in all of the circumstances, inasmuch as no additional authorization is provided under the bill proposed by the conferees in lieu of the amendment adopted by the Senate, and inasmuch as no additional appropriation will be made during the current fiscal year, the House conferees agreed to the amendment.

The city of Memphis will be required to contribute large amounts. By authorizing the project now the city can make preparations for the local contribution that it will have to provide to secure the construction of the project.

The amendments adopted in the Senate and the Barkley amendment, as modified in the House, and the bill as now agreed to by the House, do not require any additional authorizations or appropriations. It is but a partial provision to protect the Ohio Valley and to authorize protection for the city of Memphis from the highest flood in the history of the Ohio River and from the highest flood from Cairo to the mouth of the Arkansas River along the Mississippi River, including the Memphis area, ever known.

The country demands national flood control, substantially at national expense. I recommended the approval of the modified Barkley amendment in the hope that at the next session of the Congress a flood-control bill may be reported and adopted that will provide for a definite yardstick of local contribution without discretion that will be applicable to all flood-control projects, in all parts of the country, but in the circumstances, inasmuch as the House has now, by approving the Barkley amendment to the extent of 50 percent, come to the rescue of the stricken cities or towns in the Ohio River basin, I believe that we are in better position for planning and agreeing upon a definite and certain yardstick applicable to all projects on all rivers, at the next session of the Congress.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the various votes by which the motions were agreed to was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

TARIFF ACT OF 1930

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 8099) to amend certain administrative provisions of the Tariff Act of 1930, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Customs Administrative Act of 1937."

SEC. 2. Sections 1, 201, 401 (k), and 557 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, secs. 1001, 1201, 1401 (k), and 1557) and section 401 (a) of the Anti-Smuggling Act (U. S. C., 1934 edition, Supp. II, title 19, sec. 1709 (a)) are hereby amended by inserting "Wake Island, Midway Islands, Kingman Reef", before the words "and the island of Guam" wherever such words appear in each such section.

SEC. 3. Section 304 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1304) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 304. MARKING OF IMPORTED ARTICLES AND CONTAINERS.

"(a) Marking of articles: Except as hereinafter provided, every article of foreign origin (or its container, as provided in subsection (b) hereof) imported into the United States shall be marked in a conspicuous place as legibly, indelibly, and permanently as the nature of the article (or container) will permit in such manner as to indicate to an ultimate purchaser in the United States the English name of the country of origin of the article. The Secretary of the Treasury may by regulations—

"(1) Determine the character of words and phrases or abbreviations thereof which shall be acceptable as indicating the country of origin and prescribe the method of marking, whether by printing, stenciling, stamping, branding, labeling, or by any other method whatsoever, and the place on the article (or container) where the mark shall appear;

"(2) Require the addition of any other words or symbols which may be appropriate to prevent deception or mistake as to the origin of the article or as to the origin of any other article with which such imported article is usually combined subsequent to importation but before delivery to an ultimate purchaser; and

"(3) Authorize the exception of any article from the requirements of marking if—

"(A) Such article is incapable of being marked;

"(B) Such article cannot be marked prior to shipment to the United States without injury;

"(C) Such article cannot be marked prior to shipment to the United States, except at an expense economically prohibitive of its importation;

"(D) The marking of a container of such article will reasonably indicate the origin of such article;

"(E) Such article is a crude substance;

"(F) Such article is imported for use by the importer and not intended for sale in its imported or any other form;

"(G) Such article is to be processed in the United States by the importer or for his account otherwise than for the purpose of concealing the origin of such article and in such manner that any mark contemplated by this section would necessarily be obliterated, destroyed, or permanently concealed;

"(H) An ultimate purchaser, by reason of the character of such article or by reason of the circumstances of its importation, must necessarily know the country of origin of such article even though it is not marked to indicate its origin;

"(I) Such article was produced more than 20 years prior to its importation into the United States; or

"(J) Such article is of a class or kind with respect to which the Secretary of the Treasury has given notice by publication in the weekly Treasury Decisions within 2 years after July 1, 1937, that articles of such class or kind were imported in substantial quantities during the 5-year period immediately preceding January 1, 1937, and were not required during such period to be marked to indicate their origin.

"(b) Marking of containers: Whenever an article is excepted under subdivision (3) of subsection (a) of this section from the requirements of marking, the immediate container, if any, of such article, or such other container or containers of such article as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall be marked in such manner as to indicate to an ultimate purchaser in the United States the English name of the country of origin of such article, subject to all provisions of this section, including the same exceptions as are applicable to articles under subdivision (3) of subsection (a). If articles are excepted from marking requirements under clause (E), (F), (G), or (H) of subdivision (3) of subsection (a) of this section, their usual containers shall not be subject to the marking requirements of this section.

"(c) Additional duties for failure to mark: If at the time of importation any article (or its container, as provided in subsec. (b) hereof) is not marked in accordance with the requirements of this section, and if such article is not exported or destroyed or the article (or its container, as provided in subsec. (b) hereof) marked after importation in accordance with the requirements of this section (such exportation, destruction, or marking to be accomplished under customs supervision prior to the liquidation of the entry covering the article, and to be allowed whether or not the article has remained in continuous customs custody), there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon such article a duty of 10 percent ad valorem, which shall be deemed to have accrued at the time of importation, shall not be construed to be penal, and shall not be remitted wholly or in part, nor shall payment thereof be avoidable for any cause. Such duty shall be levied, collected, and paid in addition to any other duty imposed by law and whether or not the article is exempt from the payment of ordinary customs duties. The compensation and expenses of customs officers and employees assigned to supervise the exportation, destruction, or marking to exempt articles from the application of the duty provided for in this subsection shall be reimbursed to the Government by the importer.

"(d) Delivery withheld until marked: No imported article held in customs custody for inspection, examination, or appraisement shall be delivered until such article and every other article of the importation (or their containers), whether or not released from customs custody, shall have been marked in accordance with the requirements of this section. Nothing in this section shall be construed as excepting any article (or its container) from the particular requirements of marking provided for in any other provision of law.

"(e) Penalties: If any person shall, with intent to conceal the information given thereby or contained therein, deface, destroy, remove, alter, cover, obscure, or obliterate any mark required under the provisions of this act, he shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both."

SEC. 4. Subdivisions (1), (5), and (6) of section 308 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1308) are hereby amended to read as follows:

"(1) Articles to be repaired, altered, or otherwise changed in condition by processes which do not result in articles manufactured or produced in the United States;

"(5) Automobiles, motorcycles, bicycles, airplanes, airships, balloons, boats, racing shells, and similar vehicles and craft, teams and saddle horses, and the usual equipment of the foregoing; all the foregoing which are brought temporarily into the United States by nonresidents for the purpose of taking part in races or other specific contests, or for the transportation of such nonresidents, their families and guests, and such incidental carriage of articles as may be necessary and appropriate to the purposes of the journey, but not to be used for the transportation of persons or articles for hire nor in any case primarily for the carriage of articles (but nothing in this act shall be construed as altering the customary exceptions of vehicles and other instruments of international traffic from the application of the customs laws); and in the case of vehicles and craft entered under this subdivision collectors of customs may, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, defer the exaction of a bond for not to exceed 90 days (or 6 months in the case of such vehicles and craft from a country which accords a similar privilege to vehicles and craft from the United States) after the date of importation, but unless such vehicle or craft is exported or the bond is given within the period of such deferment, such vehicle or craft shall be subject to forfeiture;

"(6) Locomotives and other railroad equipment brought temporarily into the United States for use in clearing obstructions, fighting fires, or making emergency repairs on railroads within the United States, or for use in transportation otherwise than in international traffic when the Secretary of the Treasury finds that the temporary use of foreign railroad equipment is necessary to meet an emergency;".

and the period at the end of subdivision (8) is changed to a semicolon and a new subdivision is added at the end of such section 308 to read as follows:

"(9) Professional equipment, tools of trade, and camping equipment imported for their own use by nonresidents sojourning temporarily in the United States, and articles of special design for temporary use exclusively in connection with the manufacture or production of articles for export."

SEC. 5. Section 315 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1315) is hereby amended by deleting the proviso thereof, changing the colon preceding such proviso to a period, and adding at the end of such section the following: "Insofar as duties are based upon the quantity of any merchandise, such duties shall, except as provided in paragraph 813 and section 562 of this act (relating respectively to certain beverages and to manipulating warehouses), be levied and collected upon the quantity of such merchandise at the time of its importation. No administrative ruling resulting in the imposition of a higher rate of duty or charge than the Secretary of the Treasury shall find to have been applicable to imported merchandise under an established and uniform practice shall be effective with respect to articles entered for consumption or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption prior to the expiration of 30 days after the date of publication in the weekly Treasury Decisions of notice of such ruling; but this provision shall not apply with respect to the imposition of antidumping duties."

SEC. 6. The Tariff Act of 1930 is hereby amended by adding at the end of part I of title III thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 321. ADMINISTRATIVE EXEMPTIONS.

"Collectors of customs are hereby authorized, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, to disregard a difference of less than $1 between the total estimated duties or taxes deposited, or the total duties or taxes tentatively assessed, with respect to any entry of merchandise and the total amount of duties or taxes actually accruing thereon, and to admit articles free of duty when the expense and inconvenience of collecting the duty accruing thereon would be disproportionate to the amount of such duty, but the aggregate value of articles imported by one person on 1 day and exempted from the payment of duty under the authority of this section shall not exceed $5 in the case of articles accompanying, and for the personal or household use of, persons arriving in the United States, or $1 in any other case."

SEC. 7. Section 402 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1402) is hereby amended by inserting the words "for home consumption" after the words "freely offered for sale" in subsection (c), and by inserting the words "for domestic consumption" after the words "freely offered for sale" in subsections (e) and (g) and after the word "sold" in subsection (g).

SEC. 8. So much of the last sentence of section 451 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1451) as precedes the words "gives a bond in a penal sum to be fixed by the collector" is hereby amended to read as follows: "Upon a request made by the owner, master, or person in charge of a vessel or vehicle, or by or on behalf of a common carrier or by or on behalf of the owner or consignee of any merchandise or baggage, for overtime services of customs officers or employees at night or on a Sunday or holiday, the collector shall assign sufficient customs officers or employees if available to perform any such services which may lawfully be performed by them during regular hours of business, but only if the person requesting such services"; and the said section 451 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Nothing in this section shall be construed to impair the existing authority of the Treasury Department to assign customs officers or employees to regular tours of duty at nights or on Sundays or holidays when such assignments are in the public interest."

SEC. 9. (a) Section 459 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1459) is hereby amended by striking out the last two sentences of such section and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Any person importing or bringing merchandise into the United States from a contiguous country otherwise than in a vessel or vehicle shall immediately report his arrival to the customs officer at the port of entry or customhouse which shall be nearest to the place at which he shall cross the boundary line and shall present such merchandise to such customs officer for inspection."

(b) Section 460 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition title 19, sec. 1460) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 460. SAME—PENALTIES FOR FAILURE TO REPORT OR FILE MANIFEST.

"The master of any vessel or the person in charge of any vehicle who fails to report arrival in the United States as required by the preceding section, or if so reporting proceeds farther inland without a permit from the proper customs officer, shall be subject to a penalty of $100 for each offense. If any merchandise is imported or brought into the United States in any vessel or vehicle, or by any person otherwise than in a vessel or vehicle, from a contiguous country, which vessel, vehicle, or merchandise is not so reported to the proper customs officers; or if the master of such vessel or the person in charge of such vehicle fails to file a manifest for the merchandise carried therein, or discharges or lands such merchandise without a permit; such merchandise and the vessel or vehicle, if any, in which it was imported or brought into the United States shall be subject to forfeiture; and the master of such vessel or the person in charge of such vehicle, or the person importing or bringing in merchandise otherwise than in a vessel or vehicle, shall, in addition to any other penalty, be liable to a penalty equal to the value of the merchandise which was not reported, or not included in the manifest, or which was discharged or landed without a permit. If any vessel or vehicle not so reported carries any passenger; or if any passenger is discharged or landed from any such vessel or vehicle before it is so reported, or after such report but without a permit; the master of the vessel or the person in charge of the vehicle shall, in addition to any other penalty, be liable to a penalty of $500 for each passenger so carried, discharged, or landed."

SEC. 10. The Tariff Act of 1930 is hereby amended by adding at the end of part II of title IV thereof a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 467. SPECIAL INSPECTION, EXAMINATION, AND SEARCH.

"Whenever a vessel from a foreign port or place or from a port or place in any Territory or possession of the United States arrives at a port or place in the United States or the Virgin Islands, whether directly or via another port or place in the United States or the Virgin Islands, the collector of customs for such port or place of arrival may, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe and for the purpose of assuring compliance with any law, regulation, or instruction which the Secretary of the Treasury or the Customs Service is authorized to enforce, cause inspection, examination, and search to be made of the persons, baggage, and merchandise discharged or unladen from such vessel, whether or not any or all such persons, baggage, or merchandise has previously been inspected, examined, or searched by officers of the customs."

SEC. 11. The last sentence of subsection (f) of section 484 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1484) is hereby amended to read as follows: "All other merchandise arriving on one vessel or vehicle and consigned to one consignee shall be included in one entry, unless the Secretary of the Treasury shall authorize the inclusion of portions of such merchandise in separate entries under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe."

SEC. 12. (a) So much of section 491 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1491) as precedes the words "shall be considered unclaimed and abandoned" is hereby amended to read as follows: "Any entered or unentered merchandise (except merchandise entered under sec. 557 of this act, but including merchandise entered for transportation in bond or for exportation) which shall remain in customs custody for 1 year from the date of importation thereof, without all estimated duties and storage or other charges thereon having been paid,".

(b) Such section 491 is further amended by adding the following new sentences at the end thereof: "Merchandise subject to sale hereunder or under section 559 of this act may be entered or withdrawn for consumption at any time prior to such sale upon payment of all duties, storage, and other charges, and expenses that may have accrued thereon, but such merchandise, after becoming subject to sale, may not be exported prior to sale without the payment of such duties, charges, and expenses, nor may it be entered for warehouse. The computation of duties for the purposes of this section and sections 493 and 559 of this act shall be at the rate or rates applicable at the time the merchandise becomes subject to sale."

SEC. 13. Section 499 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1499) is hereby amended by striking out from the first sentence thereof the words "except as otherwise provided in this act" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "except under such bond or other security as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury to assure compliance with all applicable laws, regulations, and instructions which the Secretary of the Treasury or the Customs Service is authorized to enforce."

SEC. 14. (a) Section 499 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1499) is hereby further amended by inserting after the word "regulation" in the third sentence thereof the following: "or instruction, the application of which may be restricted to one or more individual ports or to one or more importations or one or more classes of merchandise,"; and by adding at the end of such section the following new paragraph:

"No appraisement shall be held invalid on the ground that the required number of packages or the required quantity of the merchandise was not designated for examination or, if designated, was not actually examined, unless the party claiming such invalidity shall establish that merchandise in the packages or quantities not designated for examination, or not actually examined, was different from that actually examined and that the difference was such as to establish the incorrectness of the appraiser's return of value; and then only as to the merchandise for which the value returned by the appraiser is shown to be incorrect."

(b) Section 501 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 19, sec. 1501) is hereby amended by striking out the fourth sentence of the first paragraph thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Every such appeal shall be transmitted with the entry and the accompanying papers by the collector to the United States Customs Court and shall be assigned to one of the judges, who shall in every case, after affording the parties an opportunity to be heard on the merits, determine the value of the merchandise from the evidence in the entry record and that adduced at the hearing. Appraising and examining officers shall be competent to testify at the hearing as to facts within their knowledge or obtained from records and memoranda made in the office of the appraiser with respect to the merchandise under consideration, or like or similar merchandise, and as to conclusions reached by them in the course of their official duties concerning the merchandise notwithstanding that the original appraisement may for any reason be held invalid or void and that the merchandise or samples thereof be not available for reexamination."; and such section 501 is further amended by designating the present two paragraphs thereof as subsections (a) and (b), respectively, and by adding after such subsections a new subsection (c) to read as follows:

"(c) If in the final determination of a protest, the appraisement of merchandise is found to have been invalid, the proper dutiable value of such merchandise shall be determined by the United States Customs Court in the manner provided for by this section."

SEC. 15. (a) Subsection (b) of section 516 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 19, sec. 1516 (b)) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) Classification: The Secretary of the Treasury shall, upon written request by an American manufacturer, producer, or wholesaler, furnish the classification of, and the rate of duty, if any, imposed upon, designated imported merchandise of a class or kind manufactured, produced, or sold at wholesale by him. If such manufacturer, producer, or wholesaler believes that the proper rate of duty is not being assessed, he may file a complaint with the Secretary, setting forth a description of the merchandise, the classification, and the rate or rates of duty he believes proper, and the reasons for his belief. If the Secretary decides that the classification of, or rate of duty assessed upon, the merchandise is not correct, he shall notify the collectors as to the proper classification and rate of duty and shall so inform the complainant, and such rate of duty shall be assessed upon all such merchandise entered for consumption or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption after 30 days after the date such notice to the collectors is published in the weekly Treasury Decisions. If the Secretary decides that the classification and rate of duty are correct, he shall so inform the complainant. If dissatisfied with the decision of the Secretary, the complainant may file with the Secretary, not later than 30 days after the date of such decision, notice that he desires to protest the classification of, or rate of duty assessed upon, the merchandise. Upon receipt of such notice from the complainant, the Secretary shall cause publication to be made of his decision as to the proper classification and rate of duty and of the complainant's desire to protest, and shall thereafter furnish the complainant with such information as to the entries and consignees of such merchandise, entered after the publication of the decision of the Secretary at the port of entry designated by the complainant in his notice of desire to protest, as will enable the complainant to protest the classification of, or rate of duty imposed upon, such merchandise in the liquidation of such an entry at such port. The Secretary shall direct the collector at such port to notify such complainant immediately when the first of such entries is liquidated. Within 30 days after the date of mailing to the complainant of notice of such liquidation, the complainant may file with the collector at such port a protest in writing setting forth a description of the merchandise and the classification and rate of duty he believes proper. Notwithstanding such protest is filed, merchandise of the character covered by the published decision of the Secretary, when entered for consumption or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption on or before the date of publication of a decision of the United States Customs Court or of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, rendered under the provisions of subsection (c) of this section, not in harmony with the published decision of the Secretary, shall be classified and the entries liquidated in accordance with such decision of the Secretary, and, except as otherwise provided in this act, the liquidations of such entries shall be final and conclusive upon all parties. If the protest of the complainant is sustained in whole or in part by a decision of the United States Customs Court or of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, merchandise of the character covered by the published decision of the Secretary, which is entered for consumption or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption after the date of publication of such court decision, shall be subject to classification and assessment of duty in accordance with the final judicial decision on the complainant's protest, and the liquidation of entries covering such merchandise so entered or withdrawn shall be suspended until final disposition is made of such protest, whereupon such entries shall be liquidated, or if necessary, reliquidated in accordance with such final decision."

(b) The provisions of subsection (b) of section 516 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by this act, shall apply only in the case of complaints filed after the effective date of this act. The provisions of subsection (b) of section 516 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as in force prior to the effective date of this act, shall continue in force with respect to any proceedings commenced thereunder, except that upon the expiration of 30 days after the effective date of this act, or upon the expiration of 30 days after the date of a decision of the Secretary adverse to the complainant, whichever is the later, any such proceedings in which a protest has not been duly filed shall be deemed to have been terminated unless the complainant shall have filed with the Secretary after the effective date of this act a notice that he desires to protest the classification of, or rate of duty assessed upon, the merchandise.

(c) The provisions of subsection (b) of section 516 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by this act, shall not apply with respect to any article of a class or kind which is named or described in any obligation undertaken by the United States in a foreign trade agreement entered into under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1351).

SEC. 16. Section 520 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1520), as amended by section 2 of the Permanent Appropriation Repeal Act, 1934 (U. S. C., 134 edition, title 31, sec. 725a), is hereby further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 520. REFUNDS AND ERRORS.

"(a) The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to refund duties or other receipts in the following cases:

"(1) Excess deposits: Whenever it is ascertained on liquidation or reliquidation of an entry that more money has been deposited or paid as duties than was required by law to be so deposited or paid;

"(2) Fees, charges, and exactions: Whenever it is determined in the manner required by law that any fees, charges, or exactions, other than duties and taxes, have been erroneously or excessively collected; and

"(3) Fines, penalties, and forfeitures: Whenever money has been deposited in the Treasury on account of a fine, penalty, or forfeiture which did not accrue, or which is finally determined to have accrued in an amount less than that so deposited, or which is mitigated to an amount less than that so deposited or is remitted.

"(b) The necessary moneys to make such refunds are hereby authorized to be appropriated annually from the general fund of the Treasury.

"(c) Notwithstanding a valid protest was not filed, the Secretary of the Treasury may authorize a collector to reliquidate an entry to correct—

"(1) A clerical error in any entry or liquidation discovered within 1 year after the date of entry, or within 60 days after liquidation when liquidation is made more than 10 months after the date of entry; or

"(2) Any assessment of duty on household or personal effects which by law were not subject to duty and in respect of which an application for refund has been filed with the collector within 1 year after the date of entry."

SEC. 17. (a) Section 1 of the act of June 19, 1886, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 46, sec. 331), is hereby further amended by adding a comma and the following words after the words "Measurement of tonnage and certifying the same" and before the semicolon in the first sentence thereof: "except that the compensation and necessary travel and subsistence expenses of the officers so measuring or certifying such vessels at the request of the owners thereof at a place other than a port of entry or a customs station shall be paid by such owners."

(b) Section 524 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1524) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"Receipts for any reimbursable charges or expenses which have been paid for out of any appropriation for collecting the revenue from customs shall be deposited as a refund to such appropriation instead of being covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, as provided by the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for other purposes', approved March 4, 1907."

SEC. 18. The Tariff Act of 1930 is hereby amended by adding at the end of part III of title IV thereof a new section, to read as follows:

"SEC. 528. TAXES NOT TO BE CONSTRUED AS DUTIES.

"No tax or other charge imposed by or pursuant to any law of the United States shall be construed to be a customs duty for the purpose of any statute relating to the customs revenue, unless the law imposing such tax or charge designates it as a customs duty or contains a provision to the effect that it shall be treated as a duty imposed under the customs laws."

SEC. 19. Section 553 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1553) is hereby amended by adding the following at the end thereof: "In places where no bonded common-carrier facilities are reasonably available, such merchandise may be so transported otherwise than by a bonded common carrier under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. If such merchandise consists of a motor vehicle or chassis therefor, it may, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, be entered for transit through the United States to a foreign country, under its own power or otherwise, without appraisement or the payment of duties. No vehicle or chassis entered under the authority of this section shall be used while in transit for the carriage of merchandise or passengers for hire."

SEC. 20. (a) Section 557 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1557) is hereby further amended by inserting before the colon preceding the proviso in the first paragraph thereof the words "or for transfer to another bonded warehouse at the same port"; by eliminating the phrase "99 percent of" from the last sentence of the said paragraph; by designating the present paragraphs thereof as subsections (a) and (c), respectively; and by inserting between such subsections a new subsection (b) to read as follows:

"(b) The right to withdraw any merchandise entered in accordance with subsection (a) of this section for the purposes specified in such subsection may be transferred upon compliance with regulations prescribed by the Secertary of the Treasury. So long as any such transfer remains unrevoked the transferee shall have, with respect to the merchandise the subject of the transfer, all rights to file protests, and to the privileges provided for in this section and in sections 562 and 563 of this act which would otherwise be possessed by the transferor. The transferee shall also have the right to receive all lawful refunds of moneys paid by him to the United States with respect to the merchandise and no revocation of any transfer shall deprive him of this right. Any such transfer may be made irrevocable by the filing of a bond of the transferee in such amount and with such conditions as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, including an obligation to pay all unpaid regular, increased, and additional duties, charges, and exactions on the merchandise the subject of the transfer. Upon the filing of such bond the transferor shall be relieved from liability for the payment of duties, charges, and exactions on the merchandise the subject of the transfer, but shall remain bound by all other unsatisfied conditions of his bond."

(b) On and after the effective date of this act, this section shall be effective with respect to merchandise entered for warehouse prior to, as well as after, such date.

SEC. 21. (a) Section 557 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 19, sec. 1557) is hereby further amended and sections 559 and 563 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 19, secs. 1559 and 1563) are hereby amended by deleting "(or 10 months in the case of grain)" wherever appearing in such sections.

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) of this section shall apply in the case of grain imported prior to the effective date of this act which, on such date, has not become abandoned to the Government under section 491 or 559 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 19, sec. 1491 or 1559), and which has remained in the custody of customs officers.

SEC. 22. Section 558 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 19, sec. 1558) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 558. NO REMISSION OR REFUND AFTER RELEASE OF MERCHANDISE.

"(a) No remission, abatement, refund, or drawback of estimated or liquidated duty shall be allowed because of the exportation or destruction of any merchandise after its release from the custody of the Government, except in the following cases:

"(1) When articles are exported with respect to which a drawback of duties is expressly provided for by law;

"(2) When prohibited articles have been regularly entered in good faith and are subsequently exported or destroyed pursuant to a law of the United States and under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe; and

"(3) When articles entered under bond, under any provision of law, are destroyed within the bonded period as provided for in section 557 of this act, or are destroyed within the bonded period by death, accidental fire, or other casualty, and proof of such destruction is furnished which shall be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury, in which case any accrued duties shall be remitted or refunded and any condition in the bond that the articles shall be exported shall be deemed to have been satisfied.

"(b) When articles are exported or destroyed under customs supervision after once having been released from customs custody, as provided for in subsection (c) of section 304 of this act, such exportation or destruction shall not exempt such articles from the payment of duties other than the marking duty provided for in such subsection (c)."

SEC. 23. So much of section 598 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1598) as precedes the first semicolon therein is hereby amended to read as follows: "If any unauthorized person affixes, attaches, or in any way willfully assists or encourages the affixing or attaching of a customs seal, fastening, or mark, or any seal, fastening, or mark purporting to be a customs seal, fastening, or mark to any vessel, vehicle, warehouse, or package."

SEC. 24. Section 603 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1603) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 603. SAME—COLLECTOR'S REPORTS.

"Whenever a seizure of merchandise for violation of the customs laws is made, or a violation of the customs laws is discovered, and legal proceedings by the United States attorney in connection with such seizure or discovery are required, it shall be the duty of the collector or the principal local officer of the Customs Agency Service to report such seizure or violation to the United States attorney for the district in which such violation has occurred, or in which such seizure was made, and to include in such report a statement of all the facts and circumstances of the case within his knowledge, with the names of the witnesses and a citation to the statute or statutes believed to have been violated, and on which reliance may be had for forfeiture or conviction."

(b) Section 609 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1609) is hereby amended by adding the words "or otherwise dispose of the same according to law" after the words "in the same manner as merchandise abandoned to the United States is sold."

SEC. 26. Section 613 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1613) is hereby amended by inserting the word "and" after the semicolon at the end of subdivision (2) thereof, by deleting subdivision (3) thereof, and by redesignating subdivision (4) thereof as subdivision (3).

SEC. 27. Section 623 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1623) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 623. BONDS AND OTHER SECURITY.

"(a) In any case in which bond or other security is not specifically required by law, the Secretary of the Treasury may by regulation or specific instruction require, or authorize collectors of customs to require, such bonds or other security as he, or they, may deem necessary for the protection of the revenue or to assure compliance with any provision of law, regulation, or instruction which the Secretary of the Treasury or the Customs Service may be authorized to enforce.

"(b) Whenever a bond is required or authorized by a law, regulation, or instruction which the Secretary of the Treasury or the Customs Service is authorized to enforce, the Secretary of the Treasury may—

"(1) Except as otherwise specifically provided by law, prescribe the conditions and form of such bond, and fix the amount of penalty thereof, whether for the payment of liquidated damages or of a penal sum: Provided, That when a consolidated bond authorized by paragraph 4 of this subsection is taken, the Secretary of the Treasury may fix the penalty of such bond without regard to any other provision of law, regulation, or instruction.

"(2) Provide for the approval of the sureties on such bond, without regard to any general provision of law.

"(3) Authorize the execution of a term bond the conditions of which shall extend to and cover similar cases of importations over such period of time, not to exceed 1 year, or such longer period as he may fix when in his opinion special circumstances existing in a particular instance require such longer period.

"(4) Authorize, to the extent that he may deem necessary, the taking of a consolidated bond (single entry or term), in lieu of separate bonds to assure compliance with two or more provisions of law, regulations, or instructions which the Secretary of the Treasury or the Customs Service is authorized to enforce. A consolidated bond taken pursuant to the authority contained in this subsection shall have the same force and effect in respect of every provision of law, regulation, or instruction for the purposes for which it is required as though separate bonds had been taken to assure compliance with each such provision.

"(c) The Secretary of the Treasury may authorize the cancellation of any bond provided for in this section, or of any charge that may have been made against such bond, in the event of a breach of any condition of the bond, upon the payment of such lesser amount or penalty or upon such other terms and conditions as he may deem sufficient.

"(d) No condition in any bond taken to assure compliance with any law, regulation, or instruction which the Secretary of the Treasury or the Customs Service is authorized to enforce shall be held invalid on the ground that such condition is not specified in the law, regulation, or instruction authorizing or requiring the taking of such bond.

"(e) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to permit the deposit of money or obligations of the United States, in such amount and upon such conditions as he may by regulation prescribe, in lieu of any bond required or authorized by a law, regulation, or instruction which the Secretary of the Treasury or the Customs Service is authorized to enforce."

SEC. 28. (a) Paragraph 1101 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1001, par. 1101) is hereby amended by redesignating subparagraph (b) thereof as subparagraph (c), by changing the colon at the end of the first proviso in subparagraph (a) thereof to a period and deleting all the matter in such subparagraph (a) following such colon, and by inserting in such paragraph a new subparagraph (b), to read as follows:

"(b) Any of the foregoing may be entered or withdrawn from warehouse without the payment of duty by a manufacturer, processor, or dealer upon the filing of a bond to insure that any wool or hair entered or withdrawn thereunder shall be used only in the manufacture of press cloth, camel's hair belting, knit or felt boots, heavy fulled lumbermen's socks, rugs, carpets, or any other floor coverings. A manufacturer, processor, or dealer may be relieved of liability under his bond with respect to any wool or hair so entered or withdrawn which is transferred in its imported or any other form to another manufacturer, processor, or dealer who has filed a bond to insure that the merchandise so transferred shall be used only in the manufacture of the above-enumerated articles. If any wool or hair so entered, withdrawn, or transferred under bond is used or transferred for use in its imported or any other form in any manner otherwise than in the manufacture of the articles enumerated above, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on the merchandise so used or transferred in violation of the bond the regular duties which would apply to such merchandise if imported in its condition at the time of such use or transfer. Such duties shall be paid by the manufacturer, processor, or dealer whose bond is charged with the wool or hair at the time of such use or transfer; but such duties shall not be levied or collected on any merchandise resulting in the usual course of manufacture of such enumerated manufactured articles which cannot be used (with or without further preparation) in the usual course of the manufacture of such enumerated articles, nor on noils resulting in the usual course of manufacture of such enumerated articles, which noils shall be subject to duty at the rate which was being applied on July 1, 1937, when used or transferred for use in any manner otherwise than in the manufacture of such enumerated articles. When any wool or hair which has been entered or withdrawn under bond as provided for in this subparagraph is used or transferred for use, in its imported or any other form, otherwise than in the manufacture of the above-enumerated articles and prior to such use or transfer there shall have been combined or mixed with such wool or hair any other merchandise, the whole or the combination or mixture shall be presumed to be composed of wool or hair entered or withdrawn under bond, as provided for in this subparagraph, unless the manufacturer, processor, or dealer liable for the payment of the duties shall establish the quantity of bonded wool or hair in such combination or mixture. Every manufacturer, processor, or dealer who has given a bond pursuant to the provisions of this subparagraph shall report any use or transfer of merchandise in violation of the terms of his bond, within 30 days after such use or transfer, to the collector of customs in whose district the bond is filed; and for failure to so report, such manufacturer, processor, or dealer shall be liable to a penalty equal to the value of the merchadise so used or transferred at the time and place of such use or transfer. Such penalty shall be in addition to the duties above provided for. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prescribe such regulations and the form, conditions, and amounts of such bonds as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this subparagraph."

(b) The provisions of paragraph 1101 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by this act, with respect to wool or hair entered under bond for use in the manufacture of articles enumerated in such paragraph, shall apply with respect to wool or hair under bond on the effective date of this act, as well as with respect to wool or hair thereafter imported.

SEC. 29. Paragraph 1111 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1001, par. 1111) is hereby amended by deleting therefrom the phrase "of blanketing."

SEC. 30. Section 314 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1314) is hereby repealed, and paragraph 1615 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 19, sec. 1201, par. 1615) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"PAR. 1615. (a) Articles, the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, when returned after having been exported, without having been advanced in value or improved in condition by any process of manufacture or other means.

"(b) Steel boxes, casks, barrels, carboys, bags, quicksilver flasks or bottles, metal drums, and other substantial outer containers of domestic or foreign manufacture, exported empty and returned as usual containers or coverings of merchandise, or exported filled with products of the United States and returned empty or as the usual containers or coverings of merchandise, including shooks and staves when returned as boxes or barrels in use as the usual containers of merchandise.

"(c) Photographic dry plates and films of the manufacture of the United States (except moving-picture films to be used for commercial purposes), exposed abroad, whether developed or not.

"(d) Photographic films light struck or otherwise damaged, or worn out, so as to be unsuitable for any other purposes than the recovery of the constituent materials, provided the basic films are of the manufacture of the United States.

"(e) The foregoing provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to—

"(1) Any article upon which an allowance of draw-back has been made under section 313 of this act or a corresponding provision of a prior tariff act, unless such article is in use at the time of importation as the usual container or covering of merchandise not subject to an ad-valorem rate of duty;

"(2) Any article of a kind with respect to the importation of which an internal-revenue tax is imposed at the time such article is entered for consumption or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, unless such article was subject to an internal-revenue tax imposed upon production or importation at the time of its exportation from the United States and it shall be proved that such tax was paid before exportation and not refunded;

"(3) Any article manufactured or produced in a customs bonded warehouse in the United States and exported under any provision of law; or

"(4) Any article made dutiable under the provisions of paragraph 1606 (c) of this act.

"(f) Upon the entry for consumption or withdrawal from warehouse for consumption of any article previously exported, which is excepted from free entry under this paragraph by the foregoing subparagraph (e) and is not otherwise exempted from the payment of duty, there shall be levied, collected, and paid thereon, in lieu of any other duty or tax, a duty equal to the total duty and internal-revenue tax, if any, then imposed with respect to the importation of like articles not previously exported from the United States, but in no case in excess of the sum of customs draw-back, if any, proved to have been allowed upon the exportation of such article from the United States plus the amount of the internal-revenue tax, if any, imposed at the time such article is entered for consumption or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption upon the importation of like articles not previously exported from the United States. Manufactured tobacco subject to duty hereunder shall be retained in customs custody until internal-revenue stamps in payment of any part of the legal duties measured by a rate or amount of internal-revenue tax shall have been placed thereon.

"(g) Any article exported from the United States for repairs or alterations may be returned upon the payment of a duty upon the value of the repairs or alterations at the rate or rates which would apply to the article itself in its repaired or altered condition if not within the purview of this subparagraph.

"(h) The allowance of total or partial exemption from duty under any provision of this paragraph shall be subject to such regulations as to proof of identity and compliance with the conditions of this paragraph as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe."

SEC. 31. Paragraph 1798 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. II, title 19, sec. 1201, par. 1798), is hereby further amended by striking out the third and fourth provisos thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Provided further, That up to but not exceeding $100 in value of articles (including distilled spirits, wines, and malt liquors aggregating not more than 1 wine gallon) acquired abroad by such residents of the United States as an incident of the foreign journey for personal or household use or as souvenirs or curios, but not bought on commission or intended for sale, shall be free of duty: Provided further, That the exemption authorized by the preceding proviso shall apply only to articles declared in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury by a returning resident who has remained beyond the territorial limits of the United States for a period of not less than 48 hours and who has not taken advantage of the said exemption within the 30-day period immediately preceding his return to the United States: And provided further, That all articles exempted by this paragraph from the payment of duty shall also be exempt from the payment of any internal-revenue taxes."

SEC. 32. Except as otherwise specially provided herein, this act shall take effect on the thirtieth day following the date of its enactment.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the bill H. R. 8099 is a bill to amend certain administrative provisions of the Tariff Act of 1930 and for other purposes. Before proceeding further with regard to the bill, may I say there is no tariff contained in this bill. We were very particular not to impose any tariff legislation in this bill. It is merely an effort to simplify the rules and regulations in the administration of the act.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLEN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. In other words, it does not increase or decrease any rates or duties; neither does it take any item off the free list and put it on the dutiable list or take any item off the dutiable list and put it on the free list?

Mr. CULLEN. The gentleman is correct. We were very particular about that.

We have a very comprehensive report on this bill, to which I would like to direct the attention of the membership. There are 16 or 17 amendments to the rules and regulations of the Treasury Department, and an explanation is given in detail with reference to how we change them. When we bring before you this bill, and the title speaks about tariff, as a matter of fact, there is no tariff contained in it. We were very particular in regard to that.

Mr. BEITER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BEITER. I have had inquiry as to whether this will affect, for instance, in my own district a bridge between the United States and Canada.

Mr. CULLEN. It does, and I promised the gentleman from New York that we would offer a clarifying amendment.

Mr. BEITER. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. CULLEN. There was another amendment suggested by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE], who spoke to me about a certain amendment, and I told him that we would take it up with the Senate Finance Committee. The gentleman from New York, my colleague [Mr. ANDREWS], also suggested an amendment.

Mr. PIERCE. When will the amendment be taken up?

Mr. CULLEN. As soon as I can get it over to the Finance Committee of the Senate.

Mr. ANDREWS. I may say I have a copy of the amendment and I will offer it.

Mr. CULLEN. Will that satisfy the gentleman with reference to the bridge at Buffalo?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLEN. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. I have submitted to the gentleman from New York an amendment to strike out subdivision (j) of subsection 3 of section 304, on page 4.

Mr. CULLEN. Yes; I have that amendment.

Mr. MOTT. Is that the same amendment my colleague the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE] has submitted?

Mr. CULLEN. It is practically the same kind of an amendment. I promise the gentleman these amendments will be considered in the Finance Committee of the Senate.

Mr. MOTT. Do I understand the gentleman from New York has no objection himself to striking out this particular section in the other body?

Mr. CULLEN. No; none whatever, because the Treasury Department has practically agreed on it.

This bill contains nothing but a revision of the rules and regulations in the customs law. There is not a suggestion of any kind in regard to a tariff because we were very particular about that.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, the northwest lumber industry is and has been seriously confronted with promiscuous importation of unmarked lumber. The Tariff Act of 1930 requires imported lumber to be marked so as to identify the country of origin. This provision has not been enforced strenuously. The Treasury Department finds difficulty in enforcing it, due to some reasons over which it has no control and due to other reasons not known. The present bill has a provision allowing the Treasury Department to allow unmarked lumber, if it has been coming in for 5 years unmarked, to continue to come in. This would directly apply to lumber. I object to this provision. The rules do not allow me to amend. I have the assurance of the members of the committee in charge that they will strike out the provision in the Senate Finance Committee. I take them at their word. Were the provision not out, it would be injurious to the lumber industry of the Pacific Northwest. Without the provision, it is a good bill and helps simplify customs' matters. With the assurance of the gentlemen of the committee, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLEN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will this bill simplify procedure? In other words, will it help the businessman to expedite his business with the customs officials?

Mr. CULLEN. That is just the purpose of this bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. I think the bill ought to be passed by a unanimous vote.

Mr. CULLEN. This is to help manufacturers and all kinds of businessmen. It helps the business world generally.

Mr. COCHRAN. I think this will simplify the procedure considerably.

Mr. CULLEN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] has stated what I wanted to talk about, that the old rules and regulations under which the Treasury Department has been working are obsolete. They are half a century old.

Mr. COCHRAN. This is exactly what the people are complaining about. It takes them too long to go through the required procedure and they have to fill out too many reports in order to secure goods which are shipped in to them, even under bond.

Mr. CULLEN. The gentleman is absolutely correct. This bill cures all that, and that is all it does. That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLEN. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. May I suggest that the bill goes further than that in subdivision (j). The present law requires all imported lumber to be marked.

Mr. CULLEN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MOTT. Subdivision (j), to which I object, provides that if a commodity has been imported in substantial quantities for a period of 5 years all the Secretary has to do is to publish this fact in the Treasury Decisions and the law then is repealed as far as that commodity is concerned. Therefore the effect is that an order of the Secretary of the Treasury may legalize a 5-year violation of the law and repeal the law.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLEN. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. COOPER. I am sure the gentleman will point out, if he has not already done so, that this bill comes with a unanimous report from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CULLEN. The gentleman is correct. I overlooked stating that.

I may say further that the purpose of this bill is to facilitate efficient administration of the customs laws. It cannot be termed an importers' bill, nor can it be termed a domestic manufacturers' bill. Neither group was consulted in connection with the drafting of this measure. Such benefits as will accrue to either group are purely incidental to an increase in administrative efficiency.

In answer to the charge that this is an importers' bill I shall cite some of the advantages which domestic manufacturers will derive under it.

One provision of the bill—section 3 (G)—exempts from the marking requirements articles which are to be processed otherwise than for the purpose of concealing their origin and where the mark would necessarily be destroyed in the process of manufacture. If cotton fabric, for example, is imported by an American manufacturer for his own use in the manufacture of automobile tires, marking of that fabric does not serve the purpose of informing the ultimate consumer of its origin. The marking requirements under existing law have been a source of great inconvenience to American manufacturers. Heavy penalties have been assessed against them in many cases because raw materials which they imported were not properly marked, although marking in such cases would serve no useful purpose.

Another provision of the bill—section 4—extends the privilege of temporary free importation under bond to include articles of special design for temporary use exclusively in connection with the manufacture of articles for export. Here is an illustration of that. An American manufacturer had a foreign order and had to send abroad to get a pattern. The foreign purchaser supplied the pattern at a cost of $3,000. But the American manufacturer had to pay $1,000 duty—33⅓-percent ad valorem—on an article to be used solely for filling foreign orders and then exported. Section 4 would permit an American manufacturer to bring in such a pattern without payment of duty, under a bond conditioned upon its exportation when he had completed the use of it, and thus give increased employment to American labor.

Another provision of the bill—section 31—amends existing law relating to the free entry of articles not exceeding $100 in value brought in by returning residents so as to require absence from the United States for not less than 48 hours before the privilege of free entry may be enjoyed. This will prove of great benefit both to American manufacturers and retailers. It will prevent the abuse of the exemption privilege by residents along our borders who cross the line solely for the purpose of making foreign purchases. Last year at the port of Detroit alone the total exemptions during a representative week were over $97,000. This provision of the bill has been endorsed by the American Retail Federation, the National Retail Dry Goods Association, and the Detroit Retail Merchants' Association.

Another provision of the bill—section 21—eliminates the existing 10-months' limitation on the storage of imported grain in bonded warehouses and extends the permissible storage period to 3 years. This will benefit American interests at such ports as Portland, Maine, and Buffalo, N. Y., since it will encourage the storage and exportation at those ports of grain which now moves through Canadian ports. This section will bring into use grain elevators which are now idle and stimulate our maritime activity in general. It was inserted in the bill at the request of a Republican Member of the House, Congressman OLIVER, of Maine.

The examples that I have cited are just a few of the ways in which this bill will benefit domestic industry. It will, of course, likewise benefit importers. It is significant that representatives of both domestic industry and importers appeared at the hearings to testify in favor of various of its provisions.

But in conclusion I wish to repeat that this bill was designed primarily to eliminate difficulties which the Treasury Department now meets in its administration of the customs laws, and that it is neither an importers' nor a domestic manufacturers' bill.

AMENDMENTS TO H. R. 6738, THE "CUSTOMS ADMINISTRATIVE ACT, 1937", ADOPTED BY THE SUBCOMMITTEE

First. In section 2 the words "Kingman Reef" are inserted following the words "Midway Islands." The Pan American Airways expect to establish a station at Kingman Reef, and it is desirable to exempt this station from customs administration along with the Midway and Wake Islands groups.

Second. In section 3 (a) the words "in a conspicuous place" are inserted following the word "marked", so as to make the wording conform with existing law.

Third. Section 3 (a) is further amended to make it clear that the marking requirements are mandatory. This amendment was suggested by Mr. MCCORMACK.

Fourth. Section 3 (b) is amended by providing that where articles are excepted from the marking requirements the usual containers shall also be excepted.

Fifth. Section 3 (c) is amended by the insertion of the words "as provided in subsection (b) hereof", following the word "container" where it occurs so as to make it clear that merely marking an empty container would not satisfy the law.

Sixth. Section 4 is amended so as to permit the Secretary to defer requiring a bond for 6 months in the case of any automobile or boat entering the United States from any country which accords a similar privilege to automobiles and boats from the United States. This amendment was proposed by Mr. CULLEN and incorporates suggestions of the Hotel Association.

Seventh. Section 8 is amended so as to assure the payment of overtime compensation in all cases to customs employees who perform customs services for private parties outside of regular hours of business. This amendment was proposed by Mr. MCCORMACK, and includes certain suggestions of the customs employees.

Eighth. Section 12 (a) is amended by inserting the word "estimated" before the word "duties." This is merely a technical perfecting amendment.

Ninth. Section 14 (b) is amended so as to permit appraising and examining officers to testify as to facts obtained from memoranda made in the office of the appraiser and as to conclusions reached by them in the course of their official duties. This permits appraising and examining officers to testify at a hearing before the customs court where they have no samples, but where it is desirable to permit them to give conclusions and certain facts of which they may have knowledge.

Tenth. Section 15 (b) is amended by substituting "date of mailing to the complainant of notice of such liquidation" for "date of such liquidation." This gives the complainant 30 days, approximately, after he is notified that the entry has been liquidated to file his protest rather than 30 days after the date of liquidation.

Eleventh. Section 19 is amended so as to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to permit the transit through the United States otherwise than by bonded common carriers of motor vehicles and chassis of such vehicles. This will permit manufacturers and dealers to transfer automobiles between foreign points through the United States by the modern drive-away and trailer methods by which the vehicles are moved under their own power or in special auto vans. This amendment was suggested by Mr. DINGELL.

Twelfth. Section 20 of the bill is amended so as to authorize the refund of full duties when merchandise is exported on which duties have been paid and which has remained continuously in customs custody while in this country. The change will eliminate an administrative problem and make the provision affected conform with the provision of the present law authorizing the refund of 100 percent of duties when duty-paid merchandise is destroyed under customs supervision.

Thirteenth. A new section 21, which was inserted, eliminates the provision in existing law (first adopted in the 1930 Tariff Act) limiting the storage of imported grain in bonded warehouses to a period of 10 months. It will thus place imported grain in the same status as other imported merchandise by extending the permissible storage period in bonded warehouses to 3 years. The 10 months' limitation was originally adopted to afford more storage space for domestic grain. In recent years with smaller crops there has been little justification for the limitation. Section 21 will apply to grain imported prior to its effective date as well as thereafter. This amendment was proposed by Congressmen OLIVER, of Maine, and MEAD and BEITER, of New York. It should prove beneficial to the ports of Buffalo, N. Y., and Portland, Maine.

Fourteenth. Section 27 (a) of the old bill (section 28 (a) of the new bill) is amended so as to eliminate the provision which placed the burden of proof upon the carpet manufacturers to establish the status of the wastes. This amendment was proposed by Mr. MCCORMACK.

Fifteenth. Section 27 (a) of the old bill (sec. 28 (a) of the new bill) is further amended by substituting the words "usual course of" in lieu of "except at an expense which is commercially prohibitive of such use." This amendment was agreed upon at a conference between representatives of the carpet manufacturers and officials of the Treasury Department.

Sixteenth. Section 27 (b) of the old bill (section 28 (b) of the new bill) is amended by striking out "imported prior to" and inserting "under bond on." This amendment, which was proposed by Mr. MCCORMACK, makes it clear that this section will apply to wool imported prior to the effective date only if such wool is under bond on that date.

Seventeenth. A new section 29 which was inserted eliminates the phrase "of blanketing" from paragraph 1111 of the Tariff Act of 1930. This will correct a ruling of the customs courts holding that steamer rugs were excluded from classification under paragraph 1111 because the blanketing material of which they were composed had had no separate existence as blanketing before the rugs were made. The change will continue the administrative practice of several years and effect the original intent of the Congress. This amendment was proposed by Mr. MCCORMACK.

Eighteenth. Sections 30 and 31 of the old bill are stricken out.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS].

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, the provisions of section 8 of this act in amendment of section 451 of the Tariff Act of 1930 would permit the Treasury Department or the Bureau of Customs, should it so desire, to charge overtime at all international bridges, both public and private, to the bridge companies themselves. This would affect the bridges at Brownsville, El Paso, Detroit, Buffalo, Niagara Falls, and in the St. Lawrence region. This situation was brought to the attention of Members of Congress thus involved. We have no fault to find with the bill because we were assured by the gentleman in charge of this bill, Mr. CULLEN, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] and also by representatives of the Treasury Department that there is no intent on the part of the Treasury Department to interfere with the present method of handling matters at the bridges.

Mr. CULLEN. May I say to the gentleman that his statement is absolutely true. This will cure that defect.

Mr. ANDREWS. For the purpose of making it a matter of record, I understand these gentlemen will favor an amendment by the Senate, and those concerned have drawn an amendment to the bill which would come in at the end of section 8 after the words "public interests" and which will correct the situation.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD the suggested amendment, with which we are all in agreement.

Mr. CULLEN. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS. Copy of amendment to section 8 of H. R. 8099 as proposed and agreed upon:

At the end of section 8, after the words "public interest", insert the following: "or to authorize the collection of overtime compensation for services of a kind which were being regularly performed by customs officers or employees assigned to regular tours of duty at nights or on Sundays or holidays in connection with international traffic over ferries or highway bridges or through highway tunnels on July 1, 1937, and which shall hereafter be performed in connection with such traffic."

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by quoting the law thus affected, and showing the effect of this proposed amendment and what the situation would be with the passage of the amendment by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS. Section 450 of the Tariff Act of 1930 provides as follows:

Unlading on Sundays, holidays, or at night. No merchandise, baggage, or passengers arriving in the United States from any foreign port or place, and no bonded merchandise or baggage being transported from one port to another, shall be unladen from the carrying vessel or vehicle on Sunday, a holiday, or at night, except under special license granted by the collector under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe. (June 17, 1930, ch. 497, title IV, 450, 46 Stat. 715.)

It is proposed to amend section 451 as follows:

SEC. 451. Same.—Extra compensation: Before any such special license to unlade shall be granted, the master, owner, or agent of such vessel or vehicle shall be required to give a bond in the penal sum to be fixed by the collector conditioned to indemnify the United States for any loss or liability which might occur or be occasioned by reason of the granting of such special license and to pay the compensation and expenses of the customs officers and employees assigned to duty in connection with such unlading at night or on Sunday or a holiday, in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the lading or unlading of vessels at night, the preliminary entry of vessels, and for other purposes", approved February 13, 1911, as amended. In lieu of such bond the owner, or agent, of any vessel or vehicle or line of vessels or vehicles may execute a bond in a penal sum to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury to cover and include the issuance of special licenses for the unlading of vessels or vehicles belonging to such line for a period of 1 year from the date thereof. (At the request of the master, owner, or agent of any vessel the collector shall assign customs officers and employees to duty at night or on Sunday or a holiday in connection with the entering or clearing of such vessel, or the issuing and recording of its marine documents, bills of sale, mortgages, or other instruments of title, but only if the master, owner, or agent.) Upon a request made by the owner, master, or person in charge of a vessel or vehicle, or by or on behalf of a common carrier or by or on behalf of the owner or consignee of any merchandise or baggage, for overtime services of customs officers or employees at night or on a Sunday or holiday, the collector shall assign sufficient customs officers or employees if available to perform any such services which may lawfully be performed by them during regular hours of business, but only if the person requesting such services gives a bond in a penal sum to be fixed by the collector, conditioned to pay the compensation and expenses of such customs officers and employees, who shall be entitled to rates of compensation fixed on the same basis and payable in the same manner and upon the same terms and conditions as in the case of customs officers and employees assigned to duty in connection with lading or unlading at night or on Sunday or a holiday. Nothing in this section shall be construed to impair the existing authority of the Treasury Department to assign customs officers or employees to regular tours of duty at nights or on Sundays or holidays when such assignments are in the public interest.

If the proposed amendment to section 451 of the Tariff Act of 1930 shall become a law the Treasury Department may impose upon international bridges the obligation to pay overtime of customs employees. For proper consideration of the proposed amendment it is essential to consider section 5 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the lading or unlading of vessels at night, the preliminary entry of vessels, and for other purposes", approved February 13, 1911, as amended, which is referred to in section 451, is as follows:

Section 5. Compensation for overtime services; boarding officers may administer oaths; fixing working hours.

The Secretary of the Treasury shall fix a reasonable rate of extra compensation for overtime services of inspectors, storekeepers, weighers, and other customs officers and employees who may be required to remain on duty between the hours of 5 o'clock p. m. and 8 o'clock a. m., or on Sundays or holidays, to perform services in connection with the lading or unlading of cargo, or the lading of cargo or merchandise for transportation in bond or for exportation in bond or for exportation with benefit of drawback, or in connection with the receiving or delivery of cargo on or from the wharf or in connection with the unlading, receiving, or examination of passengers' baggage, such rates to be fixed on the basis of one-half day's additional pay for each 2 hours or fraction thereof of at least 1 hour that the overtime extends beyond 5 o'clock p. m. (but not to exceed 2½ day's pay for the full period from 5 o'clock p. m. to 8 o'clock a. m.), and 2 additional days' pay for Sunday or holiday duty. The said extra compensation shall be paid by the master, owner, agent, or consignee of such vessel or other conveyance whenever such special license or permit for immediate lading or unlading or for lading or unlading at night or on Sundays or holidays shall be granted to the collector of customs who shall pay the same to the several customs officers and employees entitled thereto according to the rates fixed therefor by the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That such extra compensation shall be paid if such officers or employees have been ordered to report for duty and have so reported, whether the actual lading, unlading, receiving, delivery, or examination takes place or not. Customs officers acting as boarding officers and any customs officer who may be designated for that purpose by the collector of customs are hereby authorized to administer the oath or affirmation herein provided for, and such boarding officers shall be allowed extra compensation for services in boarding vessels at night or on Sundays or holidays at the rates prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury as herein provided; the said extra compensation to be paid by the master, owner, agent, or consignee of such vessel; Provided, further, That in those ports where customary working hours are other than those hereinabove mentioned the collector of customs is vested with authority to regulate the hours of customs employees so as to agree with prevailing working hours in said ports, but nothing contained in this proviso shall be construed in any manner to affect or alter the length of a working day for customs employees or the overtime pay herein fixed.

Under section 451 as now constituted an obligation to give a bond to pay the compensation and expenses of customs officers and employees assigned to duty at night or on Sunday or a holiday is limited to the master, owner, or agent of any vessel or vehicle. Under the proposed amendment the obligation is imposed upon the owner, master, or person in charge of a vessel or vehicle, common carrier, or consignee of any merchandise or baggage. The operator of a toll bridge has been held to be a common carrier.

When the act of February 13, 1911—section 5 above quoted—was amended on February 11, 1920, to enlarge the provisions to relate to the examination of passengers' baggage, the collector of customs threatened to close the bridges of the International Co. spanning the Niagara River between the United States and Canada unless the company would give a bond in the sum of $500,000 and agree to pay at double-time rate the salaries of the inspectors stationed at the bridges after 5 o'clock at night and before 8 o'clock in the morning and at any time on a Sunday or holiday. From this arose the injunction action brought by the International Co. against Davidson as collector of customs.

The Supreme Court of the United States in that case held that the words "vessel or other conveyance" in section 5 of the act of 1911 as amended by the act of 1920 were inappropriate to describe the plant of a toll bridge; that it was not the purpose of Congress to make it applicable to the conduct of a toll bridge or the operation thereon of a line of passenger trolley cars.

The proposed amendment to section 451 to include common carriers might be construed as adequate to describe the plant and operation of a toll bridge. The so-called saving clause proposed to be enacted as the last sentence of section 451, reading as follows:

> Nothing in this section shall be construed to impair the existing authority of the Treasury Department to assign customs officers or employees to regular tours of duty at night or Sunday or holidays when such assignments are in the public interest—imposes no duty upon the Treasury Department to assign customs officers or employees to regular tours of duty at night or on Sunday or holidays. The sentence merely clarifies the intention to preserve the existing authority of the Treasury Department to make such assignments if it wills to do so. If the Treasury Department decides not to assign customs officers or employees to regular tours of duty after 5 p. m. and before 8 a. m. or on Sundays or holidays, and the operator of a bridge between the United States and Canada or between the United States and Mexico desires to keep the bridge open, as it obviously would, on Sundays and holidays and during some part of if not all of the night, it could be required to give a bond by the terms of which it would agree to pay the compensation and expenses of customs officers and employees assigned to duty at the periods mentioned.

The amendment to the last sentence of section 451 of the Tariff Act of 1930 suggested above would preserve the rights of bridge companies as determined by the Supreme Court of the United States (International Co. v. Davidson, 257 U. S. 560) and remove the option to the Treasury Department by change of policy or personnel to curtail regular tours of duty for the purpose of collecting additional compensation where it would be in the public interest not to curtail customs service, and it would also make this law conform to immigration laws.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I say that the gentleman from New York, Mr. ANDREWS; the gentleman from New York, Mr. REED; and the gentleman from New York, Mr. MEAD, representing constituents of theirs in connection with the international bridge, had a conference with the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN], another member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and me. The Treasury Department never intended to disturb the situation which exists at the international bridge or at Detroit at the present time, and certainly this was not the intention of the committee.

May I compliment the three gentlemen from New York on so zealously fighting for an amendment which will definitely clinch the matter. I hope their constituents will remember it at the right time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the members of the subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committtee who were so generous in their time and in their efforts and energies in hearing this bill through a long and tedious session. In spite of the fact that they have done well and are no doubt proud of their work, and we are all proud of the work they have done, I find myself unable to bring myself to vote for this bill. I have had a conscientious and deep-seated objection to it from the beginning. I made my feelings known in that respect, and I still object to it from the same standpoint.

This is my objection: This is a customs bill, and of course it is under the Bureau of Customs of the Treasury Department. I maintain at all times that there is a sort of a tie between the Bureau of Customs and the importers, which has been very difficult to break.

While this bill in some respects has sought to break that tie, it does not do so, and here is a condition I would like to delineate for just a moment, because it is a condition that almost inevitably obtains down there. The goods come in from foreign countries and are brought in by the importers. The importing business is one that is very technical. It is a business that people who live in a rural section, as I do, know nothing about. Consequently, the consumer is not represented at the port of entry as he should be, and he never has been represented at the port of entry, because it is a business between the representatives of the customs and the importers) and the importers in this country, as everybody will admit, are a smart lot. They know their business, and they do not import goods especially for the benefit of the consumer. The importing business is carried on for the benefit of the importers and you cannot blame them for that, and I may say that this is not a matter of politics, because the same thing obtains under all administrations with respect to the Secretary of the Treasury and his corps of administrators. It is almost impossible for them to resist the wiles or overcome the pressure upon them from these people who deal more or less as an exclusive class. The percentage of importers compared with the percentage of consumers is practically nil, but they control the prices to the consumer on practically all the articles imported.

I call your attention, especially, to the fact that the Department here in Washington has never responded cordially to the demands of the retailer and the consumer in the country. I can cite you many instances and for one I may cite the instance of the potteries of this country. The pottery business is practically dying out, because the competition of Japan is so keen and so overwhelming. It is impossible for our people to meet such competition in spite of the fact we have a large duty. Why? Because in Japan, in addition to having a labor advantage of about 10 to 1, they have the advantage that the Government of Japan subsidizes the pottery business there because they realize they are about to take the pottery business away from the United States of America. Now, what else do they do? When our pottery people go down here and ask them to compel the Japanese to properly mark their goods, they say, for instance, "No; we will not compel them to mark both the cup and the saucer. It is all right to mark one." They will mark the cup but not the saucer and in this way the saucer finds its way into competition with our products without any Japanese name on it. There are many other instances that I could mention but my time is very limited.

I introduced a bill which would go a long way toward relieving this situation. I had hoped that the committee would have given some consideration to its provisions, but apparently they were too strict on the importers. I am inserting in the RECORD a copy of the bill which illustrates my position. [Applause.]

> SEC. 304. MARKING OF IMPORTED ARTICLES AND CONTAINERS.
> (a) Every article imported into the United States and its immediate container, or package in which such article is imported, shall be marked, stamped, branded, or labeled, in legible English words, in as conspicuous a place as the nature of the article will permit, in such manner as to clearly indicate to the ultimate consumer the country of origin of such article. Such mark, stamp, brand, or label shall be a part of any descriptive legend on such article and of approximately the same prominence as other words in such legend. Such marking, stamping, branding, or labeling shall be as nearly indelible and permanent as the nature of the article will permit and shall be made under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury may authorize the exception of any article from the requirement of marking if he is satisfied that such article was incapable of being marked without injury prior to importation, and at the time of manufacture, or except at an expense economically prohibitive of its importation, or that the marking of the immediate container will indicate the country of origin when the article itself is excepted from marking.

(b) Additional duties for failure to mark: If at the time of importation any article or its container is not marked, stamped, branded, or labeled in accordance with the requirements of this section, there shall be levied, collected, and paid on such article, unless exported under customs supervision, a duty of 10 percent of the value of such article, in addition to any other duty imposed by law, or, if such article is free of duty, there shall be levied, collected, and paid a duty of 10 percent of the value thereof.

(c) Delivery withheld until marked: No imported article or package held in customs custody shall be delivered until such article (and its container) or package and every other article (and its container) or package of the importation, whether or not released from customs custody, shall have been marked, stamped, branded, or labeled in accordance with the requirements of this section. Nothing in this subdivision shall be construed to relieve from the requirements of any provision of this act relating to the marking of particular articles or their containers.

(d) Penalties: If any person shall, with intent to conceal the information given thereby or contained therein, deface, destroy, remove, alter, cover, obscure, or obliterate any mark, stamp, brand, or label required under the provisions of this act, he shall upon conviction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON].

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include some brief tables and short excerpts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, I should preface my remarks with this inquiry, Should the United States adopt a sound foreign trade policy? Then I wish to say that my good friend the genial and able gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN], who presented the bill here for the majority, made reference to the fact that this is a unanimous report from the committee. The gentleman will recall that the examination in committee was somewhat pointed and sharp, and I believe there were a number who were opposed to this bill, although they did not join in any minority report.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I believe that what the gentleman from Iowa states is correct, but I think that is not inconsistent with what the gentleman from New York intended to say. The gentleman from New York intended to say that prior to the final vote there was unanimity of opinion in the committee with respect to the consideration of this bill and no objection to any of its provisions, but on voting the bill out, I think there were four who voted against it.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to expedite the importation of foreign products into the United States, and I wish to point out briefly what two sections of the bill will accomplish, if passed.

First, it will allow an importer to bring in large consignments of merchandise and have it stored in the customs buildings, and then, under permission to be granted by the Secretary of the Treasury, they can remove portions of the shipment, 5 or 7 or 12 or any other percent at a time, and in this way make a distributing agency out of the United States Customs, which they have not had the right to do up to this time.

Mr. CULLEN. To what section is the gentleman referring?

Mr. THURSTON. Section 11.

Section 15 makes another decided change in our customs practice as it has heretofore existed.

Heretofore, when anyone who was interested complained that a duty was too low, the duty was suspended until the matter was finally determined by the court having proper jurisdiction. Under this bill the exaction of an increase of duty will be suspended until the court of final resort fixes the exact rate, and most of these cases pend for 2 years, which means that in the interim all like merchandise imported into the United States will pay the lower rate rather than a higher rate as provided by law. It would have been interesting to the membership if they could have been in our committee and heard the report that was made there that some of this legislation is needed because American citizens harassed the importers, and I may quote their exact language:

Under section 15, where you say that "this will curb the use of the law by domestic interests to harass importers."

Could any of you by the wildest imagination think that a German customs official, or someone in the employ of the Japanese Government, would charge their citizens with harassing importers? We are in a terrific struggle in this country to sustain employment for our people, and we are providing here a measure to expedite imports to our country. What did we read last week about our foreign trade? That there was an unfavorable balance of trade against the United States of $147,000,000 for the first 6 months of this year, the first time in a decade that that has happened, and our foreign trade is gradually diminishing, or our imports are increasing in such great volume that this result is brought about, and when we measure the invisible imports, the money that our tourists spend, if the present rate continues there will be an unfavorable trade balance both visible and invisible against this Government of $1,000,000,000. In this connection I mention the reciprocal-trade agreements and I shall include tables showing that each year since they have been in effect we not only have given Cuba already $100,000,000 under this agreement, but I shall show that each year this treaty has been in effect it has increased the price of sugar in America over what Cuba received in London, by 50 percent to 150 percent.

In Canada our trade, where we formerly had a large balance, has shrunk until this year—when we figure what the American tourists spend in Canada—Canada will have a balance against this Government of $300,000,000. It is no wonder that a Democratic auditor of state in Massachusetts, through a press report, spoke as follows:

BAY STATE DEMOCRAT URGES HULL'S OUSTING

HAVERHILL, MASS., August 2.—State Auditor Thomas H. Buckley yesterday called on Massachusetts Democrats to demand removal of Secretary of State Cordell Hull and to oppose any reduction in European war debts owed the United States.

In a prepared address at the annual outing of the Haverhill Democratic City Committee Buckley charged Hull with "destroying Massachusetts employment through trade treaties which will not recognize the disparity between American and foreign standards of wages." He referred particularly to Massachusetts textile and shoe industries.

The Democratic State auditor asserted, "And let us ask Mr. Morgenthau (Secretary of the Treasury) to stop considering a reduction of the war debts due from England and other European nations and suggest some means of collecting the debts."

My friends, formerly the Congress had complete jurisdiction over the subject. Now we are turning it over to impractical, theoretical college professors who never had charge of any business, and they are making these trade agreements with foreign nations, and while the State Department tells in glowing terms the advantages of these wonderful agreements, they have not the courage to give you the truth and let you know that in most instances our trade is receding and that our balance is likewise diminishing. The Secretary of State of this country and his Assistant Secretary of State told the Ways and Means Committee that a trade balance is not essential.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. To ask the gentleman a question about the provisions of subdivision (J), on page 4, which is not even referred to in the committee report. Subdivision (J) provides that, notwithstanding the requirements of existing law for the marking of importing duties, if the Secretary of the Treasury has allowed them to come in unmarked in violation of the law in substantial quantities for 5 years, he may so declare in a Treasury decision and that thereafter that requirement will be abolished. I ask the gentleman if that provision does not mean that a 5-year violation of the law by the Secretary of the Treasury will repeal the existing marking law?

Mr. THURSTON. Certainly. In this instance, as to lumber, we are going to turn the tariff over to the Secretary of the Treasury, while in other provisions we delegate it over to visionaries and dreamers in the State Department.

Mr. MOTT. Unmarked imported lumber is being misrepresented as domestic lumber and sold to the Government in violation of the Domestic Origin Act of 1933. Second, and of even more serious consequence in the final analysis, American purchasers of lumber have no way of informing themselves as to whether they are buying domestic or imported lumber.

The Treasury, charged with the duty of enforcing the marking provisions of the tariff act, is seeking to continue to avoid their duty as to the marking of lumber by having Congress enact a revision of the marking law. In this revision, contained in H. R. 8099, they seek to except from the requirement of country of origin marking any article—lumber—which has entered in substantial quantities in the past 5 years without marking. In other words, failure of the Treasury to enforce the law for 5 years would effect a repeal of the law.

There can be no justification or excuse for legislation of this type. The Treasury did not seek to justify it in the extensive hearings on the customs administrative bill. Nor does the report of the Ways and Means Committee offer any reason for the enactment of such a provision.

Section 3 of H. R. 8099 should be amended by striking out paragraph J if the bill is to be enacted. Unfortunately since this bill comes up under suspension of the rules, an amendment to strike out this objectionable provision cannot be made. The gentleman from New York in charge of this bill for the committee has promised me to refer an amendment to strike this paragraph to the Senate Finance Committee. I hope that committee will strike it out, but because we are not permitted to strike it out here under the rules of the House I shall vote against the entire bill.

Mr. THURSTON. As to the position of the livestock industry in regard to the reciprocal-trade agreements, I submit two resolutions adopted by the principal livestock organizations in the United States.

The American National Livestock Association, at its annual convention held at El Paso, Tex., January 12–14, 1937, adopted the following resolution:

CANADIAN RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENT

Whereas the reduction in the tariff on cattle in the Canadian reciprocal-trade agreement and the extension of the same reduction to imports from Mexico has been one of the major factors in causing a sharp decline in cattle prices, as a careful examination of official Government market reports clearly indicates; and

Whereas the tariff on agricultural products has been reduced to increase the export of industrial products; and

Whereas these imports have been received in such manner as to effect a decline out of all proportion to the actual numbers involved: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge that the Reciprocal Trade Act be repealed, or that all treaties negotiated under it be subject to ratification by a two-thirds vote of the United States Senate; and be it further

Resolved, That we request that until the act is repealed or the Canadian agreement is nullified or expires, the imports of cattle under this agreement should be placed on a weekly or monthly quota for 1937, in order to prevent dumping of large numbers on our markets in a short period, as was done in the spring of 1936.

The United States Livestock Association, at its annual meeting in St. Louis, Mo., on February 19–20, 1937, adopted the following resolution:

Resolution No. 1

Resolved, That we are unalterably opposed to ratification of the proposed Argentine Sanitary Convention on both economic and sanitary grounds, and that we further insist that in case of any further consideration of foreign trade agreements involving sanitary restrictions against importations of livestock or livestock products from foreign areas, the recommendations of the United States Live Stock Sanitary Association shall be followed with regard to such sanitary restrictions.

With the ever-present danger of overproduction, and with the capacity of our livestock producers to supply our population adequately, we further insist that any foreign trade policy which will or may tend to undermine the domestic market of our domestic livestock producers is unnecessary, unwise, and will prove detrimental, not only to the livestock industry, but to the economic welfare of our country as a whole.

Resolution No. 2

Notwithstanding all factors which have tended to limit livestock production, livestock prices are still below parity: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we demand full protection of our home markets for our domestically produced hides, meat products, and fats and oils.

The National Wool Growers' Association, in January 1934, in a report from the Committee on Resolutions, stated:

THE TARIFF

Consideration of the question of import duties upon foreign products must always recognize and be based upon the fostering and encouragement of all lines of agricultural production. This is essential not only in the interest of our rural population, but because of the great dependence of the manufacturing industry, transportation, and all lines of commerce upon the purchasing ability of those engaged in agricultural and livestock production.

We consider that the effectiveness of present import duties upon foreign agricultural products imported into the United States has largely contributed to the maintenance of a better economic business condition in the United States than has prevailed in most other countries.

We urge upon President Roosevelt and the Seventy-third Congress that import duties on agricultural products be maintained upon a level no lower than that of the rates now prevailing.

We urge that these rates be maintained upon all livestock and meat products and upon wools imported in the raw or manufactured condition. It is also our belief that the raw-wool duty should continue to be levied as a specific duty upon the clean-content basis.

Any commercial intercourse with foreign nations logically brings up the question of the wages paid in the industries which are importing their products into the United States. On prior occasions I have placed tables in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which show that the wage level in Great Britain is about 35 percent of the wage paid here; in France and Germany wages are paid on the basis of about 30 percent of that paid in the United States. Probably the fair average wage level in most of the remainder of Europe is about 25 percent of the wage paid here.

In the Orient wages are from one-eighth to one-twelfth of the wages paid in our country. Formerly it was contended that most of the products of Asia were of hand manufacture, but we now know that in Japan, in particular, by far the greater portion of the output is through the use of machines; so that the hour output per capita is almost as high as it is here. Longer hours and fewer holidays mean that the net Japanese output per capital will equal that in our own country.

Compiled by Department of Labor.

Mr. THURSTON. Are we going to have a stable trade policy in this country or are we to continue to allow these dreamers and impractical persons to have charge of this very important matter? When we examine the wage scales of the rest of the world and know that people can be employed from one-tenth to one-half the wage scale here, and yet we are sitting idly by and not doing anything to protect our own market. We should remember that heretofore our Treasury has obtained substantial sums each year from these duties and that every time we conclude a reciprocal trade agreement we reduce the income of the Treasury.

Mr. Speaker, this administration has been so busy spending money that it has paid little attention to raising revenue, or at least revenue from other nations which deal with us, and as the secretary of state of Massachusetts said, it would be a blessing to the people of the country if we could have our State Department revitalized and have it show some vigor in an attempt to collect the debts these nations owe us rather than to give so much attention to lowering our tariffs. In the last 3 years we have given France alone, through the profit on gold, a sum exceeding one billion dollars.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Does the gentleman contend that there is anything in this bill that would increase the total volume or money value of imports?

Mr. THURSTON. Yes. I say that through a conspiracy to defer the final determination of the duty that might be fixed on a given article and fixing a lower rate they thereby expedite increased imports, and if we permit split shipments and allow the customhouse to be used as a distributing point for these importers, who heretofore had to pay all the duty, but now will pay only on the portion withdrawn, that will expedite the importation of foreign products into the United States.

I want to call particular attention to a subject which is studiously avoided by officials in our Government who have never, publicly, at least, made any statement or shown any endeavor to inform our people as to the profit in a personal-service dollar expended by our tourists when abroad. And American tourists spend more than any comparable group. It has been frequently asserted that such a dollar contains a profit of 50 to 70 percent for the beneficiary. Likewise, no authoritative investigation has been made as to the average profit on a dollar's worth of merchandise exported from the United States. However, as world trade is highly competitive, we have the right to infer that profit on an article exported will vary between 12 and 20 percent, possibly a fair average would be 16 percent.

Therefore if American tourists spend $1 abroad, to balance that expenditure it would require about $4 in value of exports from the United States. When an accurate survey is made in regard to both visible and invisible items credited or charged to our foreign commerce, it is likely we will find that our boasting in regard to the balance of trade in our favor will be greatly diminished. For the year 1937 there will be a balance against us of several hundred million dollars.

It never was intended that the trade and commerce of our country should be placed under the jurisdiction of the State Department; and, as now constituted, those in charge of negotiating reciprocal trade agreements, and also advising the President as to the exercise of the flexible provisions of the present Tariff Act, means that he does not have the advice of practical businessmen.

Therefore it is easy to understand how foreign imports into the United States have increased 46 percent in the past 3 years and our exports to foreign countries have increased only 15 percent in the same period. A sad but truthful picture of the results brought about by meddling dreamers.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If I understand the gentleman correctly he means to say that foreign people shipping goods to this country can now take advantage of quantity freight rates, get their goods into import warehouses on our shores, defer the payment of duty and save interest on the money that they would otherwise pay to the Government and which we would have the use of, and thereby expedite their shipments and increase the quantities to our people?

Mr. THURSTON. The gentleman is correct. We are making a distributing agency out of our customhouses for the purpose of promoting more foreign trade with the United States.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Actually equivalent to a reduction in the tariff?

Mr. THURSTON. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is not contained in this bill.

Mr. THURSTON. That is in one of the sections of this bill which will authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to make a rule permitting split shipments.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THURSTON. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Would not those people bringing in bulk shipments have to pay storage charges at the various custom warehouses?

Mr. THURSTON. There is no provision in the bill for that. Even if they did, why should our Government maintain convenient storehouses to protect and foster the sale of foreign goods in our own country? Now, we are engaged in a common enterprise. We know about these low-wage levels throughout the world. This is not a highly important measure, but it does show the trend of this administration, which has not had the courage to directly change the present tariff laws, but, through these reciprocal treaties and this back-door entrance to our economic welfare, is slowly but surely undermining the protection that the American workingman and American employer is entitled to have.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. CULLEN. I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute in order that I may ask him a question.

Of course, the gentleman from Iowa has delivered a most delightful Republican protective tariff speech.

Mr. THURSTON. I hope it will be to the advantage of the country. It is sound business sense.

Mr. CULLEN. There is not a thing about the tariff in this bill. This bill simplifies the rules and regulations for the administration of the customs of the country. The gentleman said something about the value of importations being reduced. That is absolutely untrue, because the Treasury Department can give you figures on that. Another thing I want to say about these rules that we are revising is, that it has the endorsement of all of the American federation of retail stores, wholesale stores, both importers and domestic manufacturers.

Mr. THURSTON. I am quite sure the importers of foreign products would join in supporting this measure. I regret that I cannot.

Mr. CULLEN. Oh, the gentleman dwells too much on that.

Mr. THURSTON. Irrespective of party affiliation, and without regard to any certain activity, whether it be industry or agriculture, the Members of the Congress should stand united in a firm determination to save America's markets for American producers.

We will not be able to express the views of our people in this respect if we continue to delegate the power which rightfully belongs in the House of Representatives and the Senate, whose Members are directly responsible to, and who are elected by our citizens—the power that has been nominally placed in the President through the Reciprocal Trade Act, but whose details are worked out and determined by theoretical, impractical visionaries, who generally are free traders, or at the best, low-tariff advocates. The Congress should and must regain this power.

This bill does provide some needed corrections in the administration of our customs; but it is to be regretted that it will greatly aid the importer in his industrious zeal to sell imported merchandise, and thereby deprive our people of the employment to which they are justly entitled.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time, 13 minutes, to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me to make a unanimous consent request?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, I yield to the gentleman.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at the point I made them a few moments ago in my colloquy with the gentleman from Iowa.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CROSSER. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by Mr. Charles M. Hay, Assistant Attorney General, explaining the Retirement Act recently passed by the Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES].

THE SUGAR BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. JONES submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 7667) to regulate commerce among the several States, with the Territories and possessions of the United States, with foreign countries, and for other purposes, for printing in the RECORD.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on this conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida reserves all points of order on the conference report just offered.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the life and character of the late Franklin W. Fort, of New Jersey.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENTS AS THEY APPLY TO THE SHOE INDUSTRY

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, I want to call to the attention of the House a serious situation which exists in the shoe industry in our Nation today, and what may result in the industry unless we have better protection from foreign invasion.

In my district I have the second largest shoe-manufacturing industry in our Nation, as well as a number of smaller manufacturers, and they, as well as other shoe manufacturers throughout the country, are attempting to compete with a manufacturer in Czechoslovakia, with the result that this foreign concern is taking thousands of dollars of business away from our own manufacturers and workers because foreign labor and living conditions are much lower than those in this country. For example, ladies' cemented oxfords that cost us $1.47 to manufacture, are being sold in this country by the Bata Shoe Co. for $1.17½.

The average cost of shoes shipped into this country from Czechoslovakia in 1929 was $2.26 a pair. The average cost in 1936 was 74 cents a pair. The cost of machinery, hides, and so forth, as near as I can learn, cost about the same here as they do there, so the difference in the cost of manufacturing is the difference in the labor cost. At the present time there is a 20-percent tariff on cemented shoes entering this country from Czechoslovakia. In order to protect the difference in the cost of shoes that tariff would have to be raised to at least 30 percent. However, at the present time reciprocal-trade agreements between the countries are being advocated and we have grave fears that shoes will be one of the items on which a reduction in the tariff will be asked, and whatever business goes to the Bata Shoe Co., of Czechoslovakia, comes out of the workers in our factories.

According to the Statistical Abstract of the United States, published by the Department of Commerce, the United States exported more than $75,000,000 worth of shoes in 1919. This has been reduced to a little more than $3,000,000 worth in 1936, a loss of more than 95 percent.

According to a report of the United States commercial attaché in Prague, April 27, on file in the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Czechoslovakia exported more than 5,000,000 pairs of shoes in 1936. This is an increase from 62,000 pairs in 1919. Czechoslovakia with only one outstanding shoe manufacturer, exported to the United States more shoes in 1936 than all the manufacturers in the United States exported to all the countries of the world during the same year.

The Endicott Johnson Corporation, the largest shoe manufacturer in my district, and the second in size in the United States, just lost one customer, with an account of over $350,000 a year, to this Bata Shoe Co. and no doubt will lose other customers unless the tariff is held at a level that will average the difference in the labor costs. In other words, the workers in our shoe factories in the United States will have to be brought in line with those of Czechoslovakia as to hours of labor and salaries unless the tariff provisions are readjusted to protect the workers or otherwise they will be idle. We do not want any of these things to happen.

I have taken this up with Secretary of State Hull and with President Roosevelt and explained to them the serious condition we are in and what we may expect unless favorable action is taken by the Tariff Commission. Their replies have not been very sympathetic but if they do not meet the situation now the whole shoe industry in the United States will be ruined and their workers will be added to our relief rolls.

There has been a resolution introduced in this House by Congressman TOBEY, of New Hampshire, to provide for an investigation of the cost of manufacturing shoes in Czechoslovakia, as compared with our own manufacturing cost, in the hope that we may arrive at a fair solution of the problem. Up to the present time the Ways and Means Committee has declined to report this resolution to the House.

Some of the reciprocal-trade agreements which have been made, for example, those affecting the dairy industry, have been very detrimental to our farmers, and I hope that this mistake will not be made with the shoe industry.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include certain excerpts from the memoirs and biography of Albert Gallatin.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. BERNARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech which I made in Flint, Mich., on last Saturday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to permit me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HILL of Washington. Mr. Speaker, under the special order of the House I was to have spoken for 15 minutes after the completion of the Legislative Calendar for the day. Because of the lateness of the hour and the fact that there is to be a caucus I ask unanimous consent that it be postponed until tomorrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that he may pe permitted to address the House for 15 minutes tomorrow after the completion of the legislative program for the day.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF TARIFF ACT

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I asked the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON] if there was anything in the pending bill under which the total volume or money value of imports could or might be increased. His answer was "Yes." I would be very glad to have the comment of the gentleman from Massachusetts on that point.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman from Iowa was talking on a broader scale than the bill itself. He talked about unfavorable trade balances. I do not want to discuss that now, but that is not concerned in the bill, and there is nothing in the bill which changes existing law other than for the purpose of assisting business in removing many unnecessary technicalities that exist and in removing red tape that has inconvenienced business in connection with our customs, both to the domestic manufacturer and the importer. I know of nothing in the bill that will permit anything along the lines inferred in the question of my friend from Indiana, except that the storage of grain is permitted—that is, for the payment of customs—now limited to 10 months. Grain, under the bill, is given the same consideration in the matter of storage as other commodities.

This benefits the city of Portland, Maine. Our distinguished colleague the gentleman from Maine, Mr. OLIVER; the gentleman from New York, Mr. MEAD; and the gentleman from New York, Mr. REED, were intensely interested in that. The Department did not recommend that, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN], the chairman of the subcommittee, myself, and other members of the subcommittee thought there was merit to it, and it was included in the bill.

Mr. PIERCE. Is that free warehousing?

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, no. The storage is in private warehouses. Under the provisions of this bill they can store grain the same as other products are stored for periods of 3 years before paying customs.

Mr. PIERCE. Do they pay storage?

Mr. McCORMACK. They pay storage, because it is stored in private storage warehouses. They have to pay for the storage.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. It is merely a return to the provisions of the old law.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; it is a return to what it was some years ago.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Briefly.

Mr. MOTT. If the gentleman has any time would he briefly explain subdivision (j) on page 4 and tell us what the reason for that is? It is not given in the committee report.

Mr. McCORMACK. I may say to the gentleman from Oregon that the Treasury Department's first bill is not the bill that is before the House. The bill that the Treasury Department recommended gives to the Secretary of the Treasury discretionary power over marking. We made it mandatory.

Mr. MOTT. Subdivision (j) does not make it mandatory. It simply says that if commodities come in here unmarked in violation of law for 5 years the Secretary of the Treasury may continue to let them come in without being marked.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is not in violation of law.

Mr. MOTT. Yes; it is in violation of law. The law requires that lumber be marked, but they have disregarded that law for 5 years.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from New York has made the statement that any amendment that you gentlemen from Oregon have in mind he will take up with the Finance Committee of the Senate; and I will join with the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN] in the position he takes.

Mr. MOTT. I certainly hope that will be done. Without that provision no one who believes in protection for lumber could possibly vote for the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Most of this is rough lumber that has got to be planed in the United States.

Mr. MOTT. But the law says that it must be marked.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am sure the gentleman will realize there is difficulty in marking rough lumber. The lumber will be planed in the United States and that will eliminate the marks anyway. But if there is any amendment the gentleman feels necessary to meet a practical situation I will join with the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN] in urging its insertion in the bill.

Mr. MOTT. I am very glad to have that assurance from the gentleman.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. CULLEN. I promised the gentleman from Oregon that I would see that his amendment be taken care of in the Senate Finance Committee.

Mr. MOTT. I asked the gentleman that and I take him at his word, and I believe he will do it. Notwithstanding that, I do want to call the attention of the House to the fact that what in my opinion is a very improper and injurious provision is contained in the House bill. I am glad the gentleman is willing to take that out.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman has the assurance of the gentleman from New York and myself that we will do everything within our power.

Mr. MOTT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. This bill directly has nothing to do with the tariff. It simply, in the main, makes corrections in the existing administrative law, which will permit business to function more efficiently. The purpose of the bill is in the interest of business. There can be no objection to the bill from the side of my Republican friends. Of course, I do not take issue with them for utilizing the bill to discuss political questions, if they want to. The gentleman from Iowa talked about that and other aspects which have no relation to the bill. I could talk about the tremendous increase in the income of the farmers of America during the past 4 or 5 years; but why go into that? I would leave that for another time.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. If we permit these unfavorable trade balances, how will we take care of the farmers and their produce?

Mr. McCORMACK. I said I was not going into that, because that is another question not concerned with this bill, which relates only to certain changes. There can be no objection to it and the bill should pass.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the suspension of the rules and the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and two-third having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. THOMPSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday my colleague from Illinois, Mr. MEEKS, a member of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, was unavoidably detained. Had he been present he would have voted "nay" on the motion to recommit and "aye" on the passage of the bill.

COMPACT BETWEEN THE STATE OF OHIO AND THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2831) to approve a compact agreement between the State of Ohio and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania relating to Pymatuning Lake.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act to approve a compact or agreement between the State of Ohio and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania relating to Pymatuning Lake

Whereas, under date of the 28th day of October 1936, the State of Ohio and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania entered into a certain compact or agreement in the following words:

"AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA AND THE STATE OF OHIO RE PYMATUNING LAKE

"This agreement made and concluded between the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania acting by and through its lawfully authorized agency, namely, the Water and Power Resources Board as party of the first part and the State of Ohio acting by and through its lawfully authorized agency, namely, its director of conservation as party of the second part.

"Witnesseth

"Whereas by act of Assembly of Pennsylvania approved the 2d day of May 1929 (Pamphlet Laws 1503), as amended by the acts approved the 5th day of May 1931 (Pamphlet Laws 84), the 24th day of April 1933 (Pamphlet Laws 67), and the 9th day of July 1935 (Pamphlet Laws 619), the Department of Forests and Waters of Pennsylvania, acting through the water and power resources board, was authorized inter alia to complete the work begun and continued under an act approved the 25th day of July 1913 (Pamphlet Laws 1270), entitled 'An act providing for the erection of a dam at the outlet of Pymatuning Swamp, and the establishment of a reservoir to conserve the waters thereof, providing for the taking of land and materials necessary thereto, vesting certain powers and duties in the water-supply commission, and making an appropriation', and did duly complete said work, whereby there was created a lake or reservoir now known and hereinafter called Pymatuning Lake, extending, in part, across the boundary line between said States of Ohio and Pennsylvania into the State of Ohio; and

"Whereas the primary purposes of the project by which said lake was created were to conserve water draining said swamp, all of which has its source in Pennsylvania, as well as control floods and regulate the flow of water in the Shenango and Beaver Rivers, and secondary thereto permit the water and the land surrounding the same to be used for fishing, hunting, recreational, and park purposes under such terms and conditions as the water and power resources board might determine in such way or ways as in the opinion if the said board will not materially interfere with the primary purpose in said acts of assembly and hereinbefore specifically referred to; and

"Whereas in view of the fact that a certain part of the lake extends into the State of Ohio whereby it is necessary and desirable that the use of the lake for the secondary purposes, namely, hunting, fishing, and recreational use be uniformly provided for, as well as to guard against inconveniences and mischiefs which might hereafter arise from the uncertainty or jurisdiction within and on said lake to the end that the lake may be adequately policed and conflicts of jurisdiction for the arrest and punishment of offenders be avoided.

"Now then, therefore, in order that law and justice may in all cases be executed and take effect upon said lake from shore to shore in all parts and places thereof where the lake is a boundary between said States, the said parties hereto do agree for and in behalf of their respective States in the manner following:

"General use:

"It is hereby agreed that the entire Pymatuning Lake or Reservoir, subject to the primary use thereof by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania for regulating the flow of the water in the Shenango and Beaver Rivers as in paragraph 9, hereinafter more specifically mentioned, shall be open for recreational use equally to the citizens of both contracting parties save as restricted as to hunting, fishing, and boating in this agreement set forth or hereafter mutually agreed upon by both parties but no person shall be permitted to hunt or fish thereon unless the lawful holder of a fishing or hunting license authorizing him or her so to do issued by the proper authorities of Pennsylvania or of Ohio.

"2. Arrest and prosecution of offenders:

"That each State shall enjoy and exercise a concurrent jurisdiction upon the water (but not upon the dry land between the shores of said lake, including the islands therein) with respect to the arrest and prosecution of offenders, but in such sort that any boat or vessel fastened to or aground on the shore of either State shall be considered exclusively within the jurisdiction of said State, but that all capital and other offenses, trespasses, or damages committed on or over said lake the judicial investigation and determination thereof shall be exclusively vested in the State wherein the offender or person charged with such offense shall be first apprehended, arrested, prosecuted, or first brought to trial, it being the intent of this agreement that an offender may be pursued and arrested anywhere on or over said lake, or shores thereof, or islands therein, regardless of the boundary line, by any peace officers or persons of either State authorized to make arrests, whether the offenses be committed on or over any part of the lake, on the shores, or islands therein, regardless of the State in which the place where the offense was committed lies.

"3. Islands:

"All islands within the lake shall be considered as part of the State of Pennsylvania.

"4. Pollution of water:

"The lake shall forever be protected against pollution of its waters by industrial trade waste, individual or municipal sewage from shore or boat, and the discharge of any noxious or deleterious substance, liquid or solid, into the waters of the lake which is or may become inimical or injurious to public health or to animal or aquatic life is hereby expressly forbidden.

"No sewage may be discharged into the waters of the lake except after complete treatment and then only upon permit first approved by the health departments of both States.

"5. Boats and vessels:

"No power or motor boats nor hydroplanes or aquaplanes shall be permitted anywhere on said lake except such police or administration motorboats to the number which shall be mutually agreed upon by the parties hereto. Sailboats, rowboats, and canoes shall be permitted provided they first obtain a license from the respective State of which the owner is a resident under such regulations as each party to this agreement may now have or hereafter adopt.

"6. Fishing:

"Any person possessing a duly issued fishing license by either State shall be permitted to fish anywhere on the entire lake (except such portion thereof as is closed to fishing by paragraph 8 hereof or such further portion as may hereafter by regulation be mutually agreed to by the parties hereto), but no fisherman shall be entitled to fish from the shores of the State of which he is a nonresident unless he complies with the nonresident fishing license law of said State.

"In order to permit the fish to fully propagate and develop no part of the lake shall be open for fishing until the 1st day of July 1937, and thereafter shall be closed in each year between the 10th day of December and the 30th day of June.

"Until otherwise mutually agreed to by both parties hereto the creel size and season limits for the respective kinds of fish caught shall be such as may hereafter be agreed upon between the two States.

"7.Reciprocal hunting rights:

"Reciprocal hunting rights are hereby granted to the licensed hunters of each State on the water of that portion of the lake both in Pennsylvania and Ohio over the area bounded on the south by an east-and-west line crossing the State boundary five-tenths of a mile north of Simons, Ohio, and on the north by a line drawn between the point at which the Padamaram Road crosses the State boundary and a point formerly known as the Polleck Bridge, but such reciprocal hunting rights hereby granted shall extend only to such wild migratory birds as are covered by the Federal bird treaty and Federal laws adopted thereunder.

"Hunting in such portions of the lake as are not included in the area above described and designated shall be and remain under the jurisdiction of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

"No permanent blinds shall be erected anywhere on the lake and shores thereof, but this provision shall not be interpreted as forbidding the use of a boat as a blind temporarily moored to or grounded on the shore of the lake or islands thereof.

"8. Wild game and fish sanctuaries:

"A. The Game Commission of the State of Pennsylvania having established a wild migratory bird and game sanctuary or refuge in that part of the lake located southeast of the Pennsylvania Railroad crossing, it is expressly agreed that nothing herein contained shall be interpreted as entitling the residents of either State, whether licensed to fish or hunt, trespass or enter upon said sanctuary for any purpose whatsoever. Anyone so doing shall become amenable to prosecution therefor under the game laws of the State of Pennsylvania applicable to game refuges.

"B. The conservation division of the Department of Agriculture of the State of Ohio having established a fish sanctuary and game refuge in the following portion of the lake.

"Being the southerly parts of lots nos. 79 and 80, Richmond Township, all of lot no. 41 and all of lot no. 42 except the westerly 1,000 feet thereof in Andover Township, Ashtabula County, Ohio.

"Beginning at a point in the west line of lot no. 79 that is 1,523 feet south of the north line of lot no. 79 also being the center line of Padanaram Road thence southerly along the county highway along the westerly side of lot no. 79, 1,869.5 feet to the north line of Andover Township thence westerly along the northerly line of Andover Township 939.7 feet to the northwest corner of lot no. 41 thence southerly along the highway that marks the westerly line of lot no. 42, 1,000 feet to a point thence of lot no. 42 thence easterly along the north line of lot no. 42, 1,000 feet to a point thence in a southerly direction parallel to and 1,000 feet easterly from the westerly line of lot no. 42, 2,734 feet more or less to the southerly line of lot no. 42 thence easterly along the said southerly line of lot no. 42, 5,180.4 feet to the Ohio and Pennsylvania State line thence northely along the said Ohio and Pennsylvania State line 7,297.6 feet, more or less, to a point that is 1,523 feet southerly from the north line of lot no. 80, thence in a westerly direction 1,523 feet southerly from and parallel to the north lines of lots nos. 79 and 80, 5,260 feet more or less to the place of beginning.

"It is expressly agreed that nothing herein contained shall be interpreted as entitling the residents of either State whether licensed to fish or otherwise to fish in, hunt, trespass, or enter upon said sanctuary for any purpose whatsoever. Anyone so doing shall become amenable to prosecution therefor under the laws of the State of Ohio applicable thereto.

"9. Reservation of Pennsylvania's right to the body of the water:

"It is expressly agreed that nothing herein contained shall operate to deny, limit, or restrict the right of the water and power resources board of Pennsylvania or any authority established hereafter by said State to exercise such power to at any time, now or hereafter, raise or draw off so much of the waters of the lake as in their sole judgment may be necessary to maintain or regulate the flow of the Shenango and Beaver Rivers in furtherance of the primary purpose for which said lake was established; and said water and power resources board shall without let or hindrance have the full right, irrespective of other considerations, to release so much of the water as they may deem proper to maintain the flow of the Shenango and Beaver Rivers, irrespective of its effect on the level of the lake or use thereof for other purposes.

"In witness whereof the parties hereto have hereunto set their respective hands and seals by, for, and under the authority of their respectives States this 28th day of October 1936.

UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BOLAND of Pennsylvania). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of hesitation that I am again taking the floor on the subject so important to the well-being of this country, in spite of the fact that I have addressed this House on a number of occasions. But if, in spite of our sincere attempts to eradicate this ever present menace from America, I find that subversive agents of foreign governments are still engaged in their un-American practices, I must speak again even at the risk of appearing presumptuous and monopolizing the time of the House on this subject.

The other day I came across a photograph of the Nazi camp in Andover, N. J., about which I have already addressed the House on a previous occasion, and here is what I see: I have in my hand a picture of the swastika and the Italian Fascist flag dominating the landscape high above the buildings of the camp, while the American flag is hidden below and not visible at a distance, and is shown almost furtively and shamefacedly. Of course we might say that it is a great deal of arrogance on the part of anyone to link the American flag, which represents freedom, liberty, and democracy, with the flags of governments which make it their business to suppress individual liberty and freedom of conscience. This, incidentally, is the camp in which certain members of a newspaper, who came to visit the camp on August 1 and to obtain some information about it, were surrounded by a crowd which hurled epithets at them and shook their fists, echoing the thought that it was presumptuous on the part of the newspapers to try to obtain information about the camp. I quote from the Yorkville Advance, New York City, on August 5, 1937:

> Not 2 minutes elapsed before the cry arose that newspapermen were in the camp's midst. Immediately a crowd surrounded the Advance men, hurling epithets at them, and shaking their fists. Women joined the belligerents, one crying and others echoing, "Even if I'm a lady, I'll help beat you up, you lying, filthy Jew b——s."
> Had not one storm trooper, less provoked than his fellows, ushered the newspapermen to a far end of the camp, the crowd, which was fast getting out of hand, would have certainly attacked the newspapermen. Selman did not attempt to take any photos on the camp proper for fear of precipitating a riot and having his camera broken.
> Snarling men came running up to the Advance party from every corner of the grounds threatening to beat them. The entire camp was incensed over alleged lies in the press "for the past 14 days."
> Their anger reached a head, it was learned, when the Newark Ledger printed a photo of their Nazi flag with a caption saying "Mystery—Where's American flag? An American flag flew side by side with the Nazi flag today. And it was charged by the camp's inhabitants that it was unfurled when the Ledger took the photo."

But this unholy alliance between the American flag and the flags of nations which suppress liberty of thought and conscience is not the only unholy alliance which came to my attention in the last few weeks. And so I find another instance where a so-called leader or national chairman—or whatever title he seeks to arrogate unto himself—of the German Americans of this country, or the German-American so-called Bund, refers to a Jewish newspaper in support of his opposition to my activities as a Member of this House. We have reached the stage now where the leader of the Bund and a small organ of so-called Jewish opinion are united in their desire to have this House suppress my interest in an investigation of subversive activities in the United States.

The leader of the Bund sent a so-called "round robin" to all the Members of the House telling them how a "representative Jewish paper disagrees with me on the advisability of conducting an investigation at this time." Can you just picture Mr. Kuhn agreeing with the American Hebrew and the American Hebrew in accord with Mr. Kuhn? Surely something must be wrong with both.

I have already had occasion to tell the House in no uncertain terms that I do not consider this investigation as being a Jewish question, nor is it a question of any particular race or creed. It is an American question, to be determined by American standards; we must once and for all make up our minds that America does not stand for any subversive activities, whether from within or from without.

I had occasion to tell the House at other times how a democracy must protect itself if it wishes to survive, and how subversive groups are ready to seize the liberties of the democracy for the purpose of destroying it. We have no better evidence of that than in the contempt which the present rulers of Germany express about the German Republic, which, after all, gave them the opportunity to seize power, because it allowed them the latitude which they themselves do not allow their opponents. If the German democracy created by the Weimar constitution had had the foresight to defend itself against the aggression of subversive movements which overthrew it, there would have been no nazi-ism today and the world would have heard very little about this man Hitler. It is this very supine submission to subversive agitation which results in destruction of the liberties of the people.

And it is this very same "leader" of the German-American Bund—and incidentally I resent the use of the term "American" in connection with this so-called bund—who published an almanac this year in which he so boldly presents to the public his photograph alongside that of the German Chancelor, and is so proud of the fact that the German Chancelor told him to go back to America and do his "good" work.

I have previously exhibited to this House a copy of this almanac with its many pictures, all of which depict the beauty of present-day Germany, and all of them speaking contemptuously of the attempt which Germany made to establish a constitution of democracy. The leaders of the republic are considered fools and traitors, and the German Republic itself is referred to as the "Jew republic." There is not a shred of desire to promote the ideals which we were taught from the days of our infancy to revere and admire. Not a word is said about liberty of constitution or democratic government. Those ideals are of no consequence; in fact, they are ridiculed and held to be so much drivel.

And it is more than amusing to read in this pamphlet, put out by the leader of the Bund, a criticism of my own doings and a reference to the fact that I am "an immigrant from Russia of Jewish stock." This so-called leader incidentally claims to be a German World War veteran, who, of course, served in the army against the people of America when they sought to make the world safe for democracy and lost their lives in the attempt to prevent kaiserism and the very ideals which this leader holds so holy.

The men and women in this House whose sons, daughters, brothers, and sisters served in that World War to make the world safe for democracy must surely resent such unguarded language on the part of a naturalized alien whose only interest in America is to convert us into the Nazi ideology. It is a far cry from the humility of those who signed the armistice on November 11, 1918, to this arrogance and aggressive manner in which these same men are trying to teach America how to conduct its affairs.

This country is not alone in being infested with Nazi organized agents who seek to undermine our Government by all means, fair or foul. Here is a news item taken from the New York Times of August 12, 1937, dealing with the situation in Great Britain:

[From New York Times, Aug. 12, 1937]

GERMANS IN LONDON ORGANIZED BY NAZIS—INTRICATE INFORMATION SERVICE EVOLVED, ESPECIALLY AMONG SERVANTS IN PRIVATE HOMES

LONDON, August 11.—British public opinion has accepted the fact of the expulsion of three German journalists as not needing explanation. Britons are satisfied that the Home Office acted on solid reasons and that ends the matter.

However, if later the demand arises for an explanation, it is impossible to predict the nature of the official statement because the authorities have the choice of a number of transgressions, each of which is sufficient to cause the withdrawal of the permit of residence from the person implicated.

To put an end to the inquiries the best course is to give a general picture of the activities of German agents in London. Now the alien's department of the Bow Street police station, which centralizes the statutory declarations of foreigners resident in the British capital, has registered more than 100 German "journalists." The official Foreign Press Association has not even a third of that number on its list of members.

The discrepancy between the two figures confirms the suspicion that the activities of many "journalists" have little in common with straightforward press service. Scotland Yard long ago established the fact that these people were engaged in work not connected with the reporting of daily events to reputable organs abroad. Examination of the list of journals or agencies named in the statutory declarations reveals that most of them were unknown, even in their native country.

GERMAN COLONY INCREASES

The German colony in London is now 20,000, consisting partly of businessmen, a few thousand refugees from the Hitler regime, but mostly persons of both sexes employed in domestic service.

The Nazis, when they came to power, took steps to organize the German residents so as to be able to control their activities.

A swarm of agents of the Nazi Party, secret police, Ministry of Propaganda, and army intelligence men descended upon London.

Every German even temporarily resident was indexed and enrolled, often in several organizations. All that was more difficult to follow than appears at first sight, because of the multiplicity of agencies, and especially because the directing centers were independent of the German Embassy and were often situated in Berlin.

A good example is supplied by the details of the organization of domestic servants. The police believe that only a few of the thousands of German maids serving in private homes in London escape the dragnet of agents who force them to join so-called social clubs, where they are subjected to strict supervision and are expected to report to officials all that they hear or see in the houses of their employers.

SPYING ACTIVITIES INCLUDED

An exactly similar organization was created for obtaining higher class political and economic information by centralizing reports from numerous Germans circulating in various strata of city and West End society. Here is where the title journalist opens doors ordinarily closed to foreigners.

The fact has been established that the agents mentioned, having begun their organization with the object of collecting general information, as well as keeping control of their nationals, gradually expanded their activities to include downright, deliberate spying. That has been directed partly against German refugees, in this country to escape the clutches of the Gestapo [German secret police] and the joys of an Aryan regime, but also against the vital interests of Britain.

Here we reach a delicate point, because we would be obliged to speak of the ramifications of military and naval espionage and possibly reveal details rendering difficult the fruitful investigations of the British Intelligence Service, which, in spite of numerous handicaps, is still quite good.

Of the three men expelled, only Werner von Crome possessed journalistic standing, the other two, Franz Otto Wrede and Wolf Dietrich Langen, are unknown to the Foreign Press Association.

The long-suffering Home Office allowed the incriminating matter to accumulate for some time before finally taking action.

And so you see, England found an effective way of dealing with the situation. I hope to God we do likewise.

And only this morning the New York Times brings another news dispatch from Germany telling us from a Nazi standpoint that America is not "threatened" by "national Socialist agitators." O Heaven forbid! Quite the contrary, it seems that these foolish Americans do not appreciate the blessings of national socialism which are about to come to this country. The plan is perfectly simple. Let all Americans adopt the ideology which was most successful in Germany and we will all be blessed with our own national socialism. And here is the boast of the "Headquarters of Germans Domiciled Abroad" in Stuttgart, Germany:

We desire to bring back Germans in the United States to the racial unity and common fate of all Germans. To this end the intellectual and spiritual reform of Americans of German extraction is necessary in accord with the model furnished by the old homeland.

When we have attained this goal we will then organize German-Americans for spiritual regeneration, economic support, and political schooling.

[From the New York Times, Aug. 16, 1937]

UNITY OF GERMANS IN UNITED STATES IS NAZI AIM—EDITORIAL INDICATES LEADERS HOPE TO CREATE POLITICAL WEAPON IN AMERICA—SPIRITUAL REFORM URGED—STRUGGLE FOR REGENERATION SEEN IN THIS COUNTRY AGAINST THE JEWS AND COMMUNISTS

BERLIN, August 15.—The National Socialist leaders seem to have hopes of making pan-Germanism a political weapon to be employed in internal American politics. A revealing editorial appeared in the National Socialist Kurier, the official party organ for Stuttgart—center of the Reich's pan-German agitation—which city Chancellor Adolf Hitler gave the title of "Headquarters of Germans Domiciled Abroad", and which is the seat of the Institute for Germanism Abroad.

The Kurier's "program" for the young German-American corps, wherever it may be found, is the following:

"We desire to bring back Germans in the United States to the racial unity and common fate of all Germans. To this end the intellectual and spiritual reform of Americans of German extraction is necessary in accord with the model furnished by the old homeland.

"When we have attained this goal we will then organize German-Americans for spiritual regeneration, economic support, and political schooling.

"German-American influence thus economically strengthened and politically reactivated shall then be thrown in the balance under our leadership for the coming struggle with communism and Jews and for the Americans' regeneration."

The editorial explains:

"These German-Americans are today prepared to enlist in the final struggle and take their place in America's political life while preserving their German 'Weltanschauung' and racial character in order to exercise a determining influence on the new America."

The editorial protests vigorously Representative DICKSTEIN's belief that America is threatened by National Socialist agitators.

It asserts, however, that the Representative's fears have lost all significance, for the great majority of Americans no longer see any danger in "Germanism."

The editorial states that Mr. DICKSTEIN's various warnings and declarations are the result not of patriotic feeling but of a desire to damage the Third Reich and uphold the "phantom of National Socialist revolutionary agitation."

The Kurier then continues:

"This attempt has failed entirely, for DICKSTEIN's agitation no longer impresses Americans, nor does it intimidate German-Americans. Twenty-one summer camps of the German Folk, League, an organization founded in 1933 under the name of the Friends of New Germany, as well as homes and camps of German-American vocational associations, are proof of that, for in these summer camps away from the great city the racial and national life of German-Americans find free play.

"Here they rediscover the sense of being rooted in the soil which they had been forced to forego. Here on their own ground whole colonies have been created. Here young Germans learn to work as middlemen between the old and the new home for better relations between the two great nations and as Germans who owe a duty to America and who are bound to Germany.

"Here they learn to harmonize their duties as American citizens and their national and racial mission as Germans."

The article appeared in connection with the annual congress of the Institute for Germanism Abroad, which Dr. Wilhelm Frick, Minister of the Interior, addressed yesterday.

On August 28 the annual congress of the foreign section of the National Socialist Party will open at Stuttgart. It will be in session until the opening of the party congress at Nuremberg.

And so it seems to be the aim and object of the masses of Germany to "educate" all persons of German extraction in the "model" furnished by the old homeland, and so, in accordance with this "model", when all Germans have been converted into good Nazis, then the time will come when the German ideology will be the determining influence in our American political life.

This is not the first time that this institute for Germans abroad produces the far-reaching program to indulge in the reorganization of our country. In a radio address, of which I have complete German text in my hands, and which was sent by short wave on June 6, 1937, this institute boasts that it controls every German abroad, and that nothing can be done by Germans outside of Germany without their knowledge.

Mr. Speaker, I still do not know what this Congress proposes to do with regard to the matter which is now pending before the Committee on Rules, in which it is requested that something be done to clean up the camps of this country. When I speak about the camps, I am talking about un-American activities, which are spreading daily and weekly. A week ago I told you we had 22 camps. The one in Pennsylvania had made it 22. Here is the twenty-third camp which opened two Sundays ago in the city of my friend from St. Louis. I have the name of the camp, the names of the leaders, and the names of all the alien groups which are participating in this particular camp. I also have a record of the location of the camp.

The St. Louis group of the Nazi Volksbund has expanded in recent months and has recently acquired a meeting house at 2960 Oregon Avenue in St. Louis and a summer camp near the Meramec River, just off of Lemay Ferry Road. Last Sunday's ceremony included a parade of uniformed storm troopers carrying the swastika banner under the leadership of Anton Kessler. The camp goes under the name of "Deutsch-Horst."

Thus, the sublimest of comedy: One has to know that after having given the Hitler salute with out-stretched arm, having blared three "heils", the uniformed storm troopers lined up in double file and self-consciously, carrying the flag of a foreign country, marched down what is called the Government drive.

Mr. COCHRAN. Of course, the gentleman knows I am not a member of the Rules Committee. Does the gentleman know whether the report in the paper is true, to the effect that acting upon the request of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. CITRON] the Attorney General has directed the Division of Investigation to make an investigation of the activities of the organizations to determine whether or not they are violating the laws of the United States?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I may say in answer to the gentleman that I know all about it. I may also state that the investigation of the Attorney General deals with but one phase. When I came in here a year and six months ago and told this Congress that not only was there drilling being carried on in uniforms, and that many other things foreign to our form of government were being encouraged, but that there were actually guns on the premises of these people, some of the Members laughed. All the Attorney General is now doing is to follow the law. I have been begging for the last 6 months that something be done by somebody, but all the Attorney General is doing is to make an investigation and to find out how many guns have been transported from one camp to another, and if there has been a violation of the interstate law. This is as far as the Attorney General can go. I know that the Attorney General is one of the ablest men we ever had in that office. He would go further if he had had the power to do so.

Mr. COCHRAN. In other words, the gentleman's activities have brought fruit?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; they have brought fruit.

Mr. COCHRAN. The Attorney General has ordered an investigation?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Has he advised the gentleman personally to what extent he is going to investigate?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. He has not advised the gentleman personally, but the Attorney General, in a statement released only yesterday, which I have here in my hand, states that he can go as far as to find out whether a crime has been committed in the shipment of ammunition from one camp to the other. I have no doubt that the Attorney General will find evidence of this, but all the Attorney General can do is to prosecute those who have been shipping these guns from one camp to another in interstate commerce. He cannot do anything further. In fact, the director of the Bureau of Investigation has been asked by Mr. Cummings to make "a cursory examination."

Mr. COCHRAN. If the Attorney General's investigation discloses that other Federal laws are being violated, he can certainly proceed against those who are violating our laws.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Certainly.

Mr. COCHRAN. And he will.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am just trying to tell my colleague from St. Louis that the function of the Attorney General, as he has stated it, and this is all he can do, is to make an investigation of whether ammunition or guns have been smuggled in and transported from one camp to another and from one State to another in interstate commerce. That is all he can do.

Mr. COCHRAN. What I want to bring out is that an investigation is on. Why not give the Attorney General all the information you have?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am glad the investigation is on. It should have been on a year ago. However, all the Attorney General can do is but one step in the right direction. I admire the Attorney General for at least doing something in calling the attention of the Bureau of Investigation to the seriousness of the situation which I have been exposing for the past 4 years.

This Congress is going to be charged with neglect in failing to bring about the necessary study and investigation of subversive agitation, with almost 350,000 aliens and citizens in this country subscribing to ideologies of a foreign source, despite the fact that I have been begging for such an investigation for almost 6 months. The Committee on Rules is asleep. It actually brought out a rule for the consideration of a bill allowing helium to go to Germany.

Mr. COCHRAN. Instead of Congress making the investigation, the Department of Justice is going to do the job. I hope it will be done thoroughly.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I wish the Department of Justice had the power to make a thorough investigation, not only of the smuggling of guns but also of the bringing in of millions of dollars to pay aliens who have been smuggled in to promulgate un-American activities which attempt to substitute nazi-ism for Americanism. This is going on in almost every section of the country, and the Attorney General cannot do anything about it.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman does not mean to state that if aliens are smuggled into this country it is not a violation of a Federal law?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Why, certainly it is a violation.

Mr. COCHRAN. Then the Attorney General can prosecute such people.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have written a number of letters to the Department of Labor about this. When we are ready to pick up these spies, they take the next boat back to Germany. They have a fine system of espionage. You cannot pick them up. They are too smart for our people in this country.

Mr. COCHRAN. If they violate the law and the Attorney General finds they have violated it, and if he can apprehend them, he can prosecute them as he can prosecute people who may move arms from one State to another.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. May I make my position clear?

Mr. COCHRAN. Is not that true?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman is just stretching the point.

After my pleading and begging for the last 6 months, there are two things which have been done. The Congress passed the McCormack bill a week ago to make all known agents representing foreign governments register with the Department of State. The other thing is the statement by the Attorney General that all the power he has is to investigate the interstate smuggling of guns between one Nazi camp and another. This is a fine step in the right direction. However, the main point I present to you is that the subversive organizations in this country are financed by foreign money, and to do what? To substitute their form of government for ours, and they have admitted it. The Reich admitted this only a week ago. The German Government admitted that it is setting out to nazify England, America, and other countries of the world. I want to know who is behind this, and we could have found out if Congress had given us the right to subpena. We know who is behind this, and we would like to know how many millions of dollars have been sent in here. I know where I could find this information if I only had the power of subpena.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Are any of the men in these camps naturalized American citizens?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. About 60 percent of them are naturalized citizens, about 10 percent of them are native-born, and the rest are aliens; but the native-born belonging to these camps are no more citizens of this country than I am of Mr. Hitler's country.

Mr. RICH. What seems to be the idea of the native-born or the naturalized citizens who have joined these camps? What is their idea in joining them?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Their object is to nazi-ize the United States. They are not citizens in truth, nor in fact. If I had the power to examine certain documents I could prove that all of these so-called citizens by naturalization when taking their oath of allegiance to the United States, did so with a mental reservation with respect to the Fatherland of Germany.

Mr. RICH. Then the gentleman claims they did not become American citizens with any idea of supporting our laws and our Constitution?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is it exactly. Another point is that there is a certain document which I can lay my hands on that would show the official oath that each of these troopers in this country take to the Hitler government. If I can establish that, we can cancel the citizenship of almost 200,000 of them, but I cannot do this in any other way than by power of subpena. There are certain people who are ready to take the stand against their own Nazis, in other words, they are ready to squeal and tell exactly what is going on in this country.

Mr. BOYLAN of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BOYLAN of New York. Is it not a fact that a Jewish magazine named the American Hebrew, published some articles stating that responsible Jewish leaders are opposed to this investigation?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am happy the gentleman has asked me that question. This so-called American Hebrew is a 2-by-1 organization. My good friend, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], on April 8, made a big fuss about the Jews being against this investigation. This a one-man organization with just a few people on the pay roll. It has no right to speak for the Jews, particularly "responsible Jews." It does not control the opinion of Jewry. If this magazine seeks to prevent an investigation for reasons unknown to me, I think this Congress ought to know the reason and we ought to find out who are these responsible Jews and why they do not want the investigation.

We have passed several bills recommended by the former committee. Things have changed since. New aliens, new propagandists, new blood, new secrets, and new spies have crept in since then. The only way to determine these facts is by an investigation.

So, Mr. Speaker, if the American Hebrew speaks for responsible Jews, I should like to know who they are, and what they are trying to hide. If the American Hebrew, or the Irish Hebrew, or any publication or periodical is opposed to an investigation, which would determine the fact that there are subversive movements in the United States seeking to overthrow our form of government, and is withholding the true facts from the people, I am prepared to investigate it. [Laughter.]

I heard one Congressman say that all the Jews are against this investigation on account of the American Hebrew. The Congressman evidently thought that the American Hebrew represents the whole of Jewry. The American Hebrew has absolutely no authority to speak for the Jews. It speaks only for its own small circulation.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a Jewish question, nor a Catholic question, nor any other religious question. This is purely an American issue as to whether the Constitution shall be preserved and whether our democratic institution should continue, or whether we should substitute some other form of government in its place. This is a 100-percent American question, and no race or group or people has the right to interfere with Congress in determining the groups that are seeking in one form or another to bring about a Fascist state against the will of the people.

This country of ours is one of the greatest democracies on earth. We believe in the principles of our form of government. We have survived many years successfully, and we do not need any advice from the Nazis, the Communists, or from any other foreign government. We want to be left alone and follow the footsteps of our forefathers in preserving liberty and peace. We do not believe in intolerance or bigotry. We are a free people, and we do not stand for foreign agitation which seeks to array American against American.

Mr. BOYLAN of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. BOYLAN of New York. The German leader, Fritz Kuhn, and the American Hebrew charge you with being angry because you did not get the chairmanship of the last investigating committee. Is this true?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am glad the gentleman has asked me that question, because my Nazi enemy and the enemy of America, Fritz Kuhn, sent out a letter to each Member of Congress in which he quotes the so-called American Hebrew, stating that because I did not get the chairmanship I was sore about it and, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this point to put in the RECORD a letter from the late Speaker Rainey and my answer to him, dealing with that question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE SPEAKER'S ROOMS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., March 30, 1934.

Hon. SAMUEL DICKSTEIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. DICKSTEIN: I hope to be able very soon to submit to the House, for its approval, the names of the special committee authorized by House Resolution 198, to investigate Nazi and other foreign-instigated propaganda in the United States which attacks our Government in its principles.

On account of your interest in the subject, your patriotism, and the splendid work you have already done in this matter, I desire to ask you, first of all, if you will accept the chairmanship of this committee. I will be very glad, indeed, to appoint you chairman.

Very truly yours,

HENRY T. RAINEY.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION,
Washington, D. C., April 2, 1934.

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
Speaker, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I thank you for the very great honor you have conferred upon me by appointing me as the chairman of the special committee authorized by House Resolution 198 to investigate Nazi and other foreign-instigated propaganda conducted in the United States which attacks our Government and its principles.

I cannot find words to adequately express how highly I value the honor this appointment would confer upon me at this time, and I sincerely assure you that I appreciate your expression of confidence which this appointment means.

However, Mr. Speaker, for conscientious patriotic reasons, I feel compelled to respectfully decline the appointment.

My knowledge of conditions which this special committee will find, compels me to most respectfully ask you to appoint as its chairman an outstanding Member of this House, so that there can be no doubt that this is an American issue of primary importance.

My patriotism for the United States in this matter far surpasses any sentiment which my acceptance of this chairmanship might, by some persons, be interpreted as an ambition for glory for uncovering a blot upon our affairs in the United States.

I feel very strongly, Mr. Speaker, that this probably is too serious a question to be even remotely disparaged by any allegation of prejudice which my acceptance of this chairmanship might invoke.

However, as an American citizen deeply interested in this investigation, I shall be happy to serve as a member of the special committee if that is your desire, so that I may give to the committee the benefits of all of my efforts during the past 8 months of exhaustive work in fact finding.

I feel the work this committee has before it, will be the making of wholesome American history.

Sincerely yours,

SAMUEL DICKSTEIN.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That will completely answer the entire matter.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I was chairman of the special committee and I can say there is absolutely no truth in any such statement.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. And yet, Mr. Kuhn, a Nazi agent, has been elected for 4 years to carry on his dirty work, and he sends out a letter attacking me containing false information. They are nothing but a bunch of propagandists in this country, and I am prepared to prove it if the Rules Committee would wake up.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman does not expect us to read that letter?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; you can read it or throw it away.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mine went into the wastebasket. I have heard the gentleman talk a number of times, and I am always hearing about this Hitler business. What about the Russians?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They are all cousins.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is the gentleman after those cousins, too?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Certainly; we are after all the cousins. We are after the white shirts that have an army of 50,000, and then you have the black shirts. They have all combined, and they are going to make an attack in the press on the 25th and other dates, charging me with being a Jew. They just found out that I am Jewish.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is the gentleman speaking to his resolution?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. When are we going to have a vote on that?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not know that we will ever vote on it unless the Rules Committee wakes up.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Has the gentleman filed a petition?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have no petition.

Mr. McFARLANE. Does the gentleman not think the Rules Committee is suffering from a bad case of sleeping sickness in regard to some of these resolutions that are pending before us?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I don't have to tell the gentleman that.

Mr. McFARLANE. If the gentleman will yield further, in 15 minutes they can meet in a hurry and report out a resolution to investigate about judges for the Judiciary Committee, but it takes them 8 or 9 months to report out a resolution that there is corruption existing in the departments here.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. What about the corruption that I have been talking about? What is the matter with this resolution dealing with subversive activities in the United States.

Mr. McFARLANE. I am for the investigation.

Mr. COCHRAN. It appears that the Rules Committee has about 48 hours to wake up in and there is no indication that they are going to wake up so far as the gentleman from New York is concerned. Why should not the gentleman from New York give the information that he has to the Department of Justice? I would like to see the Department of Justice go ahead with it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think my former chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], can explain that. I am tired of answering those questions.

Mr. McCORMACK. It is very simple. The Department of Justice cannot make any investigation unless a Federal law has been violated, and as there is no Federal law relating to this subject, therefore they cannot investigate, and you cannot take issue with the Department of Justice because of that, because they are absolutely stating what is the truth.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit, certainly the Federal law is being violated if they are smuggling aliens into this country. The gentleman from New York has made the statement that they are smuggling aliens into the country. That is a violation of law.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. I notice in the newspapers that they are investigating some of the charges that guns are being transported. That is a violation of a Federal law, but they cannot investigate the broad activities. I agree with the gentleman that smuggling is a violation of law.

Mr. COCHRAN. But the gentleman knows that the Department of Justice does not tell the public all it is going to investigate.

Mr. McCORMACK. I can assure the gentleman that I was in constant contact with the Department while the investigation was going on, and the Department did everything they could, but they could not do very much.

Mr. COCHRAN. If the gentleman from New York has information about aliens being smuggled into the country why does he not give it to them?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is one aspect.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is a big aspect.

Mr. McCORMACK. But the gentleman is discussing a much broader subject.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Assuming that some of us want to help the gentleman, what will we do? The gentleman says he does not have a rule and he does not have a petition.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. What is the use of kidding ourselves? I could get a petition, if time permitted, and I could obtain more than sufficient signatures on that petition. However, that petition would not be brought up for a vote until next January, but an investigation should be made now.

Mr. HOFFMAN. But what can I do to help the gentleman, if he does not have a petition?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If the gentleman wants to help me, he should communicate with the chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman knows that that will not do any good.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It might help some. Who was the gentleman who questioned the un-American activity in this country? I want him to look at this. This is one of their late camps. Here is the American flag on the bottom and the swastika and the black flag at the top. That is how much they respect our American institutions.

Mr. RICH. The American flag is on the building.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The American flag is in the cellar and the swastika is on the roof.

Mr. RICH. Where did the gentleman get that?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I took it from Camp Nordland, in New Jersey. They talk about running these camps for their health, they are trying to build up their bodies and put them in shape. They say they are so thin that they can hardly breathe air. I say to you that is not true. They are as fat as pigs. They ought to go to some Turkish bath to reduce themselves. They say that their bodies are slim and that they are just training them for their health, when they are training their German friends into an army, by order of the German Government, which is responsible for helping create the Nazi camps in our country and train them so that they may be ready for a future war when called upon by the fatherland irrespective of whether these men were born or naturalized in the United States.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Where was that picture taken?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Camp Nordland. Look at those fat boys. [Laughter.]

Mr. PETTENGILL. Where is this camp located?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Right in New Jersey; 200 acres of ground; heiling Hitler and helling the American flag.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Who owns this land?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They own it. They paid enough money for it to buy 10 farms.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Who is "they"?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The Nazi Government; the American Bund in this country, with money from the other side, and yet the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] says "Why does not the Attorney General investigate it?" Let us find out how much money was paid and where it comes from.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. The Department of Justice is allowing flagrant violations of the antitrust laws to continue, in connection with the radio monopoly, the sound-motion-picture monopoly, and W. J. Donovan, who was the antitrust law enforcement officer under the Hoover administration, drew the petition for R. C. A. that sandbagged the A. T. & T. That is well known. The Department of Justice has the facts, but we cannot get them to break up the monopoly.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I do not want to quarrel with anybody. I am just presenting these facts to you as an American. I propose to arouse the American people of the condition now prevailing. You might be asked by your constituents why an investigation was not made by Congress. I do not mind telling you that I am getting nice, pleasant letters every day from these agitators, because every time I expose a group of spies they always have nice things to say to me, either by the telephone or confidential letter. I do not want to repeat what they say there. I tell you the responsibility is upon this Congress to do something to clean it up. What is more, I do not want to be a party to it. I would be glad to turn over all these documents to the committee. [Applause.]

I also want to call the attention of my colleagues to the fact that the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Jewish War Veterans, the Disabled War Veterans, the Spanish-American War Veterans, and many other American groups are almost to a man behind me and have endorsed this investigation. I also want to tell you that your constituents have also written to me endorsing the investigation and offering their cooperation. Some of the Members of the House will have to account for the failure of this Congress to clean house once and for all.

In this connection I wish to say that I have nothing against the fine German people who are against Mr. Hitler's philosophies being practiced in the United States. I have found them to be true Americans and worthy of that name.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] has expired. [Applause.]

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] is recognized for 12 minutes.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, without surrendering the special order that was graciously granted to me, I want to ask unanimous consent at this time that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] may occupy such brief time as he may desire to speak at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am very much indebted to our colleague from Indiana, and I think 2 or 3 minutes will suffice for what I have to say at this time.

Yesterday I introduced a resolution in the House calling for certain information from the Federal Communications Commission. I should like to ask unanimous consent to insert that resolution as a part of my remarks at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolution

Whereas "no member of the Commission or person in its employ shall be financially interested in the manufacture or sale of radio apparatus or of apparatus for wire or radio communication; in communication by wire or radio or in radio transmission of energy; in any company furnishing services or such apparatus to any company engaged in communication by wire or radio or to any company manufacturing or selling apparatus used for communication by wire or radio; or in any company owning stocks, bonds, or other securities of any such company; nor be in the employ of or hold any official relation to any person subject to any of the provisions of this act, nor own stocks, bonds, or other securities of any corporation subject to any of the provisions of this act. Such Commissioners shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. Not more than four Commissioners shall be members of the same political party" (the Federal Communications Act of 1934, sec. 4b); and

Whereas addresses have recently been made by Members of Congress in both the House and the Senate emphasizing the apparent failure to eliminate the evils of monopoly in the field of communications, and more particularly in the radio-broadcasting field, despite the intent of Congress manifest in the Communications Act of 1934; and

Whereas it appears possible that television may be added to the virtual monopoly apparently existing in this field; and

Whereas the apparent existence of trafficking in licenses, capitalization of Federal licenses at the expense of the public, and other matters referred to suggest the lack of proper administration, raising squarely the question of whether or not the Federal Communications Commission or the Broadcasting Division of the Commission is being conducted or is in a position to be conducted in accordance with the intent of Congress under the Communications Act of 1934; and

Whereas resolutions are now pending before both the House and the Senate with a view to a thoroughgoing investigation into the apparent monopoly in the radio-broadcasting field: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Federal Communications Commission be required to furnish under oath the following information.

1. The name or names, if any, of any member, agent, or employee of the Commission financially interested in the manufacture or sale of radio apparatus or of apparatus for wire or radio communication; in communication by wire or radio or in radio transmission of energy; in any other company furnishing services or such apparatus to any company engaged in communication by wire or radio or to any company manufacturing or selling apparatus used for communication by wire or radio or in any company owning stocks, bonds, or in any other securities of such company.

2. The name or names, if any, of any member, agent, or employee of the Commission in the employ of or holding any official relation to any person subject to any provision of the Communications Act of 1934.

3. The name or names, if any, of any member, agent, or employee of the Commission holding, directly or indirectly, stocks, bonds, or other securities of any corporation subject to any provisions of the Communications Act of 1934; or having other interests profiting such member, agent, or employee, if any, through the action of the Commission in the field of communications; be it further

Resolved, That the above information be furnished the House of Representatives immediately.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The Members will note that the resolution calls upon the Communications Commission to furnish, among other things, the name or names, if any, of any member, agent, or employee of the Commission holding either directly or indirectly stocks or bonds or other securities of any corporation subject to any provisions of the Communications Act of 1934, that practice being expressly forbidden by the terms of the act.

Mr. Speaker, I have just received word indicating that this afternoon there has been placed in the hands of members of the committee in the other body considering the confirmation of Commander Craven as a member of the Communications Commission information, in telegraphic form, tending to show that Commander Craven has been interested in radio station WPEN of Philadelphia; that for professional services rendered that station he acquired stock in the corporation controlling the station, which stock was subsequently placed by him in the possession of and held for him by a Washington attorney by the name of Horace Lohnes; that admissions of these facts have been made to the author of the telegrams personally, both by Commander Craven and by his attorney, Mr. Lohnes, and that if necessary the author of the telegrams will substantiate the fact with personal testimony.

Mr. Speaker, I assume no responsibility for the accuracy or inaccuracy of the statements made. The mere fact, however, that they have been made at this time and in this manner seems to me to call for the most careful consideration by the committee in the other body considering confirmation. Commander Craven has been for some time and is now, as I understand it, Chief Engineer of the Federal Communications Commission.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. Would the gentleman mind stating who signed the telegrams?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. The telegrams are signed, I believe, by Mr. James P. Kiernan, of New York, formerly business manager of a broadcasting station.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. According to the trade papers, Mr. Sarnoff, the head of R. C. A., has been spending a good deal of time here in dining those in high places. It is intimated in trade circles that he is very close to many in the communications field and that he even has great influence in high places and claims a great deal of credit, whether he is entitled to it or not, for the naming of certain officials. I am wondering if the gentleman has information on that.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I cannot say that I have any real information on the question which my colleague raises.

As the Members of this House know, I have been very much interested for about a year and a half in securing favorable action upon a resolution introduced in this House by my late colleague from Massachusetts Mr. Connery calling for a thoroughgoing investigation of the entire radio field. As I have stated, it seems to me that the mere fact that charges are made at this time calls for most careful consideration of confirmation. It also affords just one more reason why the Rules Committee should take immediate and favorable action upon the Connery resolution.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I was present when our late colleague Mr. Connery, and I believe the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WIGGLESWORTH] appeared before the Rules Committee, but the Senate stole a march on us and passed a similar resolution. They pass about one investigating resolution a month over there without any hesitation.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. One of our Members, the late Billy Connery, introduced a resolution in January to investigate the industry, and recently Senator WHITE introduced a resolution to investigate the communications industry. Recently I introduced a resolution to investigate the communications industry. The broadcasting industry and their kept magazines now advocate the investigation be conducted by the other body rather than in this body. The gentleman from New York is a little mistaken as to the status of the proposed investigation. The resolution is pending in the other body. It was favorably reported by the Senate committee and is now pending before the Senate, but the resolution to investigate the communications industry has not yet been approved by the other body itself; so there is yet time for the Rules Committee of the House to awaken from their "sleeping sickness" and get into action.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. I am not here to defend the chairman of the Rules Committee or the committee of which I am a member. We have before us, however, a great many resolutions, not only the Dies resolution, the Connery resolution, the McFarlane resolution, but others. We have before us at least 12 important resolutions, each and every one of which I would gladly vote for and report and allow these investigations to be carried on.

The reason the Rules Committee is not reporting these resolutions is because they feel that the House and some of the leaders in the House are opposed to any and all investigations. Invariably when a resolution to investigate is brought forward by the Rules Committee it fails of passage. That is the reason the Rules Committee has refrained from reporting many of these resolutions which, to my mind, should be reported favorably and these matters investigated.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I do not want to presume further on the time of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will ask that the gentleman be given additional time if he will yield.

Mr. WIGGLESWORTH. I yield very briefly, but the gentleman from Indiana yielded to me and I do not want to impose upon his courtesy.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The committee once before unanimously voted a resolution to investigate.

Does not the gentleman think we should investigate these subversive activities that have been going on all over the country, and which have been exposed by every newspaper in the country? Does not the gentleman think that rule ought to be reported as the first proposition, regardless of how many others you have?

Mr. SABATH. I agree with the gentleman. I believe other resolutions that are pending before the committee should be reported. These investigations should be made by the House and we should not always wait for the Senate to act. We stand by and permit all these things to exist, notwithstanding we have information that is of such importance it would justify the House in causing an investigation to be made.

Mr. RICH. Why does not the Rules Committee act? The gentleman is one of the oldest members of the Rules Committee, and he ought to get some action.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial appearing in the Philadelphia Record of August 6.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] is recognized for 12 minutes.

PRESIDENT OF GOLD STAR MOTHERS PLEADS FOR LUDLOW PEACE AMENDMENT

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, over in France, where the poppies grow, there are graves of American soldiers, row upon row.

The green mounds where our precious ones lie are far removed from our vision but, though out of sight, they are never out of mind.

The golden strands of memory reach out into those faraway cities of the dead and a great love which cannot be dimmed nor tarnished by time nor chance, nor things past nor present, nor things to come, of whatever moment, links our hearts in never-ceasing devotion to our boys who are sleeping in foreign soil.

We of the older generation remember many of these boys when they were cooing babes and when they clambered to our knees, so trusting and confiding, to be taken up and tossed in our arms, and we remember them when they budded into life's roseate spring, so buoyant, so full of energy and hope and life and ambition; and then, when all of the skies were filled with rainbows and when life was so full of charm; when they had grown into the full stature and nobility of manhood and were entered upon their God-given right to live lives of usefulness and honorable service to their Maker and their fellow men, we saw war's merciless hand reach out and grip them, and regiment them, and send them away to die among strangers in foreign lands. Oh, the unspeakable pathos of it all!

This scarred old world of ours is full of shrines, Mr. Speaker, where love wends its eternal pilgrimages to lay its garlands on the altar of devotion, but no shrines are quite so sacred or so everlastingly entwined with the love and tears of our people as the graves where our beloved soldier boys are sleeping.

It is for us who are living to solemnly resolve that these boys of ours shall not have died in vain. No plummet line could ever sound the depth of wrong and injustice that was done to these boys when they were dragged into war's frightful cataclysm unless we who are living can build on their last full measure of devotion a better world. Theirs was a hopeless immolation and the very acme of tragic futility unless in some way or other, God giving us inspiration and vision, we who are left to carry on can weld their sacrifice into safeguards of everlasting peace.

It is with this thought in mind and with these emotions stirring me that I am now going to introduce to you, my colleagues, a witness who hopes that you will act favorably on my war-referendum peace resolution (H. J. Res. 199) which, except in the case of attack or invasion, would give the people of America a right to vote on a declaration of war before such a declaration becomes effective. Under the terms of this proposed constitutional amendment our boys would not be sent into foreign wars until the people have a chance to vote on the proposal in a Nation-wide referendum, the women having equal voting rights with the men.

It is with the deepest respect and reverence that I introduce my witness. If she were here to be presented in person every man and woman in this Chamber would rise out of respect for her. She personifies in a great and impressive way the love that America bears for its soldier dead. My witness is Mrs. Mathilda Burling, of Richmond Hill, N. Y., national president of the American Gold Star Mothers of the World War. Every member of the organization over which Mrs. Burling so capably presides is a mother who lost at least one son in the last war. The American Gold Star Mothers occupy a position unique in our country. The very name connotes reverence and affection. Mrs. Burling believes that on the immeasurable sacrifice which the Gold Star Mothers have made for their country and for humanity there must be a way to build foundations of lasting peace and as a step in that direction she favors the adoption of the war-referendum resolution I have introduced. I was greatly cheered and heartened a day or so ago when I received a letter from her announcing her support of my proposal. By unanimous consent of the House I present quotations from her pen, as follows:

I do believe that the mothers could do very much toward peace if they could be banded together and get organized properly. We hope and we pray that our children of America should never be taken to be cannon fodder on foreign soil. We mothers, whose flesh and blood enriched the foreign soil, know what sacrifices are made in these conflicts. We hope and we pray that some way could be found to settle grievances and misunderstanding among nations and bring about greater love toward one another.

Mothers of the world should bend every effort to make the world safe for the sons they bring into the world, for the sons they nourish and care for with the tenderness that is characteristic of motherhood.

God made the men of the world for something more than cannon fodder, for something more than inanimate pawns in the game of international murder, something more than potential debris of shell-torn battlefields. God made men of the world to live useful lives, to abide in peace and harmony with their fellow men, not to kill and to maim them, not to shower death and destruction upon their helpless women and children to satisfy the whims of a homicidal maniac strutting about in the trappings of a dictator.

Who is there that may strive or plead for peace with more just and poignant authority than the mothers who have given their sons and daughters in its cause? Surely it is peculiarly and sacredly their own, and efforts they might make in such an endeavor would constitute a most appropriate tribute to the memory of their loved ones.

Conditions in the world today present a ringing challenge to all of us to so order our thinking and doing that finally there may be achieved a complete abandonment of the ways that lead to war.

What can we do to avert war? We cannot, as loyal and patriotic Americans refuse to bear arms if our country calls upon us to do so. But we can insure this country and its people, not against war, but against participation in war except for defensive purposes.

I hope that the words of this wise and patriotic woman, the head of the organization of mothers whose sons sleep in France, will sink deeply into our consciousness. It is to carry out the exact purpose she has in mind, namely "to insure this country and its people against participation in war except for defensive purposes", that my war referendum peace resolution is directed.

This splendid and wonderful woman, who speaks for the mothers who lost their sons in the World War—a loss that only a mother knows and understands—hopes that the Members of this body will sign the Discharge Petition No. 11 which I have filed at the Speaker's desk to bring my peace resolution before the House for debate and a vote.

It is not in the book of fate that the petition will obtain enough signers to make it effective at the present session but we hope that all who favor it will sign it now so that it will be pending with a formidable list of signatures when Congress reconvenes in January.

Oh, friends in the Congress of the United States, remembering the precious sacrifice the Gold Star Mothers made when they gave their very own to their country, will you not do as they would have you do? Will you not sign Discharge Petition No. 11?

Mr. KNIFFIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUDLOW. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KNIFFIN. May I say to my distinguished friend from Indiana that I have signed Discharge Petition No. 11, and I hope enough Members will sign it so that the question may be brought to the floor for consideration. I signed that petition because I do not believe this country should send soldiers to foreign jurisdictions to follow those who wish to exploit the resources of the Far East, Central America, and other places. That is the reason I signed the petition, and I hope it will be signed by enough Members so that the gentleman's resolution may be brought to the floor for consideration and become the law of the land as quickly as possible.

Mr. LUDLOW. The gentleman from Ohio was one of the first signers of the discharge petition I filed at the Speaker's desk. He is one of the most sincere and earnest friends of peace in the national lawmaking body. I feel honored by his support and thank him for his contribution to the discussion. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

SLEEPING SICKNESS OF THE RULES COMMITTEE

Mr. MAVERICK. Mr. Speaker, what I am about to say is said so that it will get into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I hope the people of the United States will know it. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MCFARLANE] just referred to the sleeping sickness of the Rules Committee. It is the sickness of a fox.

Mr. Speaker, we have gotten ourselves in such a state in this House where we have gagged ourselves and encircled the membership with rules to such an extent that we cannot even consider legislation.

Now the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is very much worried about the Nazis taking over the country. I do not want to get into a Nazi argument, but it seems to me that minimum wages and hours and protection of the living standards for millions and millions of Americans are of considerably more importance than chasing around hunting a few misguided people who are crazy enough to wear swastikas. Also, we have made solemn pledges. Are we keeping them?

Mr. MCCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAVERICK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Does the gentleman mean minimum wages and maximum hours?

Mr. MAVERICK. I thank the gentleman for the correction. Yes; minimum wages and maximum hours.

NO DICTATOR ON THE FACE OF THE EARTH HAS THE POWER OF THE RULES COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker, we hear a lot about dictatorship in this country. Let us consider that in reference to the Rules Committee. I read this in a newspaper and I do not think there is any doubt about it, as I understand, four Democrats or probably five, are keeping the minimum wages and hours bill from coming on this floor for consideration, thereby depriving several million American people of the protection of this law or a possible vote on it by this House. This means that four or five Democrats have more power than the other 324 Democrats, 88 Republicans, and 11 Farmer-Laborites and Progressive Members.

There is no dictator on the face of the earth—no king, prince, or emperor, that has as much power as the Rules Committee. It is grotesque and amazing for a civilized country that claims to have democratic government. I am talking common sense to you. It is not reasonable, it is not fair, it is not democratic.

What is the Rules Committee for? The Rules Committee is not supposed to be a nurse to slap this House like we are a set of babies. It is not supposed to be a censor for this House. One of the gentlemen on the Rules Committee said the wage and hour bill was communistic and unconstitutional. Are we simpletons? We should be able to decide issues ourselves.

What is the Rules Committee for? The Rules Committee is supposed to take legislation and put it on the calendar, if it is of sufficient importance, and give us a chance to vote on the legislation.

Let us consider the Supreme Court of the United States. After we pass legislation, a lawsuit goes up and the Supreme Court declares the legislation unconstitutional, but the Rules Committee declares this minimum wage and hour bill unconstitutional in advance and say we cannot even vote on it.

WE ARE THE DOORMAT OF EVERY BRANCH OF THE GOVERNMENT

We have gagged ourselves. We have made ourselves the doormat of every other branch of the Government. We have made it so that the Senate is far more powerful than we are. We bend over like slaves and lash ourselves. Oh, my colleagues, we will have to do something to relieve ourselves of the onerous situation of the Rules Committee being the dictator of this House, or else we are not representatives of the people.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ECKERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter addressed to John L. Lewis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHNEIDER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein the schedule of wages on the railroads.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an open letter from the Association for National Tax Relief.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, there are very few Members of the House present, and some legislation might be brought up. I therefore make the point of order a quorum is not present. I think we ought to have all the Members here to hear the important business that is coming up from now on.

Mr. MAVERICK. Will the gentleman withhold the point of order?

Mr. RICH. If the Speaker will assure me there are going to be no unanimous-consent requests to bring up bills which will require the expenditure of money, I will give the Members all the time they want and sit here and enjoy it.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

THE RULES COMMITTEE

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I want to supplement the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAVERICK] with reference to the Committee on Rules. Although I am a new Member and have not studied the rules a great deal, my understanding is that the province of the Committee on Rules as such does not include legislative discretion. In other words, to pass on the merits of legislation. I do not believe the Committee on Rules was brought into existence for the purpose of promulgating selected legislation by them. On the other hand, I believe its primary duty to the Members of the House of Representatives is to provide ways and means whereby legislation may be brought upon the floor of the House.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to the gentleman's proceeding for 1 additional minute, but I shall object to any further extension of the gentleman's time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the members of the Committee on Rules have no right to bar the Members of the House from passing on the wage and hour bill or any other bill. The province of this committee, as I understand the rules, is nothing more nor less than to provide a method of procedure whereby the House shall have the right to pass upon legislation introduced in the House.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. What can be done when the committee consists of 14 members, and before a rule can be granted a favorable majority is necessary if it is impossible to get a majority of the members of the committee to vote to report a bill out? I agree with the gentleman that the Committee on Rules is supposed to expedite business.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

Mr. COSTELLO. I object, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL YOUTH ADMINISTRATION

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, a couple of days ago I asked the indulgence of the House to discuss for a few minutes the distressing situation with reference to the National Youth Administration.

In my remarks on this floor this week I pointed out that when the relief bill was under consideration many of us voted to provide the full $1,500,000,000 primarily for the reason that we were assured by what we believed was high authority that the National Youth Administration would receive $75,000,000 of that fund. I know that several members of the Appropriations Committee were so advised, and there is no question but that such assurances from those responsible for the expenditure of relief funds was of great assistance in the passage of that bill. In spite of such assurances, however, the allocations of funds for the National Youth Administration have been slashed to $40,000,000, which, I am told, means that college-aid fund for the school year beginning this September will be cut to 8 percent. This, of course, means that thousands and thousands of college students who have made their plans to enter college must be told that, despite the fact that this Congress earmarked funds to take care of them, there are no funds because of the inexcusable and stupid order cutting the National Youth Administration 40 percent.

I have received many letters of praise for the National Youth Administration from college and high-school students in Oklahoma who are familiar with the fine National Youth Administration program in my State under the leadership of Mr. Houston Wright, the brilliant and energetic National Youth Administration director for the State of Oklahoma.

I have also received a number of telegrams from college presidents, who appreciate the good work of this great organization in aiding needy college students in our State. These heads of our educational institutions are unanimous in their opposition to a reduction in funds to the National Youth Administration of 40 percent.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD some of the telegrams I have received.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I may say that the National Youth Administration has done a very wonderful service. There has been very little if any criticism, and there have been absolutely no scandals in connection with it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman, my distinguished friend from Massachusetts. Many other leading Members have so expressed themselves privately. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts, as well as others interested in seeing that American youth receive a square deal, that you join me in a plea to the President of the United States to restore at least a substantial portion of what we feel so keenly is an unreasonable and uncalled for reduction in the great unselfish program of the National Youth Administration. Here are some of the many telegrams I have received.

NORMAN, OKLA., August 19, 1937.

Hon. JED JOHNSON,
Congress of the United States:
The proposed reduction in percentage quota of N. Y. A. student means that hundreds of students will be deprived of attending colleges in this State this fall. Have wired Hopkins urging more favorable action. Your assistance will be appreciated.

W. B. BIZZELL,
President, Oklahoma University.

LAWTON, OKLA., August 19, 1937.

Congressman JED JOHNSON,
Congressional Office Building, Washington, D. C.:
Have been advised $25,000,000 N. Y. A. funds being transferred to W. P. A. seriously affecting student-aid program. Please help us prevent this transfer.

C. M. CONWILL.

CHICKASHA, OKLA., August 18, 1937.

Congressman JED JOHNSON,
House Office Building:
We are distressed to read Associated Press report that N. Y. A. apportionment may be drastically cut. N. Y. A. fund most necessary at Oklahoma College for Women. No better value received for any Government expenditure. Please urge reinstatement. Thanks.

M. A. NASH,
President, Oklahoma College for Women.

CLAREMORE, OKLA., August 19, 1937.

JED JOHNSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:
Informed that $25,000,000 of N. Y. A. funds being transferred to W. P. A., which seriously affects student-aid program. Will you please use your influence and position to prevent this transfer of funds? The youth of Oklahoma needs the N. Y. A. assistance and a great number cannot go to school this fall without it. Our quota for N. Y. A. jobs this year only 8 percent of college enrollment compared with 12 percent last year. Another cut will affect materially attendance of college and high-school youth.

WALTER E. DOWNS,
President, Oklahoma Military Academy.

Permit me to add also that, although I have no recent telegram from Dr. H. G. Bennett, president of Oklahoma A. and M. College, because of the fact that he is out of the State this week, yet I know because of several communications and conversations that President Bennett—that he, like the heads of all the other educational institutions in Oklahoma and throughout the country, is enthusiastic in his praise for the program of the National Youth Administration.

THE RULES COMMITTEE

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time, since there has been so much talk the last few minutes about the Committee on Rules and about its action on the wage and hour bill, to state that there is only one member of the Committee on Rules on the floor of the House at this moment, and I think the RECORD ought to show that this member, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], has always been for the wage and hour bill and still is in favor of it, and has done everything he can to get it out of the Rules Committee. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour, it seems to me only proper that objection should be made. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SWOPE (at the request of Mr. HAINES) for this day on account of illness in his family.

(Mr. CONNALLY introduced Senate Joint Resolution 217, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and appears under a separate heading.)

AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION—MEMBERSHIP OF UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, recently the Senate passed a resolution appointing a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary to make a study of all matters relating to the Federal courts, and to report to the next session of Congress. Because of that fact, I now ask leave to introduce a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution relating to the organization of the Supreme Court, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution provides that the membership of the Supreme Court shall consist of nine Justices—one Chief Justice and eight Associate Justices. It further provides that upon attaining the age of 70 years any Justice may resign, and thereby be assured for life the compensation he was receiving at the time of his resignation. It provides that upon attaining the age of 75 years any Justice who has not in the meantime retired shall retire from the Court. The provision as to forced retirement at the age of 75 years does not apply to any of the members of the Court at the present time, but only to those hereafter appointed. The joint resolution further provides that no Justice shall be appointed to the Supreme Court from any circuit that is then represented on the Court. The effect of that will be that in the course of time the nine Justices will be from the nine separate circuits of the United States.

The last provision of the joint resolution is that no person who serves as Chief Justice or an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court shall ever thereafter be eligible for any executive or legislative office under the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Would it be practicable to include in the amendment an inhibition against the appointment of a man who had held such an office prior to that time?

Mr. CONNALLY. I suppose that could be done by constitutional amendment. The amendment could be amended in that way. Since the Senator from Idaho is a member of the Judiciary Committee, and the joint resolution will be referred to the committee, I shall expect him to give attention to that particular aspect of the matter, and probably suggest a modification of the amendment when it is taken up by the committee. The purpose of the latter clause is, of course, to prevent any Justice from being open to the temptation to make political decisions and to become a candidate for the Presidency, or for the Senate, or for any other high station.

It will be remembered that Mr. Chief Justice Chase was almost continuously a candidate for President of the United States while he was serving as Chief Justice of the United States, and other Justices have entertained ambitions of that character. I believe that when a man is appointed to the Supreme Court of the United States, and assumes that station, he ought to enter upon a cloistered judicial life. I do not mean that he should not be in touch with current events, but he ought to be removed from the possibility of becoming embroiled in partisan or personal politics. We have already provided that he shall have security for his lifetime. He has a salary for life. It cannot be diminished or taken away from him. Therefore, I want to remove also temptation from any political inducement whatever.

So, Mr. President, I ask leave to introduce the joint resolution, and to have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for the study of the subcommittee during the recess of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the joint resolution will be received and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 217), proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to the membership of the Supreme Court, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, there is much wisdom in the suggestion of the able Senator from Texas; and the interpellation of the Senator from Idaho indicates that this amendment may be added to, though it may be said that it is not to be improved.

During the minute I occupy the floor I wish to say, with the consent of Senators allowing this intrusion, that I have read that the President of the United States is shortly to address the country respecting the Constitution, and, it is intimated, respecting some amendments to it. The suggestion of the Senator from Texas indicates that there are provisions in the Constitution which need to be clarified and made more definite. In view of the fact that the interstate-commerce feature, the due-process-of-law feature, and other features of the Constitution have lately been the basis of much dispute by thoughtful men, and seem to have led to much contradiction and confusion through the Supreme Court of the United States, I am exceedingly anxious that if the President of the United States shall find it agreeable in the addresses which we are told he will undertake to discuss the amendment of the Constitution, he will consider that the time has come when there should be a general new Constitution. Instead of having the Constitution divided into parts and now and then fractured by some addition to this or that or the other clause of the instrument, it is time for the country to consider the whole situation and remedy all of the matters which require correction.

If we have reached the point where the Constitution should be amended in the several particulars in which at present interest is being manifested, I suggest, sir, that there be a new constitutional convention at an appropriate early time to consider the whole Constitution, that it may be generally amended and changed to meet the new and necessary conditions and the needs of the Republic.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I suggest to the Senator in that connection that, of course, the amendment which I offer does not in any wise affect the powers of the Congress under the commerce clause. We will probably need to have the Constitution amended to clarify that provision. But with relation to the fourteenth amendment, I wish to say that I heartily agree with the Senator from Idaho, who has pending an amendment to the fourteenth amendment which would remove what I think was an erroneous construction of that amendment by the Supreme Court in classifying corporations as "persons", entitled to all the rights and privileges under the Constitution to which individuals are entitled, and perhaps in some other respects.

That is a very important matter because under that construction of the fourteenth amendment has grown up a great body of decisions which have been very troublesome to both the States and to the Federal Government in handling modern development of commerce and transportation, and all of the varied activities of American business life.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, it cannot be denied that there is much foundation for the complaint. I am greatly regretful that a member of the Supreme Court of the United States appointed as a Democrat, Mr. Justice Peckham, was the first to step aside and assert that under the provision of the Constitution to which we have referred such privilege is extended to institutions which, previous to that time, had had no life or existence. Nevertheless, the word "person", in the fourteenth amendment, has been construed to mean any institution of any nature that arises and exists under the Federal Government, when the truth is that the real object of the amendment was to protect the colored man as a person who, it was thought by the writers of the amendment and those who passed it, might be the subject of some injustice, and largely to prevent him from being discriminated against because he was black and had lately been in slavery the amendment was adopted. But it has been so construed, it has been so tortured, it has been so extended as to work a greater amount of injustice to the general public of the United States than any other provision in the Constitution. For that reason, and other reasons I have intimated, the time has come, if we are proceeding upon the policy of amending the Constitution, to consider the whole Constitution generally, and the need of any amendment and all amendments, in order to effect the purposes of the Constitution, namely, the service of the American citizen and the American public.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but for a few moments. Throughout the world there are political and economical disturbances; and criticisms and, indeed, assaults are being made against governments and political institutions. It may truly be said that this is an iconoclastic age when landmarks erected by noble men are being removed and the foundations of political and economic structures are being undermined. It is the view of many that progress is measured by the abandonment of ideals, which have guided in the past, and the destruction of the foundations upon which rest moral codes and political and governmental institutions.

The Constitution of the United States is acclaimed by the lovers of liberty, and the most enlightened people of the world, as the greatest political document which ever emanated from man. Under the Constitution there has been developed the greatest Nation in all the world, great not only in its material strength, but in its moral and spiritual power. I am unwilling to concede that it should be cast aside, and that a new constitution should be formed. It has met all conditions in times of peace, and measured up to every standard in periods of stress and strife. I believe that the patriotic men who drafted it were endowed with divine wisdom; and I firmly believe that it is sufficient to meet the needs of the present and the future, and that under it freedom and justice may be enjoyed. This Nation, if the spirit and principles of the Constitution are preserved, will grow in influence and moral and spiritual power, and its influence for good and for righteousness will be pervasive in all the world.

There are some who believe that radical and revolutionary changes are essential to progress and that moral and spiritual forces are weighed by materialistic scales. And there are individuals who are not satisfied with the Ten Commandments and the commandments of the Savior; they regard the work of Moses as too imperfect and they would add to the Decalog; they would change the Beatitudes of the Master and the teachings and commandments which exalted Him to the moral and spiritual leadership of the world, in His age and in all succeeding generations. The exalted teachings of Moses and the inspired and divine teachings of the Savior constitute the highest form of religion, and an ethical and spiritual philosophy which constitutes the richest inheritance man can enjoy.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of my able friend from Utah, a scholar both in theological history and modern economic history, that what he has suggested was what was done, the commandments were amended. Jesus Christ, as the Scriptures tell us, seeing how deficient were the commandments as then interpreted by the Sanhedrin, the supreme court of that day, to apply to the conditions of the time, added two commandments. One was, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart", and the other was, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself"; and, said He, "On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets", indicating clearly how perviously the commandments had failed in their usefulness. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I fear the Senator has overlooked inspired passages in the Pentateuch, which enjoin a love of the Creator, and a recognition of the duties and obligations to one's neighbor.

REORGANIZATION OF FEDERAL COURTS—CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a substitute amendment revising Senate Joint Resolution No. 100, and have the same read at this time and referred to the Judiciary Committee to be considered along with other joint resolutions proposing to amend the Constitution which affect the reorganization of the Federal courts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the proposed amendment submitted by the Senator from Florida will be read, printed, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. ANDREWS to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 100) proposing an amendment to section 1, article III, of the Constitution of the United States relating to the judiciary, viz: In lieu of the matter after the enacting clause, insert the following:

"That the following amendment, when ratified by three-fourths of the several States, shall replace section 1 of article III of the Constitution of the United States of America:

"ARTICLE III

"SECTION 1. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in a Supreme Court, circuit courts of appeal, district courts, and such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The Justices and judges of said courts shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"The Supreme Court shall be composed of a Chief Justice appointed from the United States at large, and 10 Associate Justices appointed one each from the territories composing respectively the 10 circuit courts of appeal as defined by Congress. If upon this amendment becoming effective the territory of any circuit court of appeals be represented on the Supreme Court by more than one Associate Justice, then no appointment to the extent of such excess representation shall be made from an unrepresented circuit until such excess representation shall cease.

"The respective circuit courts of appeal shall be composed of at least one judge from each State included within the territory comprising such court, the senior member of which shall be the presiding judge.

"Any Justice or judge, having held a commission or commissions as such Justice or judge of said courts for at least 10 years, may retire upon attaining 70 years of age; and all Justices and judges, except those serving at the time of the ratification hereof, shall automatically retire upon attaining the age of 75 years and, in either case, shall receive at stated times a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office, nor in case of their retirement after having served 10 years.

"This section shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States within 5 years from the date of its submission."

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, many Members of the Senate seem to feel there should be submitted at this session of Congress a proposed amendment to our Constitution providing, in substance:

First. An age limit for retirement of all Federal judges.

Second. Appointment of Associate Justices of our Supreme Court, one each from the territory composing the 10 respective circuit courts of appeal, and that the respective circuit courts of appeal should be composed of at least one judge from each State included in each circuit.

I am presenting a revision of Senate Joint Resolution 100, which is now offered as an amendment by way of substitute for a similar one introduced by me early in this session. This last draft seems to meet generally the views of those of the Senate and hundreds of officials and citizens who have expressed themselves on this subject.

I am asking that the same be read into the RECORD at this time, and that it be considered by the special committee appointed to make a study and report to the Senate on amendments proposed on this subject.

The debate between the distinguished Members of the Senate during the past few days on the question as to whether the President has authority under our Constitution to fill the "vacancy" created by the retirement of Mr. Justice Van Devanter by appointing a "successor" has further emphasized and conclusively shown to us that the only proper and practical way to deal with the permanent "retirement" of Federal Judges is by constitutional amendment.

My original Senate Joint Resolution 100 was not, when first introduced early in this session of Congress, nor is it now after being revised, intended as a substitute for the bill recently recommitted, which was designed to enlarge the Federal courts by duplicating judges over 70 or 75 years of age.

The first sentence of section 1, article III, would, as amended, read as follows:

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in a Supreme Court, circuit courts of appeal, district courts, and such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.

The reason circuit courts and district courts are here specifically named is that those courts, although created by statute, have, after 150 years' experience, been established as a part of our trial and appellate court system, and no doubt they will so remain throughout our national existence.

Another new provision in this amendment provides that when any Justice or judge holds a commission for at least 10 years, he may voluntarily retire upon attaining the age of 70 years, and all Justices and judges, except those serving at the time of the ratification hereof, shall automatically retire upon attaining the age of 75 years, and in either case shall thereafter receive the same annual compensation.

While some judges have served on the bench after the age of 75 with marked ability and undiminished mental vision and powers, both as to the law and social advancement, it is equally true that those instances may well be considered as exceptions, and it is logical to assume that the exceptions should not be made the rule. The records show that the average number of opinions written during the past 2 years by Justices less than 75 years of age was 40, and for those over 75 only 20. In fairness it should likewise be remembered that each Justice carefully reviews all opinions before they are rendered, whether he is the author or not.

After intimate knowledge gained by long service on the Supreme Court, our distinguished Chief Justice, in 1927, suggested compulsory retirement of all judges at 75. He gave his reasons as follows:

> I agree that the importance in the Supreme Court of avoiding the risk of having Judges who are unable properly to do their work and yet insist on remaining on the bench is too great to permit chances to be taken, and any age selected must be somewhat arbitrary, as the time of the failing in mental power differs widely. * * * Under present conditions of living and in view of the increased facility of maintaining health and vigor, the age of 70 may well be thought too early for compulsory retirement. Such retirement is too often the community's loss. A compulsory retirement at 75 could more easily be defended.

Based upon careful observation and experience of more than a century, it seems to be the consensus of opinion that compulsory retirement should be permanently fixed in our Constitution at 75. It would permanently dispose of a recurring embarrassing controversy.

The proposed amendment also provides that the Supreme Court shall hereafter be composed of a Chief Justice appointed from the United States at large and 10 Associate Justices to be appointed, 1 each from the territories composing respectively the 10 circuit courts of appeal. Such an apportionment of the Justices to the major divisions of the United States was obviously intended at the time the Constitution was drafted; in fact, it has its basis in our historical background. This being a representative democracy operating under a limited Constitution, the people are now more than ever conscious of the fact that the personnel of our Federal appellate courts, like our Congress and our executive department, should be more nearly representative of every major section of the Union, in order that its members may be more conversant with all vital agricultural, social, economic, and educational problems and interests. Judges, like other human beings, are by nature creatures of environment. In that very fact rests our strength rather than our weakness. They naturally view social and economic problems and issues through mental glasses tinted by the influence of environment, and would thus be better equipped to render impartial justice involved in constantly changing conditions in every great diversified section of our great country.

Through no fault of theirs, at least six members of our present Supreme Court come from the northeastern financial and industrial section of the United States. Two were appointed from the Northwest, and only one from the south half of the United States. One of our Justices, often accredited to Tennessee, was, according to the records, not appointed from that State. For the first time in over a quarter of a century a Justice has just been appointed on the Supreme Court from the southern half of the United States. That great agricultural territory stretching from the Pacific to the Atlantic is now asking to become something more than just a province of the United States in that department where the final scales of justice are applied to life, liberty, and property.

In order to bring about an early apportionment as well as to fix a definite number of Justices on the Supreme Court, this amendment further provides that if, upon this amendment becoming effective the territory of any circuit court of appeals be represented on the Supreme Court by more than one Associate Justice, then no appointment to the extent of such excess representation shall be made from an unrepresented circuit until such excess representation shall cease.

This is placed in the amendment in order that the distribution shall be made to the 10 circuits automatically and gradually as vacancies occur in those offices which are of course now held under life tenure. After this amendment is ratified no vacancies could be filled except by appointment from an unrepresented circuit, at which time the two additional members provided therein could be appointed, one each from separate unrepresented circuits by reason of the increase to 10. If this amendment were now in force, only the second circuit, composed of New York and Vermont, would have more than one Associate Justice on the Supreme Court—Chief Justice Hughes being in the status "from the United States at large."

History shows that in practically all instances when the Supreme Court has been increased it was nearly always by reason of expansion of territory. The first increase over the original six was under Jefferson, when the three new States of Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee were admitted to the Union. Immediately a new judicial circuit was created and a seventh Justice added to the Supreme Court because of the further expansion of the country.

During the next 30 years the country had continued to expand, thus causing the representatives of the Middle Northwest to urge that another circuit be created. This being done, the Supreme Court was increased from seven to nine members. By 1863 our western frontier had reached the Pacific coast, when a tenth member was added to the Supreme Court. This increase was evidently initiated to make the Supreme Court as nearly as possible a representative body in conformity with our plan of government.

When General Grant became President in 1869, the Court had, by death or resignation, been allowed to reduce, for alleged political reasons, from 10 to 8 members by operation of an act of Congress passed in 1866 at the close of the Civil War. In 1869 Congress again fixed the membership at nine. It has so remained for the past 68 years, although our country has almost trebled in population.

By 1920 the Supreme Court docket had become so congested that an act was passed which restricted the right of appeal in nearly 80 percent of the cases. The average American does not look with favor upon such a restriction of the right of appeal to our court of last resort.

All agree that our written Constitution established a government of laws and not of men. A reversal of that declared theory would ultimately accomplish its destruction. No true American desires to destroy that basic theory. There is well founded belief that, by this proposed amendment, we are not only building a stronger fortress of justice but furthering the ends of justice by making the courts more representative of the people and thus more responsive to the educational, economic, industrial, and social needs.

The fact that those in political power saw fit to depart from our original policy seven decades ago by confining practically all appointments to our Supreme Court to the northeast section of the United States has caused some peculiar situations not understood by the average person. For example, our able Associate Justice Cardozo, although appointed from New York, was, under our present system, until recently, the supervising Justice of the fifth judicial circuit—the largest in the United States—composed of Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas. It is said that he has never resided in that circuit. A similar situation obtains as to other circuits.

An examination of the record will further disclose that there are 22 States which have never had one of their citizens on the Supreme Court; 11 States only 1 member on the Supreme Court; 4 States, 2; 4 States, 3; 3 States, 5; Pennsylvania alone has had 6; Ohio, 7; and New York, 12. It has been 77 years since Virginia, the mother of Presidents, has seen one of her sons on the United States Supreme Court; Connecticut, 137 years; Iowa, 47 years; Maine, 56 years; Maryland, 73 years; Mississippi, 43 years; New Hampshire, 86 years; North Carolina, 133 years; and South Carolina, 103 years. The great agricultural and livestock States of Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Indiana, Missouri, and Nebraska—this great empire of the Middle West, with great cities like Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Des Moines, Omaha, and Indianapolis, to mention only a few—have not had a Supreme Court Justice from that area for more than a quarter of a century. There has grown up an apparent belief—especially among those heretofore entrusted with appointive powers—that eligibility for appointment chiefly consists in some kind of training a lawyer receives in the great financial center.

This proposed amendment not only makes our highest Court a more representative body but its number definite. If ratified it can never again be charged that the Supreme Court is being "packed" or "unpacked" by any proposed statutory enactment. The proposed amendment further provides that:

> The respective circuit courts of appeal shall be composed of at least one judge from each State included within the territory comprising such court, the senior member of which shall be the presiding judge.

We feel that each State is entitled to at least one member on the circuit court of appeals, because that court is the court of last resort for about 9 out of every 10 Federal cases. It will necessarily permit the populous States of New York and Pennsylvania to have more than one member on the circuit court of appeals of which they respectively form a part.

Most important of all is the fact that this proposed amendment would allow the people themselves to forever settle the questions, first, as to the retirement of Federal judges at the age of 75 years; second, the just apportionment of Supreme Court Justices and circuit judges by appointment from a specified circuit or State; and third, to definitely fix the number of Justices hereafter to be placed on the Supreme Court.

Naturally, any statute enacted at this or any other time without these proposed constitutional powers would be subject to repeal by any subsequent Congress, and thus possibly throw the whole matter into controversy again at a time perhaps when it would be even more disturbing than at present.

By allowing the people of the United States themselves to make these three contemplated changes, Congress will thereby secure not only the confidence but the preponderant influence and power of our people, and our courts the respect needed to insure a more sympathetic and efficient administration of justice throughout the United States, which has for many years been the subject of much adverse criticism not only among those in high positions in the executive and legislative departments, but those in high judicial authority as well.

We certainly can gain much and lose nothing by submitting this amendment and thus afford our States the privilege of making our Federal courts more representative bodies, like the Congress and the Executive Department. The Constitution provides a way for us to forever settle these three disturbing controversies.

By way of illustration of my contention that the personnel of the Supreme Court is not, at present, apportioned to the great natural and geographical sections of the United States, I am offering, as part of my address, the following table:

MEMBERSHIP DISTRIBUTION OF SUPREME COURT

First circuit population, 6,199,827: Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island. Mr. Brandeis, of Massachusetts.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 8099) to amend certain administrative provisions of the Tariff Act of 1930, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

CIVIL-SERVICE EXAMINATION FOR OFFICE OF POSTMASTER AT PORTSMOUTH, VA.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of a Senate resolution which I do not think will lead to any debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let the resolution be read, before consent is given.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 187) was read, as follows:

> Resolved, That the Civil Service Commission is directed to report to the Senate immediately by virtue of what authority, at whose suggestion, and for what reasons it has declined to furnish to the Senators from the State of Virginia information with respect to the results of the examination given for the office of postmaster at Portsmouth, Va., in May 1937.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I desire to say that there is no Member of the Senate now and never has been one who has a greater detestation for Federal patronage and its distribution than I have. The two Senators from Virginia have accorded to the nine Representatives in Congress from that State the right to nominate all the postmasters in their respective districts; but the Senators from Virginia are not going to stand idly by and see either corruption or irregular manipulation of civil-service practices engaged in for the benefit of any politician on earth. For that reason I have offered this resolution, because the Civil Service Commission, in a very sinister sort of way, has declined to furnish the Virginia Senators with the results of an examination held last May.

WITHDRAWAL OF MOTION

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a few days ago House bill 7985 was passed by the Senate and sent to the House. I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and the House, on my motion, was requested to return the papers to the Senate. I now desire to withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the motion will be withdrawn, and without objection, the House will be requested to return to the Senate the message requesting the House to return the bill and accompanying papers.

IMPORT DUTIES ON TEXTILES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 177) submitted by Mr. STEIWER on the 16th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is requested to transmit to the Senate not later than January 15, 1938, its recommendations with respect to the desirability of fixing the import duties on textiles on a basis of specific rates, subject to the limitations of existing ad-valorem rates, for the purpose of providing a more nearly equal competitive basis between countries having high costs of production and countries having low costs of production, in exporting textiles to the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Oregon will not insist on the consideration of this resolution requesting the Tariff Commission to transmit to the Senate certain information. At the moment it is desired to have the deficiency appropriation bill taken up for consideration, and I should like to look into the resolution a little further. I suggest that it lie on the table.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will we have another opportunity at a later time to consider the resolution?

Mr. BARKLEY. Possibly so. I should like to talk to the Senator about it first. I wish also to confer with the State Department.

Mr. STEIWER. I do not like to forego a chance of its consideration, but I will be happy to let it go over and will later discuss the matter with the Senator.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CASUALTIES ON AMERICAN WARSHIP AT SHANGHAI

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I arise to give some information to the Senate which perhaps many Senators have not already heard.

The Navy Department today received a communication from the Japanese-Chinese war zone to the effect that a shell had struck one of our naval vessels, the Augusta, at Shanghai, the vessel being just off the Bund. One enlisted man was killed and 18 others were wounded. It is unknown up to the present time whether the shell came from the Chinese or the Japanese side. It was a small shell.

I submit to the Senate the information received.

ORDER TO DISPENSE WITH CALL OF THE CALENDAR

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the call of the calendar be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 8245, the third deficiency bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8245) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The first committee amendment will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 2, to insert:

TITLE I—GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS

LEGISLATIVE

SENATE

To pay to Ewilda G. Robinson, widow of Hon. Joseph T. Robinson, late a Senator from the State of Arkansas, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 6, to insert:

To pay Edward J. Trenwith, as compensation for compiling a revised supplement to the compilation entitled "Treaties, conventions, international acts, and protocols, between the United States and other powers", to include treaties, conventions, important protocols, and international acts to which the United States may have been a party since March 4, 1923, under resolution of the Senate (S. Res. 132, 75th Cong., 1st sess.), fiscal year 1938, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 15, to insert:

Office of the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper: For an amount required to increase the compensation of the secretary of the majority and the secretary of the minority $1,000 each per annum so long as the positions are held by the present incumbents, fiscal year 1938, $2,000, and the act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, approved May 18, 1937, is amended by adding on page 3, under the office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper, after the words "two secretaries (one for the majority and one for the minority), at $5,400 each" the following: and $1,000 additional to each so long as either position is held by either of the present incumbents.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, in the amendment just stated, beginning in line 16, page 2, there seems to be some unnecessary phraseology. I should like to perfect the amendment by striking out on page 2, line 20, all after the numerals "$2,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 20, in the committee amendment, after the numerals "$2,000" it is proposed to strike out the following: "And the act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, approved May 18, 1937, is amended by adding on page 3, under the office of Sergeant of Arms and Doorkeeper, after the words 'two secretaries (one for the majority and one for the minority), at $5,400 each' the following: and $1,000 additional to each so long as either position is held by either of the present incumbents", so as to make the committee amendment read:

Office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper: For an amount required to increase the compensation of the Secretary of the Majority and the Secretary of the Minority $1,000 each per annum so long as the positions are held by the present incumbents, fiscal year 1938, $2,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry relative to appropriations authorized under the Cooperative Farm Forestry Act. It is my understanding the item was recommended by the Bureau of the Budget and that an appropriation of $1,000,000 was recommended. This would include the shelterbelt program, together with certain other programs. I do not find any such item in the bill. I inquire whether it was included in the House bill.

Mr. ADAMS. No; it was not. It was taken up with the committee, and the committee declined to insert it in the bill.

Mr. McGILL. Does the Senator refer to the House committee or the Senate committee?

Mr. ADAMS. It was presented to the House committee and was not accepted by that committee. It was then presented to the Senate committee and the Senate committee declined to recommend it.

Mr. McGILL. After the committee amendments are disposed of I presume an amendment to include such an appropriation would be in order?

Mr. ADAMS. I presume so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 3, after line 3, to insert:

Senate document room: For the amount required from September 1, 1937, to June 30, 1938, inclusive, to increase the compensation of the superintendent of the Senate document room at the rate of $1,040 per annum so long as the position is held by the present incumbent, $867.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 8, to insert:

Senate kitchens and restaurants: For repairs, improvements, and equipment for the Senate restaurant, Capitol Building, including personal and other services, fiscal years 1937 and 1938, $12,300, to be expended by the Architect of the Capitol.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 13, to insert:

UNITED STATES CONSTITUTIONAL SESQUICENTENNIAL COMMISSION

For carrying out the provisions of the public resolution entitled "Joint resolution to enable the United States Constitution Sesquicentennial Commission to carry out and give effect to certain approved plans, and for other purposes", approved June 1, 1936 (49 Stat. 1392), as amended by the act approved August 19, 1937, fiscal year 1938, to remain available until December 31, 1939, $100,000, together with the unexpended balance provided for this purpose in the First Deficiency Act of June 22, 1936.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 6, to insert:

ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL

Capitol Building: For purchase and installation of steel shelving for the Senate document room, in room B2, Senate Office Building, fiscal year 1938, $850.

Library Building and Grounds: Not to exceed $18,000 of the appropriations heretofore made for the construction of the Annex, Library of Congress, is hereby made available for the construction of a fireproof bookstack, with necessary appurtenances, for the Hispanic room in the Library of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, to strike out lines 11 to 19, as follows:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

For payment to William Madden, Preston L. George, and William S. Houston, and on account of Samuel Robinson, messengers on night duty during the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress, $900 each; in all, $3,600, to be paid from the appropriation for printing and binding for Congress for the fiscal year 1938; such sum on account of Samuel Robinson to be paid in equal amounts to Mary E. Adams and Nettie Bullas, nieces of such person.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I apologize for the necessity of asking the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] about this item, because I was late in getting to the meeting of the committee yesterday. Was the purpose in striking out the language in lines 11 to 19 with the idea of considering the matter in conference?

Mr. ADAMS. That is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. In other words, the matter is not closed altogether?

Mr. ADAMS. No; it is not closed.

Mr. COPELAND. I wish to call attention to the item. William Madden, Preston George, and William Houston have been for a long time servants of the Senate and House in carrying official papers. Provision was made by the House for certain payments to them, which is stricken out by the Senate committee. I hope sincerely that the language will be restored in the conference.

Mr. ADAMS. When the item was reached by the committee an amendment was offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] to include and add additional names. It reached the point where it seemed better for the committee to strike it all out.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I recall, the four messengers named have been taken care of in a similar item carried in the appropriation bills for something like 20 years. It seems to me that payment ought to be continued. I hope the amendment will be rejected; and if not, that it will be taken care of in conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 10, after line 13, to insert:

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

Salaries and expenses: For an additional amount for the Executive Director of the Social Security Board to make the salary $9,500 per annum, fiscal year 1938, $500; payable from the appropriation for "Salaries and expenses", Social Security Board, fiscal year 1938.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator from Colorado the necessity for this amendment. Is it to increase the salary of some Government official?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this is to carry out an understanding entered into by the conferees during the consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill. I think the amount of the item was reduced from $9,500 to $9,000 through some misunderstanding. The Senate conferees said they would endeavor to have the salary restored at the time of the consideration of the deficiency bill. This is an effort on the part of the Appropriations Committee to carry out the understanding at that time.

Mr. KING. What is the position?

Mr. ADAMS. It is the position of Executive Director of the Social Security Board.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as chairman of the Senate conferees on the independent offices appropriation bill, I know an agreement was made whereby the Senate was to recede from the amendment reducing the salary and the House was to recide from the House amendment. In preparing the report an error was made. The amendment now pending is solely to carry out an agreement between the House and Senate conferees on the independent offices appropriation bill. It restores the salary to what it had been theretofore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 11, after line 2, to insert:

THOMAS JEFFERSON MEMORIAL COMMISSION

For the purposes authorized under the provisions of the act approved June 3, 1936 (49 Stat. 1397), entitled "An act to authorize the execution of plans for a permanent memorial to Thomas Jefferson", fiscal year 1938, $20,000, including payment of obligations heretofore incurred in the fiscal years 1937 and 1938.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator the reason for this item? As I understand, the work of the Commission is practically completed. The House has rejected the plan which was agreed upon and rejected the efforts to secure $500,000 to continue the work. I ask for information as to the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. The purpose is to continue the Commission, to maintain its administrative expenses, upon the theory that Thomas Jefferson is really entitled to an appropriate memorial properly located, and that the Commission should be continued in order to work out the problem.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "United States Maritime Commission", on page 11, line 25, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$75,000,000" and insert "$150,000,000", so as to read:

In addition to the contracts which may be entered into under funds available to the United States Maritime Commission for carrying out the provisions of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, the Commission is authorized to enter into contracts for further carrying out the provisions of such act in an amount not to exceed $150,000,000.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado what justification there is for this increase of $75,000,000 over the amount contained in the bill as it passed the House. It seems to be an effort to give the Maritime Commission an additional $75,000,000 at this time, which is certainly more than they ought to ask. An appropriation of $75,000,000 was granted them, and for them to come now with a proposal for an authorization of $150,000,000, an increase of $75,000,000 over what they were allowed by the House of Representatives, is something that cannot be justified.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to explain the item.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the original request of the Budget Bureau was for an appropriation of cash. The House changed the item to provide merely for an authorization of not to exceed $150,000,000. The statement of the Chairman of the Maritime Commission is that conferences are being held from time to time affecting rates. It seems that in the past the English have influenced and rather dominated the conferences as to rates, and that the desire of the officials of the Maritime Commission is to let the people of this country know and let the world know that the United States intends to carry out this program, and that the hope of the officials is that the action of the Congress in authorizing the Commission at this time to carry out the provisions of the act heretofore enacted by the Congress, they will be in better position in the months to come to protect the rights of American shippers, and to secure better rates for American shipping.

The Chairman of the Commission, Mr. Kennedy, has advised me, in discussing the matter, that it certainly will not be his purpose to make commitments of one dollar more than is absolutely essential during this year. He states that it is possible that a smaller amount of commitments may be justified, and it may not be necessary—certainly his hope is that he will not this year find it necessary—to enter into commitments to the extent of the full amount; but that the additional purpose is that, if this authority exists and the opportunity presents itself to make an advance which will be effective and which will help the merchant marine and at the same time will save money, they will be in position to do it.

That is the statement of the Maritime Commission.

I must say that the thing which has caused me to believe that it would be wise to do what is proposed is that the Congress has enacted the law authorizing this merchant-marine program. This authority will be given either in this appropriation bill or in one next year. If by giving it now the Commission believe that they may possibly save money, and certainly that they may secure better rates for American shipping, there is no reason why we should defer the authorization which must in any event be made.

That is the statement.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I have great respect for the Chairman of the Maritime Commission and for the other members of the Commission. I think they have set about their work in a very ambitious and splendid manner; but, as one Senator, I am not willing to put the United States in the position of playing table-stakes poker with the Maritime Commission, as outlined by the Senator from South Carolina. It seems to me we should proceed more cautiously with these authorizations of vast sums of money, give the Commission an authorization of $75,000,000—which seems to me to be extremely liberal—and let them come back here next year and show what they have done with that amount, instead of just outright doubling the very liberal authorization made by the House of Representatives.

Mr. BYRNES. I may say to the Senator that the estimate of the Budget Bureau and the program of the administration was for $150,000,000. The House reduced the authorization to $75,000,000.

Mr. CLARK. I understand that, and I think the House is absolutely right.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator and I disagree on that; but I do believe there is much to be said in behalf of the argument that if, by making now the commitment which is authorized by law and which is a part of the program that we are going to carry through, we can enable the administration to make a better bargain and to make better rates for American shipping, there would be no reason in deferring it until next year; and we have this situation, as I think the Senator will agree: There are some commissions toward which I might not feel so favorably disposed. I think the Maritime Commission, the confirmation of whose members was recommended by the committee of which the Senator is a member, is about as fine a commission as could be entrusted with this merchant-marine program.

Mr. CLARK. I entirely agree with the Senator on that proposition; but I do not believe we can afford to make appropriations or authorizations on the basis of our personal opinion of the present members of a commission.

Mr. BYRNES. No; but when their opinion, based upon their negotiations, is that this authorization would help them to administer this law efficiently, I would pay more attention to their opinion than I would to the opinions of some commissions whose members do not impress me as favorably as do the members of the Maritime Commission.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator that in all probability I would, too.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I have not the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. ADAMS. I do.

Mr. WHITE. I desire to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question.

Mr. BYRNES. I shall be glad to answer it.

Mr. WHITE. Beyond the consideration which the Senator has already mentioned, is it not true that the Maritime Commission contemplates a substantial building program, to be begun almost immediately, which will call for a very substantial cost construction subsidy, which will have to come out of this amount for which the Commission asks?

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, that is true. I was referring only to one feature of the matter.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator from Maine that $75,000,000 is a pretty good stake to play on.

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, the Senator from Missouri knows that there are times in the construction of ships—because they are constructed over a long period—when advantage can be taken of a price condition and a good trade made, in which event it is advantageous to go ahead and make the trade.

Mr. CLARK. Of course, the Senator from South Carolina is perfectly familiar with the fact that the Maritime Commission already have $69,000,000 in cash money in the till. Now they come here and ask for $150,000,000 more. The House of Representatives has given the Commission $75,000,000. With the money they have on hand, plus the $75,000,000 authorized in the House bill, it certainly seems that they ought to have enough money to operate on during the time remaining until the next session of Congress.

Mr. BYRNES. I may say to the Senator that they have that amount of money on hand—and it is a great tribute to efficiency of administration—from the sale of obsolete ships.

Mr. CLARK. That is not the point. I am not reflecting on the efficiency of the Commission. What I am saying is that they have on hand at the present time $69,000,000, which, plus the $75,000,000 authorized by the House, certainly ought to be enough for them to operate on until the meeting of the next session of Congress.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not want the Senator to be confused about the matter. One amount is the cash which the Commission have secured in great measure from the sale of obsolete ships. That money is available to pay for construction. We are giving them no cash at all in this bill, but are merely authorizing commitments for this program.

Mr. CLARK. They do not need any authority for the $69,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES. They do not. They have that amount, and it is available.

Mr. CLARK. Then the $69,000,000, plus the $75,000,000, certainly ought to tide them over until the next meeting of Congress, when we can see what they have been doing with the money.

Mr. BYRNES. Except that the $69,000,000 is cash, and the other amount is merely an authorization. We cannot say it is $69,000,000 plus $75,000,000, because one is merely authority to contract, and the other is cash in hand to pay on contracts. They have only the $69,000,000 to pay on any contracts they make.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. ADAMS. I do.

Mr. COPELAND. This is one of those very happy proposals over which both those who believe in private ownership and those who believe in public ownership may be happy, for this reason——

Mr. CLARK. Which proposal?

Mr. COPELAND. The proposal of the committee.

Mr. CLARK. To raid the Treasury of $75,000,000?

Mr. COPELAND. No.

Mr. President, if we are going to build up an American merchant marine, we are going to do it in one or two ways: Either by paying the cost wholly out of the Treasury, as the law prescribes it may be done, with rental or operating arrangements for the ships with private operators, or by lending the money for building ships to be owned by private operators. If we are to go forward with our plans, this, as I see it, is a necessary thing, and in my judgment it is the surest way to escape public ownership, because if it is seen by the operators that Uncle Sam is empowered to build the ships, they do not want them built by the Government, and they will then bestir themselves to get the money to build them privately.

Therefore, so far as I am concerned, I think the proposal is a wise one; and, with all due deference to my friend from Missouri, I think the committee has done a wise thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. CLARK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is obvious that any effort to introduce into the activities of the Government the principles of economy will meet with failure. I notice from the figures which appear in the RECORD at page 9300 that the appropriations provided for up to date for this session amount to $9,389,488,893.06, showing the meticulous care with which somebody in the Department is computing the appropriations which are made.

Mr. President, it was only a few years ago under the administration of President Wilson that the entire expenses of the Government including the Army and the Navy and the large number of Federal employees, was approximately $800,000,000 to $1,000,000,000. Now it costs nearly $2,000,000,000 to pay the salaries of Federal employees, and the appropriations have multiplied and multiplied until, as I have indicated, we are appropriating for this session—and the session is not ended—more than nine and a quarter billion dollars.

Notwithstanding the fact that we have increased taxes nearly every year during the past 4 or 5 years, until the people are groaning beneath the heavy burden of Federal, State, and municipal taxes, we have been compelled to borrow money to meet the deficits during the past 5 years of nearly $18,000,000,000, and the public debt today is approximately $37,000,000,000. Yet we blithely appropriate, adding here $75,000,000 without any adequate evidence presented, $75,000,000 which the House rejected, and in the face of their report and the hearings which they had we ignore the position which they took and add, as indicated, $75,000,000 in this one item for the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we ought to pause and reflect upon the burdens which we are imposing upon the people. The inevitable consequence will be inflation, a rise in prices, and an ultimate injury to the consumers in the United States.

I do not want to denounce or criticize, but I cannot bring my mind to accept these enormous appropriations, and I do voice my protest against the extravagance characterized by many of the appropriations found in this and other bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 1, after the word "Commission", to strike out "for personal services", so as to read:

Out of funds available to the Commission not to exceed $75,000 may be expended, including payment for obligations heretofore incurred, for the employment on a contract or fee basis of persons, firms, and corporations for the performance of special services, including legal services, deemed necessary by the Commission, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 5).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "District of Columbia", on page 12, after line 18, to insert:

Survey of tax structure, District of Columbia: For the employment of clerical services in connection with a survey and study of the entire tax structure of the District of Columbia in accordance with the provisions of title VII, section 3, of the act entitled "An act to provide additional revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved August 17, 1937, fiscal year 1938, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 15, to insert:

For payment of the final judgment rendered against the District of Columbia, as set forth in Senate Document No. 97, Seventy-fifth Congress, $4,206.19, payable from the special fund created by section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for a tax on motor-vehicle fuels sold within the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved April 23, 1924 (43 Stat., p. 106), and accretions by repayment of assessments.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Agriculture", on page 17, after line 2, to insert:

THE SUGAR ACT OF 1937

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce among the several States, with the Territories and possessions of the United States, and with foreign countries; to protect the welfare of consumers of sugar and of those engaged in the domestic sugar producing industry; to promote the export trade of the United States; to raise revenue; and for other purposes", approved August —, 1937, fiscal year 1938, $50,000,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Colorado whether the amount which will be imposed as taxes upon the consumers will meet this enormous appropriation of $50,000,000.

Mr. ADAMS. The amount will not be imposed upon the consumers. There will be in the Treasury a net surplus in the operation of the Sugar Act of some $20,000,000, but that money will come from Cuba and not from the American consumers.

Mr. KING. Payment will have to be made by some persons. I suppose it is the 50 cents which is added to the refining that will pay this amount, or contribute toward it.

Mr. ADAMS. The tax is entirely distinct from the payments to be made under the act. There is a definite excise tax, which will raise some seventy or seventy-five million dollars. The benefit payments which are required to be made under the act will take some $50,000,000, which is this appropriation. It does not take the same excise-tax money.

Mr. KING. As I understand, after the excise taxes have been collected there will not be a deficit?

Mr. ADAMS. No; there will be a surplus in the Treasury of $20,000,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee on page 17, line 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, after line 21, to insert:

INTERNATIONAL PRODUCTION CONTROL COMMITTEES

The limitation in the amount which the Secretary of Agriculture may expend for the objects specified under this head in the Agricultural Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1938, from the funds available to the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, is hereby increased from $7,500 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Commerce—Office of the Secretary", on page 18, after line 5, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of the Interior—Bureau of Indian Affairs", on page 21, after line 20, to insert:

Fort Peck, Mont., irrigation system: For continuing the construction of the irrigation system, Fort Peck Reservation, Mont., including the purchase or rental of equipment, tools, and appliances and the acquisition of rights-of-way and payment of damages when necessary, fiscal year 1938, $100,000, reimbursable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on, page 22, after line 8, to insert:

BUREAU OF RECLAMATION

Bonneville project: For administering and carrying out the provisions of an act entitled "An act to authorize the completion, maintenance, and operation of the Bonneville project, for navigation and for other purposes", approved ——, — (Public, No. —, 75th Cong., 1st sess.), including necessary personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; the purchase of easements and rights-of-way; purchase, exchange, and operation of automobiles; purchase of office furniture and equipment; stationery and office supplies; purchase of equipment and other supplies; rent, traveling expenses, telegraph and telephone expenses, printing and binding, and all other necessary expenses, fiscal year 1938, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 22, to insert:

Cabinet Gorge project, Idaho: For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act of August 14, 1937 (Public, No. 279, 75th Cong., 1st sess.), entitled "An act to provide for studies and plans for the development of a hydroelectric power project at Cabinet Gorge, on the Clark Fork of the Columbia River, for irrigation pumping or other use, and for other purposes", $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 4, to insert:

Construction of small reservoirs: For the construction of small reservoirs as authorized by the act of August , 1937 (Public, No. , 75th Cong., 1st sess.), $500,000 from the Reclamation Fund, Special Fund, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 9, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "National Park Service", on page 25, after line 9, to insert:

Salaries and general expenses, public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia, 1938: Of the appropriation of $7,137,280 for salaries and general expenses, public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia, contained in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1938, not to exceed $24,000 may be expended for the construction of a steam line to connect the National Gallery of Art with the steam distribution system of the Central Heating Plant.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I inquire what is the object of this appropriation of $7,000,000? Is that large amount required for general expenses in connection with public buildings?

Mr. ADAMS. No. The amendment merely provides that of the appropriation in the District of Columbia appropriation bill for salaries and general expense, public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia, "not to exceed $24,000 may be expended for the construction of a steam line to connect the National Gallery of Art with the steam-distribution system of the central heating plant." It is not the appropriation of any money but the authorization of the use of $24,000 of an appropriation already made in order that work may be carried on when the winter months come on.

Mr. KING. Of the $7,000,000?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes; it is not an additional appropriation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 25, line 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of Justice", at the top of page 27 to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Navy Department—Office of the Secretary", on page 29, line 16, after the word "in", to insert "Senate Document No. 108, and", and in line 18, after the name "Congress", to strike out "$1,431.58" and insert "$1,745.21", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, after line 18, to insert:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mrs. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment, on page 43, line 8, to strike out the words "section 1" and to insert "sections 1 and 13." This is merely a clarifying amendment which the Bureau of the Budget would like to have made. By a mistake these words were left out of the bill in the House, and I should like very much to see the amendment agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 43, line 8, after the words "available by", it is proposed to strike out "section 1" and to insert in lieu thereof "sections 1 and 13", so as to make the paragraph read:

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Division of Venereal Diseases: The President is hereby authorized to allot to the Public Health Service, Treasury Department, for the fiscal year 1938, not to exceed $200,000 out of unexpended balances made available by sections 1 and 13 of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1937, for the purpose of continuing the operation and maintenance of the Hot Springs Transient Medical Center Infirmary located at Hot Springs National Park, Ark.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 42, after line 10, to strike out:

BUREAU OF CUSTOMS

The appropriation "Collecting the revenue from customs", fiscal year 1938, is hereby made available for the construction of a gate on one of the two highways across the international boundary at Nogales, Ariz., at a cost of not to exceed $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Public Health Service", on page 43, after line 12, to insert:

National Cancer Institute: For carrying into effect the provisions of section 7 (b) of the National Cancer Institute Act, approved August 5, 1937, fiscal year 1938, $400,000, of which $200,000 shall be available for the purchase of radium.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 48, to strike out:

Government Printing Office, annex buildings: For continuation of construction of annex buildings for the Government Printing Office, $1,500,000: Provided, That the limit of cost fixed by the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935, for acquisition of necessary land and construction of annex buildings for the Government Printing Office is hereby increased from $5,885,000 to $7,500,000.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I rise to oppose the amendment on page 48, where the committee has stricken from the bill lines 1 to 7, inclusive. Pending action on the amendment submitted by the committee, I desire to offer two amendments to perfect the lines prior to the final vote upon the elimination.

I move that in line 3 the figures "$1,500,000" be increased to "$2,798,000", and that on line 7 the figures "$7,500,000" be increased to "$8,798,000."

The facts relating to this amendment are somewhat as follows: Heretofore the Congress has authorized the construction of a warehouse in connection with the Government Printing Office. The total amount of the authorization was fixed by law. The Procurement Division of the Treasury Department made estimates of the cost of this improvement.

I call the attention of the Senate to page 23 of the Senate hearings, on which begins the statement of Russell Herrell, Comptroller, Government Printing Office. Mr. Herrell said:

The Procurement Division of the Treasury Department requested, and the Bureau of the Budget approved, an authorization of $8,798,000 for this work.

Later on Mr. Herrell gives an itemization of the necessity for increasing the amount. He says that the necessity comes about through increased costs. It comes about through increasing the size of the motors in the building from 25-cycle to 60-cycle motors. It comes about through the desire of the Procurement Division to rewire the present building for light and power; for the installation of an incinerator in the present building; for moving and reconnecting the existing mechanical equipment; for power-house facilities, rent of temporary quarters, moving, furniture, and so forth.

Mr. President, the Bureau of the Budget heard the representative of the Procurement Division and approved the Budget estimate; and I am asking that this provision be increased to carry the full amount of the Budget estimate. The Department has made the plans. The Department is now ready to ask for bids. The bids have been received, as I understand, but have not been awarded. The witness testified that the bids check very closely with the Procurement Division's previous estimate.

On another page of the hearings I read as follows from Mr. Herrell's statement:

The only possible way by which we could keep within the present proposed limit of cost of $7,500,000 is to reduce the size of the proposed building by approximately 20 percent.

I will state what the amendment means. If the Senate amendment to strike out the entire item shall be agreed to, no money will be provided for the construction of this building. If the House provision should prevail, the Budget estimate would be reduced, making it necessary to reduce the size of the presently planned building by 20 percent.

I read further from Mr. Herrell's statement:

This would, of course, necessitate a complete replanning of the whole project, with the attendant complete loss of all such work done to date. This loss would involve at least $100,000. In other words, this would mean the total loss of work which has cost at least $100,000 and has taken 2 years to perform. In addition to this loss we would have a building, when the plans and building were completed, that would not be adequate or satisfactory. In other words, we would have something that would not serve the best interests of the Government.

Then Mr. Herrell states the specific damages which would result if the Senate provision should prevail.

Mr. President, if the Senate provision should prevail the entire item would be stricken out. Then the whole matter would go to conference, and the highest amount the conferees could bring back to the two bodies would be that contained in the House language, which would mean a reduction of the cost, so that the building, when completed, would be a smaller building by an estimated 20 percent.

Mr. Herrell stated that the damage would be as follows:

1. A 20-percent reduction in space would make it impossible to carry out the Public Printer's plans for straight-line production, which, if carried out, will save the Government at least $135,000 a year.

2. No provision will be made for any possible future expansion.

That is, if a smaller building should be constructed. I am referring now to the damages that would result if this reduction should be made.

Mr. Herrell continues:

3. At least $100,000 worth of work devoted to the drawing of present plans and specifications will be entirely wasted.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to ask the Senator what the estimated saving of $135,000 represents.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I will read the language of Mr. Herrell:

1. A 20-percent reduction in space would make it impossible to carry out the Public Printer's plans for straight-line production, which, if carried out, will save the Government at least $135,000 a year.

If the Senate amendment should prevail, and the conferees should bring back the sum carried by the House bill, this is what would happen, according to Mr. Herrell's statement:

4. The project will be delayed 1½ years, which will place an additional expense of at least $57,000 for rental and will delay for 1½ years, or eliminate to a large extent, the annual estimated saving of at least $368,000.

Mr. President, 2 days ago I appeared before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations and presented a letter in regard to this matter. The letter which I presented was from the legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor. In order that the Senate may be advised, I desire to read the letter I received, which now appears in the hearings on this bill.

The letter is dated August 18, 1937, and is addressed to me. It is, in part, as follows:

On page 36 of H. R. 8245 (third deficiency bill) as reported by the House, line 5 carries an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the new Government Printing Office buildings.

This amount should be increased to $2,798,000 in accordance with Budget estimates, and the total amount on line 9, same paragraph, should be increased to $8,798,000, also in accordance with Budget estimates.

Page 116 of the House hearings goes into detail on this matter, Admiral Peoples testifying. The House report of August 16 also mentions the matter on page 7.

It seems, due to the fact that 44,000 square feet of floor space was added to the Government Printing Office warehouse, now under construction, and also due to the fact that the railroad tracks were placed inside of the building instead of on the outside as originally contemplated, that the warehouse construction has exceeded the estimated cost, and that therefore it is necessary to increase the appropriation for the other buildings.

It is also understood that unless this appropriation is increased to the Budget estimates that work will cease for the next year.

The American Federation of Labor and the building trades department of the federation are deeply interested in this appropriation being increased to the above amount.

Mr. President, as chairman of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee which has charge of appropriations for the District of Columbia, I am forced to give attention somewhat to the condition of the unemployed in this city. I am advised that now there are many unemployed in the city of Washington; that the unskilled unemployed are taken care of fairly well; but that unless this item is included in the bill a large number of the skilled laborers of Washington will either be thrown upon relief in this city or they will have to leave the city and find employment elsewhere. Inasmuch as the Government officials desire to have this building erected according to plans which have been made, it will be necessary, in my opinion, to increase the amount.

Mr. President, I submit that the Bureau of the Budget estimate for this Government building should be increased according to the language of my amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Oklahoma why, in the amendment he offers, he increases the present appropriation, which, as I understand, is all that was asked for.

The actual appropriation asked for was $1,500,000, as I understand, and the Senator is asking to increase that amount. The controversy concerning this item was as to the limit to be placed upon the aggregate cost. The controversy was not over the amount to be appropriated for immediate purposes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I am relying upon the letter from the representative of the American Federation of Labor. The letter represents that it will be necessary, in order to let this contract, that the amount be increased from $1,500,000 to the sum of $2,798,000; and, if that is done, the appropriation must be raised from $7,500,000 to the sum of $8,798,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the matter was presented to the committee, and the fact was developed that there was an original authorization of $5,885,000 for the construction of the building. That authorization was in accordance with the Budget estimates; and it was the understanding at that time that that amount of money would complete the building in accordance with the plans drawn.

The House, by reason of representations made to the House committee and to the House, increased the limit of the expenditure, in order to meet increased costs, to seven and one-half million dollars; that is, an increase of $1,800,000. As the Senator from Oklahoma tells us, the Government Printing Office representatives stated that that would require a revision of the plans. The representatives of the Government Printing Office did say, however, that they could get along with $8,000,000 rather than the amount which they were asking, so necessarily some cuts would be required.

There was enough difference of opinion in the Appropriations Committee so that the committee finally decided that it had better strike out the entire item and take the additional time necessary between now and the next meeting of Congress to have the matter studied. The committee felt that it was not an emergency matter, and that it should not be included in the deficiency bill; that the Government Printing Office could certainly go along, and that operations would not stop.

That was the reason, as I recall, why the committee decided to eliminate the entire item, in view of the differences that arose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

ACCOMMODATIONS FOR DISTRICT COURT AT GLASGOW, MONT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 537) to provide suitable accommodations for the District Court of the United States at Glasgow, Mont., which was, on page 2, line 5, to strike out "heads" and insert "reads."

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 48, after line 11, to strike out:

Acquisition of premises designated as 1724 F Street NW., Washington, D. C.: For purchase of premises designated as 1724 F Street NW., Washington, D. C., and described as lot 28 in square 170 on the records of the surveyor of the District of Columbia, comprising a 6-story and basement brick office building and approximately 13,200 square feet of land, to provide necessary office space for permanent Government organizations, $200,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire the reason why this item was not included in the regular appropriation bill for rivers and harbors?

Mr. ADAMS. I refer that query to the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

Mr. COPELAND. The reason why the appropriation is included in this bill is that the bill authorizing the appropriation was not passed until the 26th of May.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, there is a perfecting amendment on page 64 which I should like to offer. It is simply to strike out line 9, which is a duplication.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment of the committee, on page 64, line 9, it is proposed to strike out the words "audited claims."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 72, line 5, after the word "in", to insert "Senate Document No. 109, and"; and in line 7, after the word "Labor" and the comma, to strike out "$7,597.53" and insert "$17,174.15", so as to read:

SEC. 5. Judgments against collectors of customs: For the payment of claims allowed by the General Accounting Office covering judgments rendered by United States District Court for the Southern District of New York against collectors of customs, where certificates of probable cause have been issued as provided for under section 989, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 842), and certified to the Seventy-fifth Congress in Senate Document No. 109 and House Document No. 318, under the Department of Labor, $17,174.15.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That concludes the committee amendments as printed in the bill. Are there further committee amendments?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, by authority of the committee, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 18, after line 3, it is proposed to insert the following:

PRICE-ADJUSTMENT PAYMENT TO COTTON PRODUCERS

Notwithstanding any other provisions of section 32 of Public Law No. 320, Seventy-fourth Congress, as amended, not to exceed $65,000,000 of the funds available under said section 32 in each of the fiscal years 1938 and 1939 shall be available (at such times and in such amounts as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine) until expended for a price-adjustment payment, upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine, with respect to the 1937 cotton crop to cotton producers who have complied with the provisions of the 1938 agricultural-adjustment program formulated under the legislation contemplated by Senate Joint Resolution No. 207, Seventy-fifth Congress. Such payments to any producer shall be at a rate per pound equal to the difference between 12 cents per pound and the average price of seven-eighths Middling cotton on the 10 designated spot-cotton markets on the dates of sale of such cotton. The bases for any such payment, or the amount thereof, when officially determined in conformity with rules prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture shall be reviewable only by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like an explanation of that amendment.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask whether that amendment is subject to a point of order?

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that it is, and because it is subject to a point of order I gave notice of a motion to suspend the rules, so that, if the point of order should be made, the amendment could be considered. I should like to state to the Senator, though, before he makes the point of order, if he has any such intention, the reasons for offering this amendment.

Last week an agreement was arrived at by officials of the Department of Agriculture and by the President with members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate with reference to legislation authorizing loans to agricultural producers in consideration of statements made that loans would be made upon agricultural products provided the Congress gave assurance that appropriate legislation would be enacted. The Senate passed a resolution seeking to carry out that agreement. The resolution is before the other House. I do not know whether it has as yet been agreed to. At the time of that agreement it was thought by members of this body who are interested in the subject that funds provided under section 32 of the A. A. A. Act were available for the purpose of making payments under the price adjustment contracts. The fact is, however, that since 1935 the section referred to has been amended, and the funds available under that section would not now be available to carry out the purposes of this amendment and to carry into effect the agreement arrived at in settling the controversy between the executive and the legislative branches of the Government as to these loans.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question at that point?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield first to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. I understand I have the floor.

Mr. BYRNES. I understood I had the floor, but I am delighted to yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I inquire who has the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah asked that the Senator from South Carolina answer a question, and the Chair recognized the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. AUSTIN. Very well.

Mr. BYRNES. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont, then, is recognized.

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Vermont for a question, or I will yield the floor to him if he wishes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I simply wish to ask a question. The question is whether the source of the funds mentioned in the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina is not the source of the funds that are also employed for the benefit of the milk and dairying industry.

Mr. BYRNES. The fund was used for the protection of several commodities. Since 1935 the section of the act has been amended. I do not know all of the purposes for which the fund is now available.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. AUSTIN. I have another question I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well.

Mr. AUSTIN. The question is, Has the Senator from South Carolina considered the interests of the other basic commodities that are comprehended in the original allotment of the fund under the section of the statute referred to?

Mr. BYRNES. The Agricultural Department in 1935 used the funds from this source for these other purposes, and this year it was their intention to use the funds from the same source. I assume that in drafting the amendment and in proposing to resort to this particular section they have given thought to the various purposes specified in that section. I admit that I have not definite information as to their thought as to the amount necessary for the various purposes, but in the negotiations between the executive and the legislative branches it was the statement of the officials of the Agricultural Department that there would be sufficient funds available from this source to care for this agricultural program.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Would the Senator consider favorable, before this amendment is acted upon, an amendment to provide some sort of safeguard for the funds used for the other purposes?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me? I have some information on that point.

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Texas so that he may answer the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me say that the fund originally amounted to $125,000,000. Twenty million dollars was allocated for certain purposes, and the purpose was to use more of the fund for the dairy industry. There is now $105,000,000 in the fund. It is my information that there is sufficient to take care of the allocation for the benefit of the dairy fund.

Mr. AUSTIN. The fund was originally $200,000,000.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; it is 30 percent of whatever the tariff revenues amount to for the preceding year. The tariff revenues in 1936 gave the fund $125,000,000. The Department has used $20,000,000, and purposes using some of the balance for the dairy interests. My information is there is still enough left in the fund to take care of this particular matter.

Is it not true, may I ask the Senator from South Carolina, that as section 32 was originally enacted it would not have required any additional legislation, but subsequently someone in the Department had the act amended and consequently this amendment now before the Senate has become necessary?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the law was enacted for the purpose of encouraging exports. Subsequently the act was amended as the Senator has stated. I did not know of the amendment until a few weeks ago. It is because of that amendment of last year that it is now necessary to offer the pending amendment.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to the fact that the reason why we were all anxious to have this form of legislation enacted was because it costs the Treasury practically nothing at all. The minute the trade understood there would be a subsidy paid of the difference between what is called the floor price of 9 or 10 cents, and 12 cents, the farmer was allowed to go ahead and sell his cotton, knowing he would get the difference between what he sold it for and 12 cents. The result was that we had practically no subsidy to pay. The market rose to the subsidy price and stayed there until the cotton year was over. Under this procedure it is very likely the Treasury will have to pay only a very small amount.

I wrote a letter to Chairman Jones of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and asked how much of a fund was available for orderly marketing including all agricultural products, which letter I had printed in the RECORD. He claims there is available for the purpose of orderly marketing, taking care of the surpluses, $1,000,000,000. Just where the source is I do not know, but I checked up on it a little. It does not make any difference so far as the amendment of my colleague is concerned because there are ample funds, according to the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, to take care of the basic agricultural commodities which are included in the term "orderly marketing."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to raise the point of order unless it is necessary to do so. I am after the substance and not the form. If there could be incorporated in the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina a proviso to the effect that no part of the funds appropriated by this section shall be expended pursuant to the terms of the amendment unless the Secretary of Agriculture states that they will not prevent the operation of the clause upon the other commodities, I should not raise the point of order.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. BYRNES. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I share the apprehension expressed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. At the same time I realize the critical situation which exists so far as the cotton producers are concerned and I would be the last to want in any way to prevent their receiving this essential and needed help.

I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina a few questions. In the first place, my information is that, so far as this year is concerned, there has already been collected under section 32 from customs duties a sufficient amount of money to enable, according to past experience, all of the other agricultural commodities aside from cotton to be taken care of. The only possible apprehension that could be held by those who are interested in the stabilization operations from the point of view of other agricultural commodities in connection with the pending amendment would be that such a shrinkage in customs duties might take place, though it probably will not, as that the fund would not provide sufficient money, in addition to the $65,000,000 provided for in the amendment, to carry on the stabilization operations that may be needed for other commodities.

So far as I am personally concerned, if we could have the assurance of the Senator from South Carolina and other Senators interested in the amendment that, if that unforeseen difficulty should arise, they would be willing to assist in restoring a sufficient amount of money to this fund so that emergencies could be taken care of with regard to other agricultural commodities, I should be perfectly satisfied.

Mr. BYRNES. The officials of the Department of Agriculture who are informed as to the situation, after taking into consideration the other purposes of section 32, regard this amount as being available for this particular purpose without interfering in any way with the other purposes of that section. They would not ask for this amount unless they were so satisfied.

I know that at this time the officials of the Department cannot possibly tell how much money may be needed for carrying out the purposes of the amendment. I do not believe we will need this amount. There is no desire on the part of anyone interested in the amendment to divert funds which are necessary for the accomplishment of the purposes in which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] are interested. There is no intention on the part of departmental officials to permit such funds to be diverted.

I do not believe this amount will be needed. The officials purposely set $65,000,000 as the maximum figure because they regarded it as the extreme limit. In the next session of Congress we can go into the matter more carefully, and I certainly would cooperate with the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Wisconsin to see that no other amount is diverted.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to enable me to ask the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] a question?

Mr. BYRNES. Certainly.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is this the same subject matter as comprehended in the joint resolution introduced yesterday by the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is. Let me say further that the Senator from Texas was the author of section 32, which was adopted as an amendment to the A. A. A. Act. He was not having that done for cotton alone. He was doing it for all agricultural commodities. The Department of Agriculture has been using that fund for all of its program.

I hope the Senator from Vermont will not object, because I am sure this will take care of the dairy industry. I had a conversation with the Secretary of Agriculture just the other day, and he went over the whole program. We are not trying to get one farthing from the other agricultural products, but this is emergent and is of the highest importance, and time is of the essence of our action here. I hope the Senator will not press the point of order. So far as I am concerned, if the fund should become depleted at any time, I should advocate a general appropriation from the general funds in the Treasury to supplement the fund; but I do not believe there is any danger of that becoming necessary.

Mr. AUSTIN. In view of the parliamentary situation, and the joint resolution of the Senator from Texas and the notice given yesterday that the amendment would be called up today, and in view of the explanation and assurances made, I shall not make the point of order.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I want to assure the Senator from Vermont that we have with all due diligence appreciated particularly the situation of the milk producers. I think the dairy interests are always more liable to be mulcted and robbed than any other form of agricultural industry. I promise the Senator that I shall aid in every way possible to take care of the situation.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Georgia for a question.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to point out to the Senator from Vermont and to the Senator from Wisconsin that under all the farm-adjustment programs, cotton alone is the only commodity which has not brought a parity price. Every other commodity that has come within the protection of the several acts passed during this administration has reached parity, and sometimes has gone above. Cotton alone is the one great commodity which composes the bulk of our foreign commerce so far as agricultural products are concerned that has not reached parity; and it has not reached parity, either, when we consider the price plus all of the adjustment payments and benefit payments of every kind that have been made to the cotton farmer.

I desire to put this statement in the RECORD, too, Mr. President, and I shall insist upon it very strongly when we consider permanent farm legislation—that under the increased price of farm commodities due to legislation passed under this administration, plus all of the benefit payments, the average per-capita increase in the income of the cotton farmer has not exceeded $147, whereas in the case of wheat, corn, hogs, and all the other products that have been brought under the production-adjustment acts we have passed, the average per-capita income of these farmers has been increased twice, three times, and in some instances four times the amount of the average per-capita income of the cotton farmer.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, does he include dairymen in that statement?

Mr. GEORGE. Dairy prices have reached parity when all of the benefit payments are counted, and the average per capita increased income has exceeded that of the southern cotton farmer.

Mr. AUSTIN. If the Senator will permit me to say so, probably the dairy industry never reached so great a depth of depression as during the past year and a half, and that perhaps was due to the fact that it did not get the benefits of the legislation to which the Senator from Georgia refers, but we have had a distinct sag in the economic welfare of dairymen in New England and in New York, and for that reason we came here and asked for additional legislation at this session of Congress in order to put the dairy industry under the action that was intended for the regulation of marketing.

Mr. GEORGE. Congress gave it to the dairy industry.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes, indeed; but I think the Senator would not be accurate if he included dairy products in those that had arrived at parity.

Mr. GEORGE. I agree with the Senator from Vermont; there has been a great sag; but I repeat my statement that under all of this legislation, with all the benefit payments, the average per-capita income of the cotton farmer has not been increased above $147 per annum, and in the case of all the other commodities it has been increased twice and three times and in some instances four times that amount.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I also suggest to the Senator that cotton is one agricultural commodity which cannot get any protection from the tariff, and, on the other hand, it furnishes America a large item in her export trade.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is entirely right.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I merely wish to reemphasize what I said when I previously interrupted the Senator from South Carolina. That is to say, I do not think there are any Senators, even the Senators from the cotton States, who are more sympathetic with the problem they are confronted with than is the Senator from Wisconsin. I do not think there is very much likelihood of there being such a shrinkage that the fund will not be ample. I merely wished to raise the point before the amendment was agreed to; and I heartily support it.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to put into the RECORD the statement that I am advised the total amount available under section 32 is $125,000,000. This amendment proposes to make available for this purpose not to exceed $65,000,000. My information is that of the balance of the $125,000,000, $40,000.000 is available for the dairying industry.

Mr. President, in explanation of the amendment I will say that the amendment seeks to put into effect the same cotton program which was adopted in 1935. It authorizes the payment of the so-called price adjustment based upon the difference between 12 cents and the price the farmer receives on the day he sells his cotton, basing that price on the then spot market. It provides that in no case shall that bounty, if you choose to call it that, exceed 3 cents per pound. It gives to the Department the right to adopt regulations to carry it into effect.

This program was effective in 1935, and therefore the Department will have little difficulty in establishing the machinery. I am advised by Department officials that though they necessarily have not at this time the regulations, it will be their purpose to pay this amount upon any cotton that is sold from this year's crop, even though that cotton is sold prior to the enactment of this legislation.

I do not know that there is anything I care to add to that explanation.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. I have been out of the Chamber, and I have not heard all the explanation of the proposed amendment. I recall quite well that when the Secretary of Agriculture was before our committee testifying relative to a proposal which had been introduced by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], which I think was practically the same as the one which the Senator from South Carolina is discussing, the Secretary of Agriculture said that proposal would be the least expensive to the Government and the simplest to administer of any that had been suggested. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct; and it has the additional advantage that its object is to have the cotton sold instead of stored.

Mr. HATCH. I think the Secretary made that quite clear. It did have that result in 1935.

Mr. BYRNES. It has the result of moving the cotton to market instead of moving it into the warehouses.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, if my colleague will allow me, the Secretary, after reading the different proposals, recognized that the one the committee had drafted—practically the same one that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] had proposed—was exactly in line with the Executive order of 1935–36, simpler in administration, and also cheaper to the Government. That was practically the way he stated it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I am not a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and many of these very complicated questions in connection with cotton and other agricultural crops and subsidies and bounties, or whatever term may be employed, are not fully comprehended by me.

I recall a few years ago, and the Senator does, that we received between four and five hundred million dollars a year from customs duties. As I understand, at the present time, whatever the customs duties are—whether $300,000,000 or less or more—goes into a fund to be used by the Agricultural Department or by some organization for the purpose of aiding agriculture. What limitation is there upon the amount which may be expended?

Mr. SMITH. Thirty percent.

Mr. KING. And how is there to be determined the amount which will be lost to the Government, and how is that loss met? Is it by direct payment out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. BYRNES. The amount that is available under the percentage that my colleague has just stated is, at this time, $125,000,000, and it is available for the encouragement of exports of all kinds of agricultural products. Of course, I must say that it does come out of the Treasury of the United States, because if the money were not used for this purpose it would remain in the Treasury.

Mr. KING. That is expected to be a loss, then?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes, Mr. President; it may be said that it is a loss. Instead of lending money upon cotton, as we did under the old Farm Board, and taking a loss, and then holding millions of bales of cotton over the market, depressing the price and causing the loss of millions of dollars to the cotton growers, this proposal causes the cotton to move into the market. It is sold. There can be no loss unless you call this a loss; but, as the Senator from Georgia has just said, it is using some money for the protection of the cotton grower, who has never received any benefit from the levying of tariff duties, and a part of the tariff duties is diverted to that purpose. The theory of the Congress when it enacted section 32 was to make available that protection to those who produce these agricultural commodities.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator one further question? Notwithstanding the availability of this fund, whether it is $100,000,000 or three or four hundred million dollars, has that fund been adequate to meet all the expenses of the Agricultural Department in executing the plan to grant relief to agriculture?

Mr. BYRNES. It certainly has in this respect, because they have not spent it all, and they do not propose to spend it all. They put on a ceiling of $65,000,000. My own thought is that they will not have to spend that amount here.

This amount more than covers all the expenses necessary to carry out the purposes of section 32.

Mr. KING. The appropriation which is carried in the Senator's amendment would be taken from the 30 percent of the fund arising from the customs duties?

Mr. BYRNES. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from South Carolina also knows that, insofar as the cotton which has been sold under the scheme that was enacted several years ago is concerned, there has been no loss, but the Government really made a profit.

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question. If the $65,000,000 is made available, how much more money is there that can also be used for loans for cotton and other commodities?

Mr. BYRNES. The question of any loans made by the Commodities Credit Corporation is not affected in the slightest by the amendment. I may say that in 1935 it was found that, due to the adoption of a similar provision, loans were not necessary. Only 37,000 bales of cotton were pledged as collateral in that year, according to my recollection. The purpose is to have cotton go to market to be sold, and to make unnecessary any large amount of loans, and that will be the effect of the amendment.

Mr. POPE. This morning I was given some figures, and I was wondering whether the Senator would have information to verify them. The figures indicate that the estimated value of the crop this year will be very large. The figures I got showed that $870,000,000 would be received for the estimated amount of cotton to be sold this year, and that benefit payments, or conservation payments, would amount to about a hundred million dollars, and then the estimate as to the seed cotton, about $110,000,000, which would make the largest amount ever received by the cotton farmers for a crop of cotton.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I hope the Senator's figures are correct. I have not looked into that sufficiently to enable me to answer the Senator directly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, by direction of the committee I wish to offer another amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 51, after line 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

UNITED STATES SOLDIERS' HOME

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have one further committee amendment I desire to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 17, after line 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The agreement was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to insert on page 29 after line 7 the following:

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There was enacted by Congress a measure to provide for the furtherance of apprentice training. The Senator from Utah will remember that, because I discussed it with him both on the floor and off the floor.

I regard this program as having great potentialities for helping to provide training for the youth of this country in order that they may get an opportunity to find employment after they have been trained as apprentices.

This item is precisely as presented by the Bureau of the Budget in the estimates, and I hope very much the amendment will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, by authority of the Committee on Appropriations, I offer an amendment, which I ask the clerk to state.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to insert, on page 24, between lines 14 and 15, the following:

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK, CALIF.

For acquisition of certain lands, including expenses incidental thereto, as set forth in the act of Congress approved July 9, 1937 (75th Cong., Public, No. 195), there is hereby made available not to exceed $2,005,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation contained in the emergency relief appropriation act of 1935, heretofore earmarked thereunder for that purpose, notwithstanding the reappropriating provisions with respect to such unexpended balance in section 1 of the emergency relief appropriation act of 1937.

Mr. McADOO obtained the floor.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask the Senator from California whether this amendment, if agreed to, would increase the obligation of the Treasury of the United States over what it was when the original act was adopted.

Mr. McADOO. No; it would not increase it. I may say to the Senator that the act authorizing the acquisition of the area covered by the amendment provided that the Secretary of the Interior might acquire this area on behalf of the United States by the payment from any funds available at the time of the enactment of the law, except from the general funds in the Treasury.

The bill passed both Houses prior to June 30, 1937, the end of the fiscal year, but it was not approved by the President until the 9th of July, after the end of the fiscal year.

The $2,005,000 had been earmarked under the act of 1935, and the purpose of the amendment to this bill is merely to reauthorize the use of identically the same amount of money in the acquisition of the park which the Congress has already authorized.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am informed that the National Park Service and the Department of the Interior, of course, one being in the other, are interested in the preservation of this property for the purpose of making it part of the Yosemite Park. Is that correct?

Mr. McADOO. That is quite correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. And that the chances are that without this amendment the timber which is now standing on the property may be destroyed by interests which would really like to get hold of it, cut the trees and saw them up into lumber. Is that true?

Mr. McADOO. The situation is exactly as stated by the Senator from Kentucky. The property is owned by the Yosemite Sugar Pine Lumber Co., which has opposed the taking over of the property for the Yosemite Park. They have extended a logging road into the area already, and have cut down some of the magnificent trees in preparation for the logging of the entire area. Unless this appropriation, which was available under the previous act, and prior to June 30, 1937, is made available in this bill, these great trees, these marvelously beautiful trees, I think the finest specimens of trees in the entire Sierra Nevadas, will be destroyed, will be cut down for commercial purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I gather the purpose of the amendment, it merely proposes a reappropriation of money that was heretofore appropriated for this purpose, and to that extent only is it a new appropriation. It simply makes available money that was available but was not used for the purpose.

Mr. McADOO. Exactly. The amount will come out of money that was available at the time the bill was introduced into the Congress, and which would have been employed for this purpose, except for the fact that the act was not signed by the President before the end of the fiscal year. The result is that we must have an authorization in the measure before us, so that we may still use the funds which were earmarked for this particular purpose prior to the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. BARKLEY. Do the character of the property and the proximity of the property to the Yosemite National Park make the land desirable as an addition to the park?

Mr. McADOO. Yes, Mr. President. The land in question is immediately adjacent to the Yosemite National Park, and under the terms of the bill will become a part of the park.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I believe some inaccuracy has occurred in the statement concerning the funds. I should like the Senator from California to correct me if I am wrong. I do not want inaccurate statements to appear in the RECORD.

Mr. McADOO. I may say to the Senator that if any of my statements in that regard were inaccurate, I shall be glad to correct them.

Mr. ADAMS. The statement made in reply to the question of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] is not entirely according to my understanding of the situation. What I say, Mr. President, has nothing to do with the merits of the question.

The Appropriations Committee authorized the Senator from California to submit the matter. Consequently, it has its approval. However, as I see it, the item involved is a new appropriation, and creates a charge upon the Treasury which otherwise would not exist. That is the very reason for the amendment.

As the bill originally passed, it contained the specific provision that no money should come from the general fund of the Treasury, but that the money should come from funds already available for the purpose. The funds which were thought to be available were to come out of certain relief funds in the hands of the Public Works Administration. It now develops that, in fact, either by reason of the terms of the original law or as a result of the passage of the last emergency relief measure, the funds are not available.

Mr. KING. That is true, Mr. President.

Mr. ADAMS. In other words, in the absence of the amendment now offered, the property could not be bought; and the amendment provides a direct appropriation to provide money which the Senator from California and others thought would be available, but which, as the situation has developed, are not available.

I think that is a correct statement.

Mr. McADOO. Yes, Mr. President; I think that is a correct statement. What I mean to say is that these funds were earmarked as a part of the unexpended balance under the act of 1935. By the mere accident of the act being approved by the President after the end of the fiscal year, these funds became unavailable; but the unexpended balances which were reappropriated by the act of 1937 contained this earmarked $2,005,000. It is necessary, however, that this amendment be agreed to in order to make the amount now available because of the fact that the sugar-pine bill was signed after the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I wish to make a statement which I think will be a correct statement.

The Senator from California said the funds were earmarked. They were earmarked because the Congress passed the act which specifically provided that this amount of money should be taken out of relief funds and used to buy the property in question. When the Congress had directed that that be done there was no discretion in the officials of the Department about earmarking. They had nothing to do except to carry out the directions of the law. When the Relief Act was passed it contained a provision that the funds contained in that measure—$1,500,000,000, plus the unexpended balances—should be available for relief and work relief, and for relief and work relief alone. Therefore the funds were not available for the purchase of the land now in question or for the purchase of any other land.

When the amendment was offered in the House it was held, and properly held, that it was legislation, because it changed the language of the relief law, and made funds available for the purpose of the purchase of the land in question, when under the relief law they were not available. For that reason the Appropriations Committee, finding that the amendment was legislation, could not include it in the bill; and that is why the Senator from California is offering the amendment on the floor.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, I myself am not at all sure, although I do not set myself up as an authority on the subject, that this is not a proper amendment to be put on this bill, because I think the act of 1937, the Relief Act, covers exactly this point. If Senators will look at subsection (b) of section 1 of that act, they will find that, among other purposes for which these funds may be used, is "public buildings, parks, and other recreational facilities." I assume that under that phrasing the President may have power to make use of these funds. However, as we did not want any doubt to exist, I felt that it was proper to come back to the Congress and ask that the situation be clarified.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. KING. As I understand the amendment which the Senator has offered, it calls for a direct appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States, and not out of any relief funds that have been granted to the President; so that if the Senator bases his demand for this appropriation upon the theory that the money is to come out of relief funds, obviously the amendment does not provide for that; and if we agree to the amendment in its present form, it will make a demand upon the Treasury of the United States for this entire amount.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. President, it will make a demand upon the Treasury of the United States, of course, but only to the extent that the funds which were turned back to the Treasury, these unexpended balances, included in them this earmarked amount. I do not think it is at all essential to defend the amendment upon that ground. I only want the Senate to know that this difficulty has arisen because of the mix-up resulting from the fact that the Relief Act of 1937 was signed before the Sugar Pine Act went into effect. The committee, without opposition, authorized me to present this matter to the Senate. I think the request is a reasonable one, and that in view of the history of the matter it is peculiarly well founded.

Mr. President, I wish to make a further statement. The trees in question, being 7,000 acres of the most wonderful sugar pine in the whole world, I am told, are in danger of destruction, because the lumber company proposes to log that section immediately. The company has already built a logging road into this area and, as I understand, has already cut down some of these magnificent trees which God Almighty has created over a period of more than 500 years. Unless we shall make these funds immediately available we cannot carry out the terms of the act which the Congress has already passed approving the acquisition of this property. So all I am asking is that the amount which would have been available had this act been signed prior to the 30th of June 1937 be now made available for the same purpose. The amendment does not put any new charge on the Treasury.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the amount had been expended while it was available, the amount that was turned back into the Treasury would have been reduced by that much?

Mr. McADOO. Absolutely.

Mr. BARKLEY. So the mathematics of the situation is the same as if the money had been used for the purpose while it was available.

Mr. McADOO. Exactly.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not accept the view just stated by my friend the Senator from Kentucky and my friend the Senator from California. As we all know, many allocations were made out of the first appropriations to the Works Progress Administration and to the P. W. A. With respect to a number of projects in my State, I know that when they were not completed within a certain time, or when work was not inaugurated, the President merely took the amounts that were allocated for certain projects and allocated them for other projects in various other parts of the United States. Those sums did not go into the Treasury to be reappropriated. They were simply kept in the fund, and the President of the United States allocated those amounts for other projects in other States.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The necessity for this amendment is that in the Relief Act we specifically provided that—

> No portion of the funds hereby appropriated shall be allocated or used for any purpose except to provide relief or work relief for persons in need.

That act made available not only $1,500,000,000, but also the unexpended balances. They are all subject to that provision. The funds cannot be used for any purpose except for the relief of persons in need.

The amendment now proposed to the appropriation bill would change that law. That is why the Appropriations Committee could not put the amendment in the bill, and it had to be offered on the floor.

Mr. KING. That action makes it subject to a point of order. Although strenuous efforts were made to have an appropriation for the purchase of this land included in the appropriation bill, the House committee refused. I have read the RECORD very carefully. I have read the statement of Representative ENGLEBRIGHT. While I do not care to controvert or attempt to controvert any of the statements made by the Senator from California, there is very much to be said in opposition to the position taken by him. Representative ENGLEBRIGHT, who lives in the vicinity involved, knows that section, and made a very strong argument with regard to it. A point of order ought to be made against the amendment.

Mr. McADOO. The fact that Representative ENGLEBRIGHT alone of the California delegation is opposed to this proposal is no reason why the Senate should not move to carry out the act of Congress, which has been duly passed by both Houses, has the approval of the President of the United States, and is now existing law.

I submit further that Representative ENGLEBRIGHT, for whom I have great respect, is simply wrong on this question; that is all. The people of the State are for it. I may say furthermore that the claims which were made by the opposition, the opposition being chiefly the lumber company itself, and the Yosemite Valley Railroad Co., were considered by the committees of both Houses before the bill was passed. I do not wish to say anything more on the subject.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to correct a statement I have made. I had misinterpreted the proposed appropriation. I thought that it was a direct appropriation and I was endeavoring to correct what I though was a misstatement when I myself was the one who was making the misstatement. I merely wish to ask the Senator from California a question as to whether or not there may be some danger to his appropriation if it is provided in the form proposed by the amendment which reads:

> There is hereby made available not to exceed $2,005,000 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation contained in the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, heretofore earmarked thereunder for that purpose.

I am wondering, if it is limited to money that is earmarked, if the Senator might not meet difficulty in the Comptroller General's office in demonstrating the fact that the money has been earmarked?

Mr. McADOO. I may say to the Senator from Colorado that the same thought occurred to me when the amendment was submitted to me. I did not draft it; I left it to the lawyers; but I understand that the Comptroller General thinks this amendment is in proper form and that it would meet with no difficulty in his office.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. McADOO. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator from Colorado for clearing this matter up in my mind, and now I wish to say that it would not change my views on the merits of the amendment at all. I was so impressed by the remarkable scene presented in the Yosemite Valley when I had an opportunity of being there and seeing the giant sequoias, the redwoods and the sugar pines, particularly when I realized that some of them are the oldest living things on earth; that they were there in a time as long ago as that of Augustus Caesar and the time of the persecution of the Christians, that they are still vigorous and growing and that they represent the grandeur and tenacity of life as no other living things on earth do, I would favor this expenditure even if it should involve a new appropriation. So it is only a matter of where the money comes from, and I must say that I am in favor of the amendment.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, I am in favor of this amendment although I come from a State on the extreme Atlantic coast. The people of my State and the people of the eastern section are just as much interested in preserving this unique stand of sugar pines as are those who live in the far West. It is our national heritage and is in danger of being destroyed. I think that the citizens of any civilized country would regard us as barbarians if we ourselves either wantonly destroyed or stood aside and consented to the destruction of this unique natural glory of this country. I hope the amendment may prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I offer an amendment to the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 21, it is proposed to strike out from line 1 down to and including line 8, in the following words:

The limitation of $290,000 on the amount of applicable appropriations for the Bureau of Indian Affairs contained in the Interior Department Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1937, that may be expended for the maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled and horse-drawn passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of employees in the Indian field service, including the transportation of Indian school pupils, is hereby increased to $430,000.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, on several occasions I have tried to impress upon this body that, notwithstanding the liberality of Congress in providing appropriations, presumably for the Indians, today the Indians throughout the United States are more dissatisfied and more mentally depressed than they have been for many a year.

It was hoped that directly after 1933 the Indian would get a "new deal." That was the intention of those who fought for the New Deal. But it appears that all that we have done is to appropriate money by the millions of dollars, not in many instances to help the Indians but only to perpetuate the most ruthless governmental bureaus we have had in years. The dissatisfaction and discontent on the part of the Indians is not confined to any one section of the United States. It is found in the Cherokees of North Carolina; it is found in the Navajos of New Mexico; it is found in the Oneidas of Wisconsin; it is found among the Indians of South Dakota, Oregon, California, and Oklahoma. They are complaining for the simple reason that they have been placed in such a position that, instead of looking forward with hope, they find themselves being crushed by theoretical ideas of men who may mean right but who are actually causing the Indians to go backward and retarding progress.

I will tell you, Mr. President, why the Indian is dissatisfied. I want to call the attention of Congress to the situation because, after all, it is the Congress that is responsible to the Indians; the Congress is the only tribunal to which the Indians throughout the country can appeal; and it is Congress that should know what is going on and find out whether the right thing is being done. It should scrutinize bills affecting the Indians so as to make sure that the appropriations which we all so much desire should go to benefit the Indians.

Glance, if you please, at the item referred to in the amendment I have just submitted or the item on page 20 commencing in line 18, extending to line 25. That item has for its purpose increasing the limitation on the amount which may be expended by the Indian Bureau—for what purpose? For the purchase and exchange of automobiles.

Mr. President and Senators, in common, ordinary, everyday affairs of life, how much benefit do you think that would result in to the Indians? How many Indians do you think will keep from going hungry by appropriating hundreds of thousands of dollars so that the Indian Bureau may buy automobiles when the Indian himself will not be employed to drive a truck? We have had testimony from the Indians that in one instance on one reservation within the State of New Mexico—and the same thing is true of Arizona—the Indian Bureau has over 700 automobiles for Indian Bureau employees and over 700 trucks, and yet a Navajo from Tuba City cannot get work driving a truck into Flagstaff, Ariz.

We were told that the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs would give the Indians a new deal, and we hoped so. We were told that the money appropriated for the Indians was going to be spent for the benefit of the Indians, and we hoped so; but what do we now find? We find dissatisfied Indians and 1,200 more employees in the Indian Bureau. The condition described exists not only in one place but is general. I think the Congress has approached the day when it must accept its responsibility to the Indians and decide once and for all that its responsibility is to the Indians and not to the Bureau.

I will inform you, Mr. President, why the Indians are dissatisfied. They are dissatisfied because they are being coerced, they are being browbeaten into accepting theories that are as wild as any Indian ever dared to be.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a telegram which I received from Farmington, N. Mex. I will ask the clerk to read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

FARMINGTON, N. MEX., August 6, 1937.

Hon. DENNIS CHAVEZ,
United States Senator, Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Hosteen Tso, chapter officer, Twin Lakes, two others arrested by Indian police, Gallup, Monday, charge refusing dip sheep. Charge false, police brutally beat men with gun and clubs. Hosteen Tso in hospital, serious head injury. Arrest made in Gallup. No town ordinance involved. Men taken from New Mexico into reservation and across line into Arizona. Defendants received no warrant unless in English, cannot read. Defendants not informed of charge in Navajo. Two dozen or more white and Indian witnesses to facts which agency does not deny. Navajo judge John Curley says 60 Indians in jail at Window Rock, other jails full; tells Indians any Indian opposing Collier program will be arrested, fined $100, 6 months in jail. Literally hundreds of charges by Indians of false arrest, imprisonment, beatings, no trials or, if any, refused jury, witnesses, attorney. Many cases defendants refused information of charge. Indians angry at injustice, malicious persecution. Situation tense, meetings all over reservation, thousands threaten rising. Morgan, myself asking Indians to let law take course; cannot control much longer unless Indians given square deal. Hell loose soon all Navajo country unless policy and tactics changed. Fryer refuses to release Hosteen Tso and others.

PAUL B. PALMER.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I received that telegram some time past. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, received a similar telegram. The matter was called to the attention of the Indian Commissioner, and he promised both the Senator from Oklahoma and me that he would make a complete investigation of the serious charges. What did he do? He continued the same idea of carrying out the theories he had in mind when he became Commissioner, and which he is trying yet to put into effect.

Did he send someone from Utah who would know an Indian when he saw one? Did he send someone from Colorado or Oklahoma who would know an Indian when he saw one? No; he sent the president of the American Association on Indian Affairs, Inc., and that is the trouble—two many long-haired boys from New York City telling the Indians what to do.

He sent Mr. Oliver La Farge, president of the American Association on Indian Affairs, Inc., with offices at 120 East Fifty-seventh Street, New York City. I do not believe there is a Navajo Indian anywhere in the United States who would know the location of the association which it is alleged is trying to do so much for the Indians. He sent Mr. La Farge into New Mexico to investigate the abuses of the Indians.

As a result of that investigation, on August 14 the Secretary of the Interior, who is also supposedly very solicitous for the welfare of the Indians, released a statement to the press wherein he went into detail as to how greatly interested the Interior Department and the Bureau of Indian Affairs are in the Indians. Calling special attention to the matter I am discussing and referring to the telegram which I just had read, he said:

This telegram stated that three Indians were arrested on the charge of refusing to dip their sheep and that this charge was false and part of a plot to persecute all Indians opposed to the policies of the present administration. The telegram also alleges:

"Navajo Judge John Curley says 60 Indians in jail Window Rock. Other jails full. Tells Indians any Indian opposing Collier program will be arrested, fined hundred dollars, 6 months in jail. Literally hundreds of charges by Indians of false arrest, imprisonment, beatings, no trials or, if any, refused jury, witnesses, attorney. Many cases defendants refused information of charge * * *. Thousands threaten rising."

A similar telegram from Mr. Morgan to Senator THOMAS charges that hundreds of Indians have been jailed in the course of terrific persecution.

The facts as developed by an independent inquiry made by Oliver La Farge, president of the American Association on Indian Affairs, are that four Indians repeatedly refused to conform to the sheep-dipping regulations, that warrants were finally issued for their arrest, and that they were duly arrested and held for trial before the legally constituted reservation court, conducted by Indians for Indians.

Before the court had decided whether or not these Indians had violated the law, Mr. La Farge and the Secretary of the Interior came to the conclusion that the Indian Bureau officials were correct in beating them with guns and blackjacks because they were alleged to have violated the law.

The only sins of the three Indians who were brutally assaulted by the officers of the Indian Bureau under Commissioner Collier were that they had dared to fight for what any Senator and I would fight for—an expression of their opinion, no matter how wrong it might be, and for their rights as they believed them to exist.

No one has tried to impress the country more than the present Indian Commissioner as to how civil liberties should be protected. Does he carry that idea into effect when treating with the Indians?

What happened? After the trial of the Indians who were beaten as I have described, I received last night a telegram from Farmington, N. Mex., reading in part, as follows:

Hosteen Tso & Co. entirely cleared of charges yesterday.

As a matter of fact, they had not done a thing except that they had dared to oppose the policy of the Indian Commissioner, and still we in Congress, year after year, without actually looking into the affairs and conditions of the Indians, appropriate money by the millions of dollars that do not help the Indians one bit, but do increase, as has been evident during the past few years, the number of Indian Bureau employees by 1,200. It is not fair to the Indians; it is not fair to the Congress. It does not give the Indian that to which he is clearly entitled.

I go a little further to show how solicitous the Indian Bureau officials are with reference to the Indians. I send to the desk a statement from an Indian woman near Gallup, N. Mex., which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

STATEMENT OF MRS. CLAUDE HANEN

Lives off the reservation on property of the Christian Reform Church, about 11 miles north of Gallup.

On Saturday, July 31, 1937, while her husband was away at a meeting in Arizona, Henry Smith, a district supervisor, came to her hogan and told her that her sheep must be dipped on that day or she would be violating section 40 of the Penal Code of the Navajo Tribe. (Jake Morgan says that this code was never passed upon by the tribal council and was merely promulgated from Washington without giving the Indians any opportunity of agreeing or disagreeing. This code is one of the main sources of difficulty with the Collier administration.)

Witness told Smith that she would be very glad to have her husband take the sheep to be dipped when he returned but that she was alone with the children and could not do so at the time. Later the same afternoon three Navajo policemen came and told witness that unless her sheep were dipped that day she would be subject to a $100 fine and 6 months' imprisonment. Therefore, she sent her small children with the sheep to have them dipped. When they arrived at the sheep dip later in the afternoon the man who was running the dip refused to take any more sheep, and it was, therefore, impossible for them to be dipped.

On Monday, August 2, the Navajo police came back and gave witness a warrant for her husband for violation of section 40 of the penal code for their failure to dip sheep.

Witness does not live on reservation and the sheep pasture was off of the reservation. The Navajo police have no jurisdiction off the reservation, and the penal code, even if recognized, would have no effect upon them.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, in order to show the Senate that this dissatisfaction is not confined to New Mexico alone, I send to the desk a letter written to me by the president of the American Indian Federation. The difference between the American Indian Federation and the American Association of Indian Affairs, Inc., is that the former is composed of Indians, while the latter, whatever else it may be, is composed practically entirely of New Yorkers. I ask that the letter may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE AMERICAN INDIAN FEDERATION,
Sapulpa, Okla., August 14, 1937.

Hon. DENNIS CHAVEZ,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Following a direction from the members of our recent convention at Lewiston, Idaho, I am pleased to hand you a resolution of commendation, unanimously adopted by our convention, comprising some 500 Indians of the Northwest (Southwest, too) for your stand against the use of public moneys in the furtherance of the Collier Civil Liberties Union legislation, so-called Wheeler-Howard Act, throughout your State of New Mexico.

Our Indian people are aroused. The rule-or-destroy methods of Commissioner Collier will not incline one real Indian toward his program, especially when that program is dictatorial, oppressive, un-American, and un-Christian. There is still some fight left in the Indian. It is regrettable, however, that the contest must arouse prejudices and strife within Indian groups, as in your State, and the real cause—the Commissioner and his program—be allowed to continue; all of which can easily be assumed to smack of sharp practice between guardian (the Congress) and ward (the Indian). In the absence of direct removal of Collier by the President or his impeachment by the Congress, your method of withholding public moneys from him, to be used in the furtherance of a law without a parallel (excepting the Thomas-Rogers Act) in the history of this Nation, and not applicable to your State, should be applauded by every taxpayer and true American.

Commissioner Collier has long since destroyed his usefulness (if such ever existed) to the Indian, the cause of the Indian, the Government, and the administration of which he is a part. He has no place in the present administration. He is not a Democrat—the record is the best evidence. He is a maverick feeding upon the succulent pastures of the Democratic Party. He should be turned out—not branded.

Personally commending you, I am, with kind regards and best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

JOSEPH BRUNER,
National President, The American Indian Federation.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, at this point I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD the resolution of the American Indian Federation, passed at their convention in Idaho within the past 30 days, with reference to Indian matters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolution

Be it resolved by the American Indian Federation in regular annual convention assembled in the city of Lewiston, State of Idaho, That we commend Hon. BURTON K. WHEELER and Hon. LYNN J. FRAZIER, United States Senators of Montana and North Dakota, respectively, for their wisdom and true Americanism in repudiating the communistic so-called Wheeler-Howard Act. This legislation had its origin in the infamous American Civil Liberties Union—respectable front for the Communist Party in America. Members of the American Civil Liberties Union, Communists in thought and action but lacking the courage to disclose their true identity or acknowledge their convictions, now dominate and control the United States Indian Bureau. The union, through its members in key positions within the Bureau, shapes the policies and programs of this department of our Federal Government, legislative and administrative.

We especially commend Senators WHEELER and FRAZIER for the introduction of Senate bill 1736 into the Senate, which bill seeks to repeal the Wheeler-Howard Act. We appeal to the Indian citizenship of the Nation and loyal Americans without regard to racial distinction, to study the past and present program of the Indian Bureau; examine into its source of origin, and urge upon your Senators and Representatives in the Congress that they use their vote and influence in bringing about the early enactment of S. 1736 into law, thus closing the door to the legal establishment of communism in the United States, save and except the State of Oklahoma, now under the Thomas-Rogers Act, which act contains every communistic provision of the Wheeler-Howard Act, and should itself be repealed without further delay; be it further

Resolved, That we most emphatically approve of the work of Hon. DENNIS CHAVEZ, United States Senator from New Mexico, in striking from the Interior Department appropriation bill all expenditures of public and Indian moneys in the carrying out of the provisions of the Wheeler-Howard Act within the State of New Mexico. Congress, we appreciate, except through impeachment proceedings, cannot eliminate these communistic forces now entrenched in our governmental structure; it can and it should refuse to appropriate public moneys in the furtherance of their communistic and un-American schemes and programs. Communism and all other "isms" except Americanism, have no place in our American form of Government.

JOSEPH BRUNER,
National President, the American Indian Federation.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I also ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter of Hon. D. W. Roberts, sheriff of McKinley County, N. Mex., with reference to the arrest of three Indians, and a letter of Mr. J. Murray Palmer, attorney at law, Farmington, N. Mex.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters are as follows:

COUNTY OF MCKINLEY,
Gallup, N. Mex., August 12, 1937.

Hon. DENNIS CHAVEZ,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CHAVEZ: Regarding the assault with deadly weapons upon Hastin Tso, Hastin Tso Son, and another, committed by Jack Johnson, Slaw Nez, and Slaw Benatal, Navajo policemen, please be advised that I received a call at my office at about 1:30 p. m., on August 2, 1937, from Lee Williams, an Indian trader on the north side of Gallup, saying that there was a riot at his place and "that you had better get here as quick as you can because it is going to get worse."

I went to the Williams trading store; and when I arrived I found Hastin Tso in a serious condition, due from a very severe beating. His son was also severely beaten, but not as much as the old man. Both were under arrest by the Indian police when I arrived, and after seeing the warrant I did not attempt to interfere.

I questioned several eyewitnesses to the affair and have their statements as to what occurred. They vary as to the number of times Hastin Tso was struck over the head with a blackjack, but all agree that he was beaten unmercifully. Some say that he was struck from 10 to 20 times by all the Indian policemen, both with blackjack and pistol; others say that he was struck as many as 75 times.

I now have in my possession warrants for all three of the Indian policemen, charging them with assault with a deadly weapon; but as these men are now at Fort Defiance, in Arizona, I have been unable to apprehend them. I am trying to get the superintendent to surrender them to me. There is very bad feeling among the Indians, and there may be more trouble unless matters are cleared up.

I am sorry that I could not answer your wire sooner, but I was in the northern part of the State and in Colorado, trying to arrest some fugitives and just got back.

With kindest personal regards, I remain,

Yours very truly,

D. W. ROBERTS,
Sheriff of McKinley County.

FARMINGTON, N. MEX., August 10, 1937.

Hon. DENNIS CHAVEZ,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: I wish to commend you for your opposition to the program of the Indian Bureau insofar as it relates to the Indians of the Navajo Tribe.

I have followed the situation quite closely for sometime, and recently have become associated with the opposition forces in an effort to secure a square deal from the Bureau for the Navajos.

The situation of the Navajo people is intolerable due to the arbitrary, unjust, and coercive action of the Bureau. I know the details of the Hasteen Tso et al. incident which occurred in Gallup recently. I have heard the statements of over a dozen witnesses, both whites and Indians, as to what occurred there, and I am convinced beyond any doubt, that Hasteen Tso was brutally beaten by three Indian police; that there was no justification whatever for such action; that his arrest and the assault upon him were unlawful, first, in that they were carried out at a place beyond the jurisdiction of the Indian police; second, for the reason that the action was done in an inexcusably brutal and inhuman manner. I am convinced that the Bureau's charge, "refusal to dip sheep", made against these men is untrue for I have heard the statements of witnesses, that the fact of the matter is this, that at the time of his arrest, Hasteen Tso, together with several other men, was returning from the place where he and others had made arrangements for the dipping of their sheep. They state that there was no refusal to dip.

It is a significant fact that Hasteen Tso is the vice president of this chapter organization; that he has been outspoken in criticism of the Bureau's hand picking of a delegation erroneously called the Navajo Tribal Council, which council is now functioning as a rubber stamp for any action requested or demanded by the Bureau officials. It is also significant that Hasteen Tso is related to the wife of the man [J. C. Morgan] whose opposition to the Bureau's program of coercion, threat, inefficiency, waste, and graft inflames the officials of this Bureau to the point where they lose all sense of proportions.

I know the facts concerning other cases of brutal violence being exercised against Navajos by the Indian Bureau police—the Hasteen Tso incident is not an isolated case. I make the charge that Commissioner Collier, Superintendent Fryer, and particularly the officer directly over these police condone the brutal excesses perpetrated by them, and that by their actions and example, they incite and encourage, if not actually order, the perpetration of further atrocities against people who are essentially law abiding and peaceable.

We are reliably informed that John Curley, Navajo judge, is telling the Navajos that any Indian opposing the program of John Collier is liable to a fine of $100 and prison for 6 months; that opposition to any stock-reduction program may result in like sentence; we hear account after account of so-called trials before this judge, where witnesses are denied the defendant and he is jailed upon the bald statement of the police; of witnesses being fined for testifying to facts to which the judge did not agree. We have affidavits of Navajos being shaken-down and their money, property, and effects taken without trial or hearing.

We are now informed that the Bureau contemplates another stock-reduction drive through the use of force and intimidation; that the Bureau contemplates the allotment to individual Indians of definite, defined grazing areas. Such a program will enable the Bureau to eliminate by actual starvation the herd of any Navajo who opposes Bureau policy. The Navajo fears and distrusts such action. He has seen the unjust arbitrary action of its officials in other matters. He has reason to fear.

The Navajos are law-abiding, peaceful citizens of the United States. They have been a self-reliant, industrious, and honorable people. They have been an asset to communities adjacent to them. They are a democratic people, qualified and competent, with little leading, some encouragement, and no driving to manage and govern themselves in matters pertaining to their own internal affairs. They are a people, who if allowed to govern themselves in their own manner as to their own affairs and if they are encouraged to be and remain self-reliant, given encouragement and kindly guidance in place of bureaucratic despotism, will gradually become useful, respected members of our American civilization. Why can't they have it? Why must they have a system alien to the United States, a system alien to the Navajo, unfitted for him, and to which he will never peacefully submit; why must they have such a system and such a program crammed down their throats?

Under the present Indian program we have seen millions spent, squandered, in building a great Navajo capital, a project of no material benefit to the Navajo, rather under present management the Navajo is showered with injustices, threats, physical violence, and persecuted if he dares offer any resistance or even criticism. Formerly he could secure understanding of his problems and justice from six widely distributed agencies to which he had easy access. Now if he wishes to get a hearing or to bring his problems before the agency he often has to travel hundreds of miles. Other millions have been squandered in so-called soil-erosion control, good in theory but as actually practiced on the reservation an example of waste, inefficiency, and extravagance which will, when and if the full details become public, assume the proportions of a national scandal. In the building of schools on the reservation this same waste and inefficiency is evident. In most of this work involving the expenditure of millions of dollars the net result to the Navajos has been detrimental.

I charge that in the handling of the Navajo problem, and by that handling there really is a problem now, in their dealings with 50,000 citizens of our country, in their squandering of money which can only come from taxes levied upon American citizens, Superintendent Fryer, Commissioner Collier, and Secretary Ickes have subjected the Bureau and the Federal Government to ridicule, whereas they should command respect. They have amply demonstrated their unfitness for further conduct or control of Indian affairs. The Navajo is entitled to a square deal. He is entitled to be treated as an American citizen. He is not a guinea pig to be experimented upon through or under a system and a program "impracticable and even wild."

I feel that a thorough investigation should be made by Congress of the activity of the Indian Bureau in the Navajo country. I am convinced that such an investigation would result in the establishment of the accuracy of the charges made herein. Such an investigation would establish the gross unfitness and inability of the men at the head of Indian affairs. They should be removed.

Just now today's issue of the Gallup Independent comes to hand with a front-page article reporting that Paul B. Palmer, attorney for Hasteen Tso and others, failed to appear and to represent his clients at a hearing conducted today at Fort Defiance, on a charge of refusing to dip sheep. It is quite evident that this article is based upon misinformation supplied to the Gallup paper by the paid publicity agent of the Indian Bureau, who resides at Window Rock, that great monument of oppression, injustice, mismanagement, and inefficiency, commonly known as the Navajo capital.

The truth of the matter is this: Under date of August 4 the following telegram was sent to John Curley, Navajo judge:

"On behalf of Hosteen Tso & Co., demand prompt trial by jury. What are charges? Advise fully, collect.

PAUL B. PALMER."

I have talked to Mr. Palmer and have been informed by him that no reply has been as yet received to his wire; that he has had no notice from any party, including officials of the Indian Bureau, as to the date set for hearing in this matter, and that he had no knowledge whatever of any hearing until after it had been held.

I have also just been informed of the building some 3 years ago of an Indian day school costing some $37,000 upon private deeded land, over which neither the Government or the Indian Bureau has control and to which neither the Government, the Indian Bureau, or the Indians have any right, title, interest, or claim. Full details concerning this matter will be furnished you and the Senate committee in the near future.

We are sure that the officials of the Indian Bureau are now completely on the defense. The facts insure their merited downfall. The forces in opposition to Bureau policy comprises almost the entire Navajo Tribe, and excepts only that limited number of Navajos who are in the employ of the Bureau or upon whom they have some hold through knowledge of past transgressions of law, and over whom they hold threats of prosecution if their "suggestions" are not followed.

Trusting that this letter will contain some elements of help in the fight you are waging against this despotic bureaucracy, I am,

Very truly yours,

J. MURRAY PALMER.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I also wish to have inserted in the RECORD, by unanimous consent, a letter addressed to me by Miss Cecil Cate with reference to Indian matters throughout the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

ST. LOUIS, MO., May 10, 1937.

Senator DENNIS CHAVEZ,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CHAVEZ: I am sending you a file on the Sioux Indian situation on the Pine Ridge Reservation as it existed and continues to exist under the Collier regime.

To understand the Sioux question of today we must look back at the old treaties. There are three big treaties of the Sioux, 1869, 1877, and 1889. For your information, I have taken from congressional records a brief outline of these treaties. The time limit of 1869 is based on one sentence, "For a period not less than 20 years." The treaty of 1877 is the treaty between the Sioux and the United States Government regarding the Black Hills. It was agreed in 1913 that the Treaty of 1877 was not impressed with a time limit (File Section A, pp. 1 and 2).

In face of these facts Commissioner Collier said in the presence of many people on his first visit to Pine Ridge that Sioux treaties had lapsed. The Indians now must depend on the generosity of Uncle Sam's heart. In other words, they are living on gratuity funds. This was in 1934. In the early spring of this same year the "plains conference" for Northwest Indians was held in Rapid City, S. Dak. All northwest tribes were represented. However, the Indians, especially the Sioux, did not line up with Mr. Collier's plans. They were not willing to trade treaty rights for the Wheeler-Howard bill. They wanted to go back home and talk the thing over with other members of the tribe. This did not please the Commissioner. He blamed the missionaries for this attitude of the Indians.

On March 9, 1934, Commissioner Collier wrote a letter to the Catholic Indian Bureau in Washington complaining that the missionaries were active in opposing the Wheeler-Howard bill. In this letter there was a veiled threat to take away mission grants if the missionaries did not line up with his policy (File Section A, pp. 3 and 4). The whole Collier plan was a "must" affair, and, right or wrong, no one dared say a word against the radical changes that the New Deal brought in the Sioux country. The Catholic Indian Bureau had to calm the wrath of the Commissioner (File Section A, p. 5).

The Wheeler-Howard bill was accepted by the Pine Ridge Sioux. No one ever knew how this was brought about, as the Indians did not want it and the reservation was in a turmoil. It was whispered about that those who did not vote were counted for the bill and it won by default. However, the bill was not a law until the charter was accepted by the Indians. Regardless of this fact, this bill was put into operation by Commissioner Collier. On March 15, 1937, Senator WHEELER asked for the repeal of this bill, because, he said, "I have come to the conclusion that it is a bad bill, thoroughly deserving of repeal. My conviction is that it is unworkable, reactionary, doctrinaire, and unpopular among important sections of the Indians themselves." About this same time the charter for the bill was brought up for vote on the Pine Ridge Reservation. One Indian told me, "We are ready this time and our horns are sharpened." The charter was hopelessly defeated. Yet I think, in the face of this fact, Mr. Collier will continue his reorganization policy among the Sioux.

I saw this bill, or what is known as the Reorganization Act, in operation on this reservation for almost 4 years. I agree perfectly with Mr. WHEELER that it is unworkable and unpopular. It brought nothing but hardship and suffering to the Indians and great dissatisfaction. There was terrible poverty in spite of the fact that thousands and thousands of dollars were spent each year for the betterment of the Sioux. The monthly Government pay roll at the Government agency at Pine Ridge will tell the story of where the money went and how little of Indian funds reached the Indians. The bill just did not work. And today, after vast sums have been spent, the Indians are as poor as ever and further away from self-government and home life than he was 5 years ago. Commissioner Collier spreads a beautiful propaganda around about the Indians getting a new lease on life under the New Deal. He talks much about buying back land—yes; submarginal land that is neither workable nor fit for a human being to live on or build up a home.

The Sioux Indians of Pine Ridge do not want the Reorganization Act. They do not want the various social workers, field educational agents, reorganization officials, and others who are using the Indians' money for large salaries while the poor Indian begs for a piece of bread and a cup of cold water. Just recently a man by the name of Holsizer was given a trailer that the Indians claim cost $11,000. Even if it cost half of this sum it would be bad enough. He is to go out and rough it with the Indians in this floating palace. Mr. CHAVEZ, just how much good do you think this project of the Government will do the Sioux Indians? To me it is the height of nonsense to spend such a sum of money on a trailer when the Indian is half starved and freezing.

One more point: If the Sioux treaties have lapsed, as Commissioner Collier claims, how can he go before Congress and appropriate vast sums of money under Sioux treaties? He did just this. I refer you to House of Representatives, Seventy-fourth Congress, first session, Report 249, Interior Department appropriation bill, fiscal year 1936, pages 24–26–27. Do you think that public opinion would ever back Mr. Collier in the policy that the United States owes nothing to the American Indian?

For your information, Mr. CHAVEZ, I am attaching a copy of the mission contracts that must be signed before the Interior Department will give grants to the South Dakota Missions. (Sec. A, pp. 6, 7, 8.)

Briefly this contract means that the freedom of religious education is gone where John Collier has a thumb on the institution. This in spite of the Reuben Quick Bear case of 1907. The decision of the Supreme Court was "The treaty and trust moneys that the Indians can lay claim to as a matter of right; the only sums on which they are entitled to rely as theirs for education; and while these moneys are not delivered to them in hand, yet the money must be not only provided but be expended for their benefit and in part for their education; it seems inconceivable that Congress should have intended to prohibit them (the Indians) from receiving religious education at their own cost if they so desire it; such an intent would be one to prohibit the free exercise of religion amongst the Indians."

Of course, if the treaties are scrapped, there is no money. Mr. Collier with a stroke of the pen did away with treaties and ignored the decision of the Supreme Court. If these facts are admitted true, why put up a fight like the one that just took place in Congress on the Supreme Court bill?

After the scrapping of treaties and the introduction of the Wheeler-Howard bill Mr. Collier made his five-point plan of education effective. In July 1933 a circular on Indian education appeared on the reservation (sec. B, p. 1). This was the first rumor that the Indians had that the school program for the Sioux was to be radically changed. On January 13, 1934, Mr. Collier mailed from the Indian Office the five-point plan of education for the Sioux (sec. B, p. 2).

Let us survey briefly the situation of the Sioux at this time. This five-point plan might look harmless in writing, but it meant tragedy for the Indians. It forced little children to live in tents and huts during the long, cold winter months. The Indians with large families of 8 and 10 children were not prepared for this radical change. Conditions were crowded; there were not enough blankets; in many cases there was sickness. One can find active tuberculosis and trachoma in almost every hut or tent. The children were forced to walk 2½ miles to school, and this in a blizzard country. Often the children had little or no breakfast. They returned home to share a limited amount of food with 6, 7, or 8 other children. Surely a program that brought so much suffering was not practical. These children could have been fed and kept warm in schools not many miles away, but they were condemned by a social worker, who had a nice warm place to live and plenty to eat, to months of suffering. They were treated like so much chattel so that the new experiment of the Indian Office could be carried out ruthlessly. There has been much writing and more talking about this policy building up the home and promoting family life. How can a home be built up when it has nothing for a foundation but poverty, sickness, hunger, and death? Can a tent pitched by the wayside where there is nothing to eat but rotten food, dogs, and cow guts, and often not this, be a home? In spite of pleas and angry words of parents this program was carried out on the Pine Ridge Reservation (sec. B, pp. 3 and 4).

On March 5, 1934, the Pine Ridge Indians appealed to Mrs. Roosevelt for help. The Rosebud Sioux had appealed to the President. Mrs. Roosevelt did not acknowledge the letter and the whole affair was hushed up because the public must not know that the Indians were dissatisfied with their new deal. On May 27, 1937, Mrs. Roosevelt resigned as honorary vice president of the National Indian Association. She said there was not enough evidence for the accusations that the association was making against the administration. Perhaps Mrs. Roosevelt did not read the petition sent to her by the Sioux back in 1934 (sec. B, pp. 5 and 6).

The Indian parents wrote many letters begging for the right to send their children to the school of their choice. I am enclosing copies of some of these letters (sec. B, pp. 7, 8, 9, and 10). These letters will give you a faint idea of the misery and suffering that the new educational program for the Sioux brought upon a helpless and destitute people.

The case of Willie Brewer, a mixed-blood Indian, was used as a "test case." Letters were written to Jim Farley, Secretary Ickes, and the local Government agent with no success (sec. B, pp. 12, 13, 14, and 15).

The mission school decided to enroll a few destitute children on their charity list. They were backed in this by a letter written by Secretary Ickes to George Whirlwind Soldier of the Rosebud Sioux (sec. B, p. 16). However, local officials did not abide by Mr. Ickes' decision, but they began to fight the mission for this course of action. A letter written to Mr. McGregor, former agent, by Miss Clara Madsen, Mr. Collier's very efficient social worker, shows clearly the policy of the Department in action (sec. B, pp. 17, 18, and 19). The Carlow children, the Brewer children, the John H. Clifford children, were not put out of the mission school, but the superintendent was. He did nothing but feed destitute children and demand the rights of parents over the education of their children, but this was not cooperation with John Collier. Is the new deal for Indians so much like Soviet Russia that a missionary is removed from Indian territory because he demands the rights that belong to every American citizen?

I wish to make a few comments on this letter written by the social worker (sec. B, p. 17), Miss Madsen writes, "The Paul Grey family, the American Horse family are two of the many families living in tents, sleeping on the ground, storing food in paper cartons, who are sending their children to day or public schools. Yet because these families accepted the policy and make no complaint the children remain at home and attend day or public schools."

It certainly is a wonderful system of education that sends little children home each evening to a tent to sleep on the ground and grab food from paper cartons with a half a dozen other youngsters. The social worker who forces children to remain in these conditions during the cold winter months must be very efficient. Within a few miles of these children there is a warm school, beds, and plenty of food, but the children are not allowed these comforts because John Collier's dream for Indians must come true within the next 20 years.

Section B, page 18, Miss Madsen again writes: "It has been gratifying to know how the Swift Bird family, the Big Crow family, and the Dixon family have improved their living conditions since last summer." I wish to take up the case of the Swift Bird family. Last September 1936 I was at Government headquarters when the Indian children were being herded like cattle into schools of the Government's choice. Among the mothers who had come to plead for her children was Mrs. Swift Bird. She looked very sad but smiled when I shook hands with her. She said in a helpless, tragic voice, "My oldest girl died with TB." I offered her a few words of consolation. In the same tragic voice she added, "My little girl is in the hospital with TB." I assured her that the little girl would soon be well. She then said, "My two boys will get TB if they live in that hut all winter and sleep under the same bedclothes as the sick children. I want to get an O. K. for my boys to go to the Mission School so they can stay away from the TB." In spite of this tragedy there was no O. K. from the Government and these boys could have been saved with good nourishing food and a warm place to live and sleep. I leave it to your own good judgment, Senator CHAVEZ, did the Swift Bird family improve living conditions between 1935 and 1936? This is just one of the many, many hopeless cases that one meets day after day in the Sioux country. We, who have the welfare of the American Indian at heart, are not concerned with the realization of Mr. Collier's dream. We must face facts and often grim facts today and not 20 years from now.

With all of this "ring-around-rosy" that the new five point plan of education caused nothing was accomplished. There are on the Pine Ridge Reservation 2,600 Indian children of school age. Thousands have been spent under the New Deal for consolidated schools, busses, new equipment, and teachers. In spite of this on October 31, 1936, 822 children, according to Government records, were in no school. See letter written by Mr. E. Clement, field educational agent on the reservation. (Sec. B, p. 20.) I hold the list of children compiled by the Government. Can an educational program be called a success or even practical when after 4 years of spending vast sums of money one-third of the children are out of school?

Back in 1924 Mr. John Collier, Indian Commissioner, wrote for the Scripps-Howard magazine. His articles dealt with the Pagan Indian Religions. Mr. Collier shows very definitely that he is in favor of this form of paganism. (Sec. C, p. 1.)

On the Pine Ridge Reservation the native American religion, or what is known as the peyote eaters, has gained much strength during the Collier regime. For your information the Indians chew the seed of a cactus plant and call this the Body of Christ. They cook it into a stew and it becomes the Blood of Christ. This diabolical practice is defended behind the cloak of the freedom of religion. If this practice continues it will ruin the Indian mentally, morally, and physically. I have seen Indians under the influence of the peyote. They are dazed and act like those addicted to dope. I am told that after chewing this seed the Indian has beautiful dreams. It has been referred to as an "intellectual drug." Can you understand just why any man who has the interest of the Indians at heart will encourage such a practice?

Section C, No. 2, is a pamphlet on peyote reprinted from hearings of the Subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations of Interior Department appropriation bill for 1936, pages 689–696.

Section C, No. 3, is a letter sent around by Commissioner John Collier defending the Peyote religion.

In 1934 Mrs. Eastman in an open letter in the Christian Century Magazine openly accused Mr. Collier of paganizing the Indians. Mr. Collier as usual denied this fact. He claimed that he had the backing of both Catholic and Protestant Mission Boards for his new religious regulations that gave the Peyote or native American religion the same consideration as the Christian religions. (Sec. C, p. 4.) I cannot believe that any self-respecting mission board regardless of creed would back John Collier and the Peyote religion.

The Baptist Home Mission Society took the matter up, but Collier's statement was never refuted by any ecclesiastical authority so the regulations remained in force in Indian territory. (Sec. C, p. 5.)

In the law and order regulations of the Department, tribal marriages are allowed. (Sec. C, p. 6.) Tribal marriages among the Sioux mean the kicking of a drum. (Sec. C, p. 7.) The tribal divorce is obtained by a similar proceeding. (Sec. C, p. 8.)

In 1934 I dared to criticize these pagan practices in a private letter. By mistake this letter reached John Collier. He became enraged and being a vindictive gentleman he appealed to the Catholic Indian Bureau to hush up any criticism of this policy. There was an awful hub-bub raised over this criticism of the Department. I was told to keep silent, because, as the Catholic Indian bureau wrote, "one effect was, I know, to arouse the Commissioner. I am further told that repetition of such an incident would naturally arouse the Secretary." Up until this time I was really under the impression that we had freedom of speech in this United States of America. This just proves further what a "must" affair this whole new Indian deal (for Indians) has been. It would take a miracle of God to protect anyone in Indian territory who dared to even whisper a criticism of John Collier's policy. (Sec. C, p. 9.)

I have often wondered how Mr. Collier expects to realize his beautiful dream of building up home and family life among the Sioux or any other tribe of Indians with these drum-kicking marriages.

During the last 4 years the question has often been asked, "Is the new deal for Indians communistic"? Mr. Collier is notoriously known to be affiliated with the American Civil Liberties Union. This is a conceded fact. Then why would his program be anything else but communistic? The Indians answered this question just recently when a news flash went around the country that the 30 tribes of Northwest Indians who were in council at Lewistown, Idaho, asked for Mr. Collier's removal because "he is a sympathizer of the Christ-mocking American Civil Liberties Union.

Let us review the Sioux situation as it is today; the rights of parents are gone over the education of their children; pagan religions and pagan marriages are permitted by the Department; pagan religions are taught little children. The Department does not call it communism but broad-mindedness and a beautiful dream that will make the Indians live in a land of plenty 20 years hence. However, if denying parents a God-given right and teaching youth paganism by active propaganda are not communistic principles, then, Senator CHAVEZ, what is communism?

I am enclosing a copy of a letter received a year ago through the American Legion of South Dakota. It tells that Mr. Collier is backing members of the American Civil Liberties Union (sec. C, p. 10).

We Americans have robbed and cheated the Indians of everything. Surely, in justice we owe the native American more than the red flag of Soviet Russia flying over Indian Territory.

Thanking you, Senator CHAVEZ, I am,

Very sincerely yours.

(Miss) CECIL CATE.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I also ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from Frank O. Jones, chairman of the Sac and Fox Indian Business Committee, written from Atlanta, Ga.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

722 E. MORNINGSIDE DRIVE,
Atlanta, Ga., August 10, 1937.

Senator DENNIS CHAVEZ,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CHAVEZ: In the press a few days ago, I observed a statement that you are reported to have made as follows:

"If evidence already brought forward is true, things are rotten in the Indian Bureau and I intend to see that Congress does something about it."

I, as chairman of the business committee of a small tribe, the Sac and Fox Indians of Oklahoma, since 1924, want to refer you to reports of irregularities amounting to downright corruption in the Shawnee Indian Agency, Shawnee, Okla., on file in the office of Secretary of the Interior Ickes.

Two department investigations of conditions in that agency have resulted in the usual Indian Office whitewash. Now, they have this W. P. A., E. C. W. plaything to browbeat poor, hungry, helpless Indians into submission. I do not know how many complaints have been filed by our members. If you file a complaint now you are marked for punishment. Talk about a new deal for the Indian is bunk. I have recently asked a senatorial investigation of that agency, but I am glad that the Senate Indian Committee realize that it is Collier who should be investigated. Almost his entire time has been spent in the secrecy of his office answering criticism since he accidently got his appointment as commissioner. He promised the universe to the Indian early in 1933. Look at the plight of the Indian today! The very conditions Collier criticized for years still prevail, but on a larger scale.

Clean out the whole Indian Bureau and there will still be plenty of rottenness in the service. I am pleased to enclose letters from members of my tribe which tell only a part of the story.

Respectfully yours,

FRANK O. JONES,
Chairman, Sac and Fox Indian Business Committee.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate very much longer. I want to read part of a short letter that I received from an Indian Bureau employee. I shall not mention his name, for I know what would happen to the gentleman if I did. This letter was written only a short while ago. He says:

I have been teaching——

I will not say where—for over 2 years, and I am convinced that if there was more sympathetic help given to the Indian, and not so much high-pressure supervision, both the Indian and the Government would be better off.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to his colleague?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I do.

Mr. HATCH. I have just come on the floor of the Senate, and have not been present during all the remarks of my colleague. I am wondering if he has touched upon the question of the expenses of the Indian Bureau.

Mr. CHAVEZ. It was with reference to that matter that I submitted the original amendment which is now under discussion.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAVEZ. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The Senator, however, has not called attention to the enormous increase in the expenses of operation of the Indian Bureau. A few years ago the amount annually expended by the Bureau was from $15,000,000 to $16,000,000. It rose to $22,000,000 in 1933 and, as I recall, is over $30,000,000 for this year; and there has been an increase in the number of employees from 6,300 to 6,400, as it was in 1933, to perhaps 7,000-plus at the present time.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I may say to the Senator from Utah that I have stated that the Indian Bureau is ruthless, and I state that so far as Government expenses are concerned the Indian Commissioner is ruthless. That remark is based upon a statement made by the Commissioner before a subcommittee of the Committee on Indian Affairs to this effect: When his attention was called to the fact that $12,000,000 had been spent by the Indian Bureau in one area alone in New Mexico and Arizona, and he was asked why that was done, he answered the committee in effect in these words: "The money was there and we grabbed it."

That is what appeared before the committee, and that is what the Indian Commissioner stated before the committee. The Indian Bureau has built in one reservation in New Mexico alone beautiful homes costing $10,000 and $15,000, but not for the Navajo—homes that have every convenience that can be found in any home in the city of Washington, with radios, telephones, and heat from a central heating plant, at an expenditure of several million dollars; so much of an expenditure that a firm of architects in the city of New York collected practically $200,000 in fees.

But the Navajo still lives in the hogan, and the little girl that we send to school, and teach her your ways and my ways, after she gets through does not get an opportunity to pound on any typewriter that we provide for by appropriations. She will be herding a bunch of goats inside of 3 weeks after she gets out of school, but the Commissioner will give out statements week after week as to how solicitous he is for the Indian.

It is time for Congress to quit appropriating money for the Indian Bureau and pay a little more attention to the Indian. The Commissioner's theory may be fine, but he has been very impractical. The poor Navajos in my State and in Arizona actually do not know where to turn. What does the Indian Commissioner care for the effect of reducing a herd of a hundred head of sheep? Instead of forcing the Navajo to do that, why do they not try to show him that it should be done? I say it is inhuman, when a Navajo has 100 head of sheep, that under orders of the Commissioner he has to reduce them to 15. It is getting so now that if a squaw wants to make a blanket she has to sell her silver to the Indian trader in order to buy a few pounds of wool, all as a result of the beautiful dream of the Indian Commissioner. Why not use American methods in dealing with the first American?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a number of years ago the numerous complaints concerning the Indian Bureau impelled me to make a searching examination of its operations. I discovered that there was much waste and extravagance, and a personnel greatly in excess of what was required properly to conduct the affairs of the Bureau.

As a result of my investigations, I submitted a resolution calling for an investigation of the activities of the Bureau. Under the resolution, which was adopted, the Committee on Indian Affairs over a period of several years investigated the work of the Bureau in most, if not all, of the Indian agencies. Reports were submitted by the committee calling for reforms and for modifications of the law.

In 1933, as I recall, I brought to the attention of the Senate many of the evils existing in connection with the administration of the laws relating to the Indians. It was hoped that important changes would be made which would result in economy, and improve the condition of our wards. I have been greatly disappointed because the expected reforms have not been effectuated. As a matter of fact, there have been no economies of which I am cognizant, and there has been a very large increase in the personnel.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ] has called attention to abuses and to conditions which I think demand, if continued, a further investigation of the Indian Bureau. It is my purpose to investigate, so far as opportunity may be afforded, the situation of the Indians and the work of the Indian Bureau, with a view of determining whether another investigation should be conducted. I am not satisfied with the large increase in the personnel and with the increase in the expenditures of the Indian Bureau.

If the amendment suggested by the Senator from New Mexico is accepted, I shall be content for the present, and shall submit no further observations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2670) to provide that the United States shall aid the States in wildlife-restoration projects, and for other purposes, which were, on page 3, line 13, to strike out "shall" and insert a comma and "is hereby authorized to"; on page 3, line 15, after the word "hereby", to insert "authorized to be"; on page 3, line 18, to strike out "shall be" and insert "is authorized to be made"; on page 3, line 23, to strike out "shall then be" and insert "is authorized to be made"; on page 4, line 6, to strike out "shall be" and insert "is authorized to be made"; on page 5, line 4, to strike out "shall be" and insert "is authorized to be made"; and on page 9, to strike out lines 5 and 6.

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

THIRD DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill it is proposed to insert the following:

The proviso in the second paragraph under the heading "Refund of erroneous collections" in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes", approved June 29, 1937, is amended to read as follows: "Provided, That except in cases of duplicate tax payments erroneously made on the same property, this appropriation shall be available only for refund of such erroneous payments made within the past 3 years."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, under the direction of the committee I feel compelled to make the point of order that this amendment proposes general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment clearly contemplates a change in existing law, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I offer another amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert, at the proper place in the bill, the following:

For the purpose of paying to the respective persons the respective amounts found by the Court of Claims to be the value of work performed by them, respectively, in excess of 8 hours in each calendar day while employed as engineers, firemen, laborers, and mechanics in the care of public buildings of the United States, elsewhere than in the District of Columbia, as set forth in the following Senate documents, $94,456.20:

(1) Senate documents of the Sixty-first Congress, first session, numbered 93 and 95;

(2) Senate documents of the Sixty-first Congress, second session, numbered 234, 236, 263, 264, 265, 313, 262, 260, 232, 231, 243, 311, 230, 228, 239, 251, 308, 267, 312, 257, 233, 249, 250, 253, 259, 269, 235, 229, 237, 255, 266, 309, 310, 268, 238, 252, and 261; and

(3) Senate documents of the Sixty-second Congress, second session, numbered 535, 532, 524, 527, 528, 534, 541, 500, 521, 515, 517, 533, 519, 506, 537, 512, 498, 538, 525, 504, 503, 507, 501, 530, 543, 539, 499, 523, 497, 505, 536, 514, 540, 516, 529, 546, 509, 518, 544, 508, 545, 513, 520, 531, 547, 526, 542, and 502.

Such respective amounts shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Treasury and each such payment is to be in full satisfaction of, and receipt of same shall operate in each case as a full and final release and discharge of, their said respective claims for compensation for extra hours of work above the legal day of 8 hours.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what the document numbers that have been read refer to.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to effect the payment of claims totaling $94,456.20 for extra labor above the legal day of 8 hours performed by engineers, firemen, laborers, and mechanics while employed in the care of public buildings of the United States outside the District of Columbia.

The claims included in the amendment have been passed upon by the Court of Claims. The court, by its findings, has determined the names of the respective party claimants and amounts awarded in accordance with a Senate bill (S. 9500, 60th Cong., 2d sess.) referred to the court providing for payment to them of "such amount as may by findings of fact be found to be the value of work performed by them, respectively, in excess of 8 hours in each calendar day while employed in care of public buildings of the United States." These findings are correctly reported in the amendment.

One of the claimants has already been paid in this manner (finding in favor of John Glanzmann, S. Doc. 522, 62d Cong., 2d sess., included in the appropriation act of Mar. 4, 1915, 38 Stat. 962, c. 140, p. 980). That finding is identical with those enumerated in the amendment.

Congress recently paid similar findings of the Court of Claims in favor of employees in the navy yards and shore stations for services performed under the same circumstances. (Private Act 349, Private Res. 7, 74th Cong., $332,342.74, approved Aug. 29, 1935.)

The most comprehensive and exhaustive analysis of these claims is found in Senate Document 985, Sixty-second Congress, third session. It establishes beyond argument that these amounts allowed by the Court of Claims for overtime work beyond the legal day of 8 hours should be paid.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Connecticut. It rather seemed to me, as I heard the amendment read, that it covered, in the first place, a private claim which could not be put on the bill, and in the next place that it is a matter which has no legislative foundation or Budget estimate underlying it. I am inquiring as to whether I am correct in that. The Senator said it had been adjudicated by the Court of Claims.

Mr. LONERGAN. Yes; I so stated. It has been represented to me that a similar amendment was adopted some years ago. The claim has been presented to the Committee on Claims of the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS. It seems to me it would more properly go to the Committee on Claims, and that we should not act before the Committee on Claims has passed on it. I make the point of order that it is a private claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion that the items contained in the amendment are not items authorized by existing law, and therefore sustains the point of order.

AMENDMENT OF RIVER AND HARBOR AUTHORIZATION ACT OF 1936—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. COPELAND submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7646) an act to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: "Provided further, That if after investigation the President finds that States, political subdivisions thereof, or other responsible local agencies are unable by reason of their financial condition to comply with the requirements as to local cooperation with respect to providing lands, easements, and rights-of-way for any projects authorized by the Flood Control Act of June 15, 1936 (Public Act No. 678, 74th Congress), the Flood Control Act of June 22, 1936 (Public Act No. 738, 74th Congress), and by this amending act, he is authorized to waive such requirement on any individual project not to exceed fifty percent of the estimated costs of the lands, easements, and rights-of-way;" and with a further amendment as follows: Insert: Quotation marks at the end of section 1; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, and 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 4, and 5, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

"SECTION 9. That section 5 of the act entitled 'An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes', approved June 22, 1936, is hereby amended by adding a third paragraph, reading as follows, under the heading 'Mississippi River': 'Memphis, Tenn.—The construction of flood-walls, levees, and revetments along Wolf River and Nonconnah Creek for the protection of Memphis, Tennessee, in accordance with the report on record in the office of the Chief of Engineers. Estimated construction cost, $9,000,000. Estimated cost of lands and damages, $4,324,000'"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Managers on the part of the Senate.

WILL M. WHITTINGTON,
GLENN GRISWOLD,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from New York about an amendment I offered a few days ago, which was agreed to, authorizing the President to waive the requirements under the Flood Control Act of 1936 for local contributions in the purchase of rights-of-way and easements for the construction of flood-protection devices. I inquire what was done with the amendment?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the position of the Senator was truly presented to the conferees, and after due consideration the conferees agreed on a procedure, which was upset in the House. It went to the House, and there what we did was somewhat changed. As it comes back to us the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is changed so that the President may remit the charges up to 50 percent of the locally required contribution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I merely wish to reiterate what I have on numerous occasions stated previously, that in a great flood-control program such as is necessary in the Ohio River Valley, and in the valleys of other large rivers in the country, to which many tributaries make their contributions of water during flood seasons, the problem is primarily a national obligation. I cannot conceive of the possibility of ever working out a unified and effective system of flood-control devices on any great stream in this country if those devices are to be constructed along the river at points only where the cities or counties are sufficiently wealthy to enable them to purchase rights-of-way in order that they may have protection.

Therefore I believe, as I have believed for a long time, that the question of flood protection is a national obligation, and wherever there is a need for a sea wall, or a levee, or any other artificial device necessary to protect a city or town from the waters which flow down from 10 or 15 or 20 other States, the Government of the United States ought not to require the local communities to buy the rights-of-way in order that they may be protected from the waters which are descending upon them from many of the States above.

Let me illustrate what I mean by calling attention to my own home city, which is only typical of the situation in the entire Ohio Valley, and that is only typical of the conditions in many other valleys in this country. The Army engineers have estimated that a flood wall to protect that city would cost in the neighborhood of between five and six million dollars, and that it would require more than $2,000,000 to buy the rights-of-way in order to build that flood wall. That means that in order for that city to protect itself against floods, for which it is not responsible, except in the fact that it happened to locate itself on the banks of the Ohio River, it is necessary for that small community of 40,000 people to raise over $2,000,000, which is about one-third of the entire cost of the protective device, in order that it may protect itself against all the waters which flow down from many other States in many tributaries of the Ohio River.

The same thing is true of the rivers in Indiana and Ohio, West Virginia and Pennsylvania. The same thing is true, in some respects, in New England, along the Merrimack and Connecticut Rivers. It is true as to the Monongahela and the Allegheny. It is true as to the larger streams all over the country. So, while the conferees have conceded at least that to the extent of half the amendment which I offered and secured the adoption of was sound, I doubt after all whether it offers much relief to communities which are required to raise an enormous amount beyond their power either of taxation or of borrowing under the limitations of the law under which they operate. While the committee of conference has made that much of a concession I am extremely sorry that the conferees on the part of the House and the House itself could not agree to my amendment, because I think it is a righteous amendment, and I think that if we ever have in this country an effective and unified flood-control system on the great navigable rivers, it must be based upon the recognition of the fact that it is primarily a national obligation, and that if the poorer communities, which cannot make the contributions, are left out, there cannot be any unified and effective flood-control system on any river in the United States.

Mr. President, I felt it my duty to say this much, in view of my convictions on this subject. I appreciate what the committee of conference did in the way of providing that the President might waive at least half of the local contributions, but I hope that when we are able to write a comprehensive flood-control bill, we will recognize what we must recognize, that this is a national obligation.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky inform me whether our constituency in Illinois called Cairo, on the river, is affected equally with the community he has described?

Mr. BARKLEY. The city of Cairo is equally affected, the city of Metropolis, which is a smaller place, which was inundated, is likewise affected. If we take the city of Lawrenceburg, Ind., or take all the smaller cities around Covington, opposite Cincinnati, or take Louisville, any city that is not above the average in wealth, it will be found that they will be unable to raise even half of the money required.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to corroborate what the Senator from Kentucky has said. There are communities in Ohio which are in exactly the same predicament the Senator has described as to the city of Paducah.

Mr. BARKLEY. I recall one city which was for a whole month completely under water. The property damage in that city alone was $25,000,000, and the city was required to anticipate its revenues for 2 years in advance in order that it might take care of the refugees. To require such a city to put up $2,000,000 to buy rights-of-way would mean nothing more nor less than a denial of any protection in the case of a future flood.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, there is another objection to the amendment that was adopted in the House and is now a part of the conference report, that the amendment applies only to flood-control projects affecting towns and cities in the Ohio Valley.

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. OVERTON. We have undertaken to adopt a uniform rule of local contribution applicable to the entire flood-control program throughout the United States. We have the doctrine of local contribution embedded in the flood-control act relating to the lower Mississippi Valley, the act of June 15, 1936. We have a local contribution provision applicable to all the projects under the Copeland omnibus flood-control act.

The effort is made to effect a departure from that uniform rule by making an exception in the case of the towns and cities of the Ohio Valley. I can readily sympathize with what the senior Senator from Kentucky has to say with reference to the plight of those towns and cities in the Ohio Valley.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate what the Senator says. Of course, the amendment which I offered the other day was an amendment to the Flood Control Act of 1936; but the amendment itself pertained only to the Ohio Valley. When I offered the amendment, which was agreed to, I indicated, I think in a colloquy with a Senator on the floor, that it was my desire that what I offered should apply to the Flood Control Act of 1936, and not solely to the Ohio Valley. I realize that any exception made to the rule of local contribution should be made uniform, and applicable to the whole country, and not to one river valley.

We had before us at the time consideration of only the Ohio Valley in an amendment to the Flood Control Act. I was asked by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] whether my amendment applied only to the Ohio Valley, or whether it applied to all the rivers that came under the act of 1936. I then gave it as my view that, although the amendment under consideration was applicable only to the Ohio River, and my amendment happened to be an amendment to the Flood Control Act, the effect of my amendment was to cover all of the projects that were included in the 1936 act.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I was not present at the time that bill was considered by the Senate; but since then I have read the RECORD, and what the Senator from Kentucky has to say in that connection is correct. I think it is well for us to emphasize now, however, the fact that there ought to be a uniform rule. For instance, the Presiding Officer now in the chair [Mr. CLARK] will recall that in the St. Francis Valley there must be full local contribution, and this amendment would not apply to the St. Francis River Valley project. It would not apply to other projects in the lower Mississippi Valley, and it would not apply to other projects under the Copeland Omnibus Flood Control Act.

I think also that it is a matter that should not be left to the discretion of the President or anyone else. We ought to have a uniform rule that is applicable; and I think this amendment would be better were it to reduce by 50 percent the local contributions, without the necessity of the President passing on the question of whether or not any particular town or municipality should be relieved. If one is relieved, others ought to be relieved. There ought to be uniformity in the matter of local contributions.

I hope the Senator from New York, in charge of the conference report, and the Senator from Kentucky, when this matter comes up again at the next session of the Congress, as in all probability it will, will join the representatives of other States that are interested in flood control so as to devise a uniform rule that will be applicable to all flood-control projects throughout the United States.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if I am here next winter I shall do all I can to bring about uniformity in this rule. I think it is fair to the lower Mississippi and the tributaries of the lower Mississippi, where in years past lands have been bought for the levees, and so forth, that they should be included; but the provision came before us in its present form, and under the rules of the conference we could not go beyond the fact that it applied to the Ohio River Valley.

So I move, Mr. President, that the Senate agree to the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate no. 1 to the bill (H. R. 7646) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", approved June 22, 1936, and concurring therein with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by the Senate amendment to insert the following: "Provided further, That if after investigation the President finds that any city or town is, by reason of its financial condition, unable to comply with the requirements of section 3 as to local cooperation, he is hereby authorized to waive such requirements on any individual project not to exceed 50 percent of the estimated cost of the lands, easements, and rights-of-way."

And receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6 and concurring therein with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by the Senate amendment, to insert the following:

"SEC. 9. That section 5 of the act entitled 'An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes', approved June 22, 1936, is hereby amended by adding a third paragraph reading as follows, under the heading 'Mississippi River': 'Memphis, Tenn.—The construction of flood walls, levees, and revetments along Wolf River and Nonconnah Creek for the protection of Memphis, Tenn., in accordance with the report on record in the Office of the Chief of Engineers. Estimated construction cost, $9,000,000. Estimated cost of lands and damages, $4,324,000'; and the Senate agree to the same."

Mr. COPELAND. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8245) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and for other purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the importance of having this appropriation bill disposed of and sent to conference at the earliest possible moment, I hope that any other conference reports which may be ready will await the passage of the deficiency appropriation bill, because conference reports can be disposed of after the deficiency appropriation bill is passed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the appropriate place in the bill, it is proposed to insert the following:

Of the unexpended balance of moneys appropriated to carry out the provisions of title 2 of the National Industrial Recovery Act of June 16, 1933, such amount, not exceeding $500,000, as the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works may deem necessary, is hereby made available for suveys and resurveys of public lands during the fiscal years 1938 and 1939, to be expended under the supervision of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 41, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following:

Subscription to capital stock, United States Housing Authority: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to make payments on account of subscriptions to the capital stock of the United States Housing Authority in accordance with the provisions of the United States Housing Act of 1937, fiscal year 1938, to remain available until expended, $1,000,000.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, this particular appropriation has been authorized by the housing bill passed by the Senate; so, under the rule, I am authorized to present the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senate will recall that a few days ago two bills were passed, one sponsored by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], who is now ill in the hospital, and one sponsored by me. The one sponsored by me provided for the completion of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park in east Tennessee, and the one sponsored by the Senator from Nevada made provision for the Tahoe National Forest in Nevada. The one dealing with the Great Smoky Mountains National Park authorized an appropriation of $743,265, and the one relating to the Tahoe National Forest authorized an appropriation of $325,000.

A short while ago the Senate agreed to the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] to purchase additional land to be included in the Yosemite National Park in California. I now wish to offer amendments dealing with similar situations in regard to the two projects I mentioned. They are in order. I ask the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations to accept the amendments dealing with the Great Smoky Mountains National Park and the Tahoe National Forest, and, after they shall have been agreed to, to let them go to conference.

I send forward an amendment and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill, it is proposed to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to acquire on behalf of the United States by purchase, at prices deemed by him to be reasonable, the lands needed to complete the Great Smoky Mountains National Park in the State of Tennessee, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 22, 1926 (44 Stat. 616); and the Secretary of the Interior is further authorized, when in his opinion unreasonable prices are asked for any of such lands, to acquire the same by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, $743,265.29, to remain available until expended.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, how much money does the amendment undertake to appropriate?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is to appropriate the money for completing the park.

Mr. AUSTIN. How much money is involved?

Mr. McKELLAR. Seven hundred and forty-three thousand dollars. The amendment is proposed for the same reason as was the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO], except that it is more important to complete the Great Smoky Mountains National Park than it is to add land to the park in California. The amendment I propose is precisely similar to that offered by the Senator from California which was agreed to a while ago.

I ask the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] if he is not willing to take the amendment to conference.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will accept a very frank statement, I will say that a number of these items have been agreed to; and I am sure that the conferees who will be appointed on this bill—and I have no doubt the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] will be among the number—will have considerable difficulty in maintaining all of these items on the appropriation bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that situation; but in view of the fact that other amendments have been agreed to, I think my amendment ought to be added to the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not think the appropriation should be made in accordance with any such rule as that. It should not be made upon the theory that "Somebody has had an appropriation for a park in his vicinity, and therefore I shall ask for an appropriation."

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senate has already passed a bill providing for this purpose. I do not know whether or not the Senator from Vermont voted for it; but a bill has been passed authorizing the appropriation, and why should not the money be appropriated for the purpose? The responsibility is not passed on to anyone else. The Senate has heretofore taken that responsibility, and has passed the bill covering this matter, and has authorized the appropriation. I am offering the amendment in order that it may be appropriated.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a point of order. Is the amendment subject to objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Chair indulge me for a moment? The bill has already been passed by the Senate, and has been favorably reported to the House, and there is no reason in the world why the amendment I offer is not in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question. What committee made an examination with a view to determining the value of the ground, and whether it was necessary to be added as part of any national reserve or park?

Mr. McKELLAR. The National Park Service has made that examination. As I stated the other day in the Senate when the bill was under discussion, and immediately before it was passed, the money was appropriated with the expectation that all of the land would be bought, but when the necessary land was purchased for the North Carolina end of the park it was found that money was lacking to purchase the necessary land in Tennessee.

This park is ready to be turned over to the Government as soon as the additional land is purchased. Nearly a million people will visit that park during the present year. Yet we have not even turned it over to the Government. The State of Tennessee has bonded itself for a very large sum to pay for a portion of these lands. The Rockefeller Foundation, in the interest of Mrs. Rockefeller, has contributed $5,000,000 toward it. It seems to me that an appropriation should be made, and I hope the Senate will accept the amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. I make a point of order that the amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the provision of the amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to make condemnation of land is clearly legislation, not authorized by law, and, therefore, being legislation, is subject to the point of order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I wish to modify the amendment by striking out the language providing for condemnation, and merely providing for the appropriation of $743,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee modifies his amendment. The clerk will state the amendment as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page —, line —, after line —, it is proposed to insert the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to acquire on behalf of the United States by purchase, at prices deemed by him to be reasonable, the lands needed to complete the Great Smoky Mountains National Park in the State of Tennessee, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 22, 1926 (44 Stat. 616), $743,265.29, to remain available until expended.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, it seems to me that a matter of this kind offered here at this time ought to have more consideration than is apparently possible under the circumstances, and, if it is pressed, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Connally	Johnson, Calif.	Pope
Andrews	Copeland	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe
Ashurst	Davis	King	Reynolds

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names; a quorum is present.

The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. On behalf of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] I offer the companion amendment to the one just adopted, modifying the amendment by striking out the matter which was declared to be subject to a point of order in the case of the amendment just agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Following the amendment last agreed to, it is proposed to insert:

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire, by purchase when purchasable at prices deemed by him reasonable, or by exchange under the provisions of the act of March 20, 1922, as amended, on behalf of the United States, certain lands in the State of Nevada now in private ownership, as particularly described in Senate bill 2583 entitled, "An act to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for and the addition thereof to the Tahoe National Forest, in the State of Nevada, and the acquisition of certain other lands for the completion of the acquisition of the remaining lands within the limits of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, in east Tennessee", $325,000: Provided, That when title to any of the aforesaid privately owned lands has been vested in the United States, such lands described in section I hereof shall be added to and become a part of the Tahoe National Forest and shall be subject to all laws and regulations applicable thereto: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to affect any valid existing rights: Provided further, That the provisions of the act approved June 10, 1920, as amended, known as the Federal Water Power Act, shall not apply to any of the lands added to the Tahoe National Forest pursuant to the provisions of this paragraph.

Mr. AUSTIN. I make the point of order that the amendment proposes legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

For the purposes of carrying out the provisions of the Cooperative Farm Forestry Act (Public, No. 95, 75th Cong.) for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, $1,000,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the amendment.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, at the present session of Congress we passed what is known as the Cooperative Farm Forestry Act, introduced by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. The act authorizes an annual appropriation of $2,500,000 for the purpose of carrying out its provisions. The President and the Bureau of the Budget have approved an appropriation of $1,000,000, but for some mysterious and unexplained reason the House omitted the item. Accordingly I am offering it at this time.

If reference is made to the act, the purposes of which this appropriation is intended to carry out, it will be found that Senators from every State should be interested, because the act is in the interest of the reforestation of the entire country. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, signed by the Acting Secretary, conveys the information that by the use of Federal funds and for the purposes of carrying out the objects of the bill there have been grown in about 13 different nurseries of the country 50,000,000 seedlings, to be planted in the prairie section and Timber Belt of the country.

In addition to that, in the South we have a great program, which was inaugurated and is being carried on by the Federal Government and the local government, to reforest the lands which have been denuded of timber by the sawmills in recent years. This is especially important for the southern section of the country, because under recent discoveries and developments in the manufacture of paper the reforestation of land has great economic value. These timberlands are very valuable, especially while the timber is young.

An appropriation for this purpose should appeal to every Senator, because the Government has already invested large sums of money in the growing of seedlings which must be put out this fall and next spring or they will be a total loss to the Government.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. Certainly.

Mr. McGILL. Is not the further information contained in the letter from the Secretary of Agriculture that the 50,000,000 seedling trees must be set out in the fall of 1937 and spring of 1938, and that unless this appropriation is made there will be no funds to carry forward the program and those seedlings will be a total loss to the Government?

Mr. BILBO. The Senator from Kansas is correct. The Department says the trees must be set out this fall and next spring or they will be a dead loss to the Government. The purpose is to encourage the setting out of trees on all the waste lands of the individual farmers throughout the entire country. The money should be used by the Government for that purpose everywhere in the country.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is not this a liquidation of a former ambitious program to build a row of trees or several rows of trees through the western section in the hope and with an effort to minimize the hot winds and temper the climate in that way? Is it not a fact that formerly the administration purchased and acquired a great number of nurseries and they have now ready for planting many millions of trees, and if this fund is not provided, will not those trees be a total loss to the Government? Further, is it not a fact that this amendment, calling for $1,000,000, is to liquidate that program and see that those trees are planted, and to carry out a Budget estimate?

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, not being from that section of the country or familiar with conditions there, nevertheless I have a suspicion that part of this fund would be used for that purpose; but I have another suspicion that a greater part of the fund would be used to encourage farmers throughout the Nation to reseed and grow timber on their own individual lands.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. Certainly.

Mr. KING. With the $1,000,000 proposed to be appropriated, will there be a complete and effective and ended-forever liquidation of the project to which the Senator from Oklahoma referred, or will there be in the future, from time to time, demands for further appropriations to carry on that project?

Mr. BILBO. I am not in a position to say that the purpose of the appropriation is to liquidate the former effort on the part of those who had the dream of protecting the country from the cold winds of the North and the hot winds of the South. The appropriation is proposed to be made pursuant to a permanent act of Congress, Public, No. 95, of this session, approved the 18th day of May 1937, which provides for doing certain things to aid agriculture, increase farm-forestry income, increase water resources, increase employment, and in other ways to advance and improve living conditions on farms through the means of reforestation and forestation in the various States and Territories. It is the purpose of the act for which the appropriation is asked to carry out all those purposes stated in the act approved May 18, 1937, including the utilization of the 50,000,000 seedlings to which I have referred.

Mr. KING. I assume from what the Senator has stated that there is to be no liquidation, but this is to be a perpetual expenditure by the Federal Government.

Mr. BILBO. The act provides for an annual appropriation of $2,500,000 from now on.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I inquire if the amendment is acceptable to the committee?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this item was first brought to the attention of the House Committee on Appropriations. They declined to include it in the bill and the bill passed the House without it. The matter was submitted to the Senate Committee on Appropriations and that committee, after due consideration, declined to include the item in the bill. I am merely saying that that is the judgment of the two Appropriations Committees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I tender an amendment to the pending bill and desire to take a moment to explain its purpose.

On August 25, 1936, Congress enacted a law inviting the nations of the earth to come to the United States for an international power conference. Pursuant to that act, which was Public, No. 58, the convention was held. I think all the leading nations of the earth were represented.

As a part of that set-up the proceedings of the convention were printed or ordered printed. The work has about been finished and 60 percent of the report is now in type in the Public Printer's Office. But by inadvertence no item was included in the deficiency bill to take care of the printing costs. The various nations are now asking for copies of the proceedings and report, and they are not available. The amendment has been approved by the President and by the Bureau of the Budget. It calls for $50,000. I ask that the amendment may be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Washington will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 20, after line 7, it is proposed to insert the following:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY

Printing and binding: For printing from type now standing at the Government Printing Office, supplemented by such additional material as may be submitted to the Public Printer by the Department of the Interior, 500 sets of the complete transactions of the Third World Power Conference and of the Second Congress on Large Dams, sponsored by the United States, and pursuant to Public Resolution No. 58, approved August 26, 1935, including personnel without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations and including reimbursement to other appropriations for services of personnel employed for translating, compiling, and editing such material, and for all other necessary expenses incident thereto, fiscal year 1937 and 1938 (acts Aug. 26, 1935, 49 Stat. 870; Feb. 11, 1936, 48 Stat. 1124), $50,000.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, this matter was presented to the Appropriations Committee, and the committee declined to include it in the bill. They did not feel that it was a deficiency item. We hesitated to authorize the expenditure of $50,000 for printing a set of reports. It seemed to some members of the committee that $50,000 was an unusual amount. We did not know the extent of the accumulation of information to be published. We did not know as to the necessity for it, and we did not have before the committee a justification which satisfied us that we should appropriate $50,000 for that purpose.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, may I add one word?

Failure to print this report would leave the United States, if a republic may be said to be in an awkward position, in precisely that position. We very formally passed a law inviting the nations of the world to come here; and we entertained them, as I recall, quite royally. The report is voluminous in that it is in itself a comprehensive study of the whole power field; and, of course, the various nations which went to the expense and trouble of sending representatives here are wondering why their report is not forthcoming. It is a very lengthy thing. It is a report of all the proceedings; and 60 percent of the type, gentlemen of the Senate, is now set up over here in the Government Printing Office.

The matter is of no personal interest whatever to me, but I think the present situation is a rather awkward one for us. I rather hate to have Congress just say "We are not going to publish this report" after we had invited representatives of all the great nations to come here; they were our guests, and we virtually contracted with them to give them a report of the proceedings.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator when this conference was held?

Mr. BONE. I dare not trust my memory as to that.

Mr. KING. It was held about 18 months ago. There was a big meeting down here at the Union Station.

Mr. BONE. It was held in Washington, as I recall; and I believe all the leading countries were represented by scientists and engineers of world-wide fame in their respective fields. This is the report of the proceedings.

Mr. ADAMS. Congress at that time made an appropriation for the expenses of the conference, did it not?

Mr. BONE. Now, the Senator is asking me to trust to my memory, and it is faulty. I do not recall. I merely know that as a part of that set-up we were to publish a report, and this is merely the winding up of what seems a very necessary detail. I am sure all of us realize that.

Mr. ADAMS. Does not the Senator think that if there was an appropriation, as there doubtless was, perhaps everything that was to be included was mentioned in the statute? If the type has been set up without authorization and without any appropriation, those who have directed it to be done have gone rather far afield.

I gather from the statement of the Senator that 60 percent of the report has been set up in type. Some appropriation must have been available for that.

Mr. BONE. I cannot answer, except to say to my brethren of the Senate that the President has cleared the item, and that the Budget Bureau has cleared it; and, of course, being a Member of the Senate, I would rely on that as sufficient justification and legal authority for presenting the matter, with the thought that it would be a perfectly justifiable action on my part. I think we are well within the four corners of the original statute in now putting this item in the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. There is no question of our justification in not putting it in if the Senate thinks it ought not to go in.

Mr. BONE. It is a very small item, and I feel that we should be doing ourselves a disservice not to publish these reports. They are very valuable. After this great conference has been held, there will be a great vacuum if a report is not published; and I think the world is entitled to have the report.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, can the Senator give any assurance that anyone will ever read the report after it is printed?

Mr. ADAMS. If it is a $50,000 report I think I can give assurance that it will not be read.

Mr. BONE. In answer to the question of the Senator from Texas, I will say that I suspect that those who are interested in this particular field will read the report.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not opposing the Senator's amendment.

Mr. BONE. No; I understand that. But, in all fairness, I think a number of persons will read the report, because the leading engineers and members of the engineering fraternity generally attended the conference. The Government is now in the power business, and the report will have a very great technical and, I think, very practical value in the work we are now carrying on.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BONE. I do.

Mr. KING. Did the Senator, or some member of his committee, before having the report sent to the Printing Office to be printed, make an investigation as to the cost of printing the report, or make any inquiry at all regarding it?

Mr. BONE. No, Mr. President. The matter was brought to my attention, and I made a hurried examination of the facts within the time I had, and it seemed to me that we ought not to default in this matter. It seems rather ridiculous to invite to this city a group of scientists from all over the world, and agree to publish a report of the proceedings and provide them for the various nations, and then not do so. The reports are going to other countries as well as to this one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I find in the amendment of the Senator from Washington, the following language:

Printing and binding: For printing from type now standing at the Government Printing Office, supplemented by such additional material as may be submitted to the Public Printer by the Department of the Interior, 500 sets of the complete transactions of the Third World Power Conference and of the Second Congress on Large Dams, sponsored by the United States, and pursuant to Public Resolution No. 58, approved August 26, 1935—

I first wish to call attention to the fact that it was authorized in 1935. Then follows this language:

including personnel without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations.

I am wondering what that means, and what it is doing in this appropriation amendment, that is, "including personnel without regard to the civil-service laws and regulations." I wanted to inquire of the Senator from Washington what that meant.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the amendment was prepared by counsel for the Interior Department, who had the law before them, and I think the verbiage to which the Senator refers is probably a statement from the law itself. I cannot answer the Senator's question. I am only suspecting that to be the case. I rather think this is one of those formal amendments which contain a lot of verbiage which to most lawyers seem ridiculous, but I think it is probably a restatement of some provision of the act. I only guess at that, because this was prepared by the counsel for the Interior Department as I have said, to cover the exigency. I do not believe it has any significance at all here.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I was about to say to the Senator that it seems to me it is legislative in character, if it means anything.

Mr. BONE. I do not think so. I think it is more or less a restatement of the law.

Mr. ADAMS. I will read the law to the Senator under which this conference was held. It provides:

That the President be, and hereby is, authorized and requested to extend to the World Power Conference an invitation to hold the Third World Power Conference in the United States in 1936 and 1937.

That the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the expenses of organizing and holding the Third World Power Conference, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, communication services, stenographic and other services by contract if deemed necessary without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); travel expenses, local transportation, hire of motor-propelled, passenger-carrying vehicles, rent in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, printing and binding, entertainment, official cards, purchase of newspapers and periodicals, necessary books and documents, stationery, membership badges, and such other expenses as may be actually and necessarily incurred by the Government of the United States by reason of observance of appropriate courtesies in connection therewith, and such other expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State.

I make the inquiry as to where there is an application of this civil-service provision.

Mr. BONE. The Senator has me at a disadvantage, because the amendment was brought to my attention only about noon today, and I had no time to study it, except in a very sketchy fashion, and I did not have the law before me. I recalled the passage of the law in 1935, but I did not recall the terms of the law, and I felt that this was probably one of the very vital things to be done in order to carry out the real purpose of holding the conference. The Senator has the statute before him, and of course he has the advantage of me, because I did not know what was in the statute. The lapse of time had blurred the whole thing in my mind.

Mr. ADAMS. I did not wish to take any advantage of the Senator. All I want is to explain that here is a matter before us, on which the Senator has had information only recently. All we had was a sketchy request for an appropriation, and we felt it our duty, unless there was some definite proof or evidence that it was necessary to spend $50,000, at least to lay it over until the next regular session of the Congress, and find out the reasons behind it.

Mr. BONE. When I said the Senator had the advantage of me, I meant he had the law before him and had the advantage of me in that regard. I am not prepared to state what is in the old statute, and I am glad to have the information.

Mr. ADAMS. Is not the Senator willing to let the matter go over until we all have more information about it?

Mr. BONE. I will conclude my statement by saying that the Interior Department felt that this was very vital, and as a matter of courtesy to them I told them I would be very happy to present the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. I have yet to find a request for an appropriation from a department where the department does not think it vital.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I desire to explain. I will read the amendment. It is as follows:

American Printing House for the Blind: To enable the American Printing House for the Blind more adequately to provide books and apparatus for the education of the blind in accordance with existing law, the sum of $50,000 as authorized by H. R. 4582, Seventy-fifth Congress.

By way of explanation, let me say that the House passed House bill 4582, and the Senate just a few days ago passed the same bill. It is now at the White House.

That bill authorizes an increase of $50,000 in the appropriation to the American Printing House for the Blind. That is the institution which prints the books for all of the blind students in all the States. It is an eleemosynary institution to that extent, and the books are distributed on a quota that is agreed upon among the respective States. There has been considerable legislation in the interest of the blind during the past few years, and the demands upon the American Printing House—which is the oldest of its kind in the Nation, and the only one, so far as I know—have grown so great that it is actually in need of immediate money to carry on its part of the arrangement to furnish books to students. The purpose in offering this amendment is to make provision for the sum of $50,000, because it has been authorized by both Houses of Congress, and I imagine the bill making the authorization will be signed by the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the proper place in the bill the following:

Site for armory, Militia, District of Columbia: For the acquisition, in whole or in part, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise of squares nos. 1118, 1119, 1125, and 1126, in the District of Columbia, Northeast section, bounded by C Street on the north, Nineteenth Street on the west, Twenty-first Street on the east, and A Street on the south, as a site for an armory for the National Guard of the District of Columbia, fiscal year 1938, $210,000, to be expended under the authority and direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and to continue available until expended.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the President in a message dated August 13, transmitted the report of the Bureau of the Budget favoring this provision, and strongly recommended the appropriation. The cost will be paid, of course, out of the District funds. I may add that the lands referred to were tentatively selected sometime ago, but unfortunately there was no appropriation and no authorization. In the meantime a number of small buildings have been erected on the land, and others may be erected in the near future. It is very important that the land be acquired at the earliest possible date; otherwise, additional buildings will be constructed, and the value of the premises will be very much greater than at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 40, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following:

SPECIAL MEXICAN CLAIMS COMMISSION

Special Mexican Claims Commission: For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to establish a commission for the settlement of the special claims comprehended within the terms of the convention between the United States of America and the United Mexican States concluded April 24, 1934", approved April 10, 1935, and amended August 19, 1937, including personal services in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, without regard to the provisions of any statute relating to employment; rent in the District of Columbia or elsewhere; furniture; office supplies, and equipment, including law books and books of reference; stenographic reporting and translating services by contract if deemed necessary, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5); traveling expenses; transportation of things; printing and binding; and such other necessary expenses as may be authorized by the Secretary of State, $90,000, together with the unexpended balance of the appropriation made available for this purpose in the Second Deficiency Appropriation Act, Fiscal Year 1937, which unexpended balance is continued available until August 31, 1938.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, in explanation of the amendment I should like to say that the language of the amendment, except for change in the dates which would bring it up to the present year, is precisely the language used in the State Department appropriation bill of last year. Yesterday both Houses approved the conference report on the bill which authorizes the extension of this work for an additional year. The appropriation is necessary to continue that work. I hope the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. KING. What is the amount asked for?

Mr. NYE. Ninety thousand dollars.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that amount is not required, because, under the bill which was approved, the services of the Commission may be terminated at a much earlier date. As a matter of fact, the original bill, which I had the honor to introduce, limited the period to 2 years. Unfortunately, the work has not been completed, and a short time additional is required. It seems to me the Commission ought to complete its labor in a very few months.

Mr. NYE. I think the members of the Commission themselves are sure of accomplishing the completion of the work in less than a year. However, the Bureau of the Budget has indicated that it would be in quite complete approval of providing the same amount of money this year that was provided last year; and if the Commission completes its work before the end of the year, the whole amount will not be necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have conferred with the parliamentarian, and I now offer an amendment on behalf of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 24, under the heading "National Park Service", following the amendment dealing with the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, it is proposed to insert the following:

TAHOE NATIONAL PARK FOREST

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire, on behalf of the United States, certain lands in the State of Nevada now in private ownership, as particularly described in S. 2583, entitled "An act to provide for the acquisition of certain lands for and the addition thereof to the Tahoe National Forest, in the State of Nevada, and the acquisition of certain other lands for the completion of the acquisition of the remaining lands within the limits of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park, in east Tennessee", $325,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I offer another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 38, following line 12, it is proposed to insert the following:

WAR DEPARTMENT

CORPS OF ENGINEERS

Flood control: For commencing the construction of flood walls, levees, and revetments along Wolf River and Nonconnah Creek for the protection of Memphis, Tenn., as heretofore or hereafter authorized by law, $1,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that item is authorized by the Flood Control Act which was just passed by both Houses of Congress.

Memphis, Tenn., was very badly hurt by the recent flood, as was Paducah, the home town of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]; and it is absolutely necessary that work be done at the earliest possible moment in order to protect the city from the backwaters of the Mississippi River, which back up the other two rivers and very greatly injure the city. There was no loss of life during the last great flood, but there was a tremendous loss of property, and a great amount of work was necessary to keep the water from backing up farther and doing more damage than it did.

The proposal has been approved by the Board of Engineers, by the engineer of that district, and also by the Chief of Engineers in Washington, who prepared the original amendment. I hope the Senate will allow the amendment to go to conference.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee whether this amendment has been submitted to any standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has not, because the bill was passed just a few moments ago. That is why the amendment was not submitted to a committee.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I will ask the chairman of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee if he does not think an amendment of this character ought to be justified in some way before a standing committee before it is adopted by the Senate. I address my question to the chairman.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that I did not understand the question. I happen to be merely chairman of the subcommittee, and I did not recognize the intent to address me.

Mr. McKELLAR. The question relates to the appropriation which has just been authorized by the Congress, under the Flood Control Act, to protect Memphis from the floodwaters of the Wolf River and the Nonconnah Creek at Memphis.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator has included in his amendment all the items that are in the Flood Control Act?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; only one.

Mr. ADAMS. What was the total of the Flood Control Act?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not recall what the total of the Flood Control Act was, but this is an item in it, and it is a matter that ought to be attended to at once. There was great loss in the city of Memphis, as the whole world knows. The flood sufferers from Arkansas, Kentucky, and Tennessee came to Memphis. There was great loss, not of life, but of property. The purpose of this appropriation is to remedy that situation, and the work ought to be started at the very earliest possible moment.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator, being a member of the committee, will recognize the embarrassment of the committee, because the projects included in the Flood Control Act, so far as I know, were all emergency projects, in connection with which provision was made for taking measures for protection against real hazards. I ask the Senator from Tennessee whether he feels that the deficiency appropriation bill should include selected items out of the Flood Control Act.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think this amendment should be included, because of the very great importance of doing this work at once. The item covers a matter that is really of an emergency nature. There is already in the bill a provision for this item, and, as a real emergency exists, I think the item should be included.

I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, it occurs to me that under these circumstances the Senate cannot possibly test the justification for the amount, or any other feature of an appropriation of this character. Of course my protest will amount to very little; but I certainly protest against undertaking to appropriate these various large sums of money without any justification being made before any standing committee of the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senate has just passed the bill, which came from a standing committee of the Senate, which authorized this item, and the Chief of Engineers has recommended it. The Senator from Colorado himself probably has not examined the bill; but it is true, nevertheless, that this appropriation has been recommended, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee on page 38, line 12. [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McGILL in the chair). The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If there are no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill (H. R. 8245) was passed.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments——

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, my attention being diverted, I did not know that the amendment stage of the bill had been passed. I wanted to offer an amendment. I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In order that the amendment may be considered, it will be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time and passed.

Mr. BYRNES. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 13, after line 5, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the authorization for the acquisition of a site for the Jefferson Memorial Junior High School and Library contained in the act making appropriations for the year 1938, approved June 29, 1937, shall be available for the purchase of a site regardless of the boundaries of tracts set forth in said act.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, may I ask for an explanation of the amendment?

Mr. BYRNES. The purpose of the amendment is to give an opportunity for the investigation of a matter which I believe is of some importance. It is a District matter, and the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the chairman of the District of Columbia Committee, and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], who is in charge of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, agreed that an opoprtunity should be afforded to determine whether or not when we passed the District of Columbia appropriation bill and provided that a site should be purchased for a school between two certain blocks; certain people who were interested influenced the designation of those blocks. I think the amendment should be adopted to give us an opportunity to investigate it, the only purpose of the amendment being to afford such opportunity and to permit the purchase of a site for a school building regardless of the site designated in the appropriation bill passed a few weeks ago, leaving it to the officials of the District of Columbia to determine where the building should be located and not having them bound to a certain location designated by certain streets in the appropriation bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I trust that the amendment will be agreed to, so that we may take it to conference.

Mr. BYRNES. I hope the amendment will be adopted. I have stated the only purpose contemplated by it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill (H. R. 8245) was read the third time and passed.

Mr. ADAMS. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. ADAMS, Mr. GLASS, Mr. McKELLAR, Mr. BYRNES, and Mr. HALE conferees on the part of the Senate.

INCORPORATION OF AMERICAN CHEMICAL SOCIETY

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have two matters that I think may be disposed of without debate.

Yesterday the Senate passed a bill (S. 2633) to incorporate the American Chemical Society. In the meantime the House passed a bill in words identical with the Senate bill, except for two amendments that were added in the House.

The House bill has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I have conferred with the chairman of that committee, and, with his consent, I ask that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 7709, which is the bill to which I refer, for the purpose of asking unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Committee on the Judiciary is discharged from the further consideration of the House bill. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia for the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7709) to incorporate the American Chemical Society was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the persons following: Robert T. Baldwin, Edward Bartow, Erle M. Billings, E. K. Bolton, Willard H. Dow, Gustavus J. Esselen, Arthur J. Hill, Townes R. Leigh, Thomas Midgely, Jr., Charles L. Parsons, R. E. Swain, E. R. Weidlein, Frank C. Whitmore, H. H. Willard, and R. E. Wilson, being persons who are now directors of the American Chemical Society, a corporation existing under the laws of the State of New York, their associates and successors duly chosen, and such other persons as now are or may hereafter be associated with them as officers or members of said American Chemical Society, are hereby incorporated and constituted and declared to be a body corporate by the name of American Chemical Society.

SEC. 2. That the objects of the incorporation shall be to encourage in the broadest and most liberal manner the advancement of chemistry in all its branches; the promotion of research in chemical science and industry; the improvement of the qualifications and usefulness of chemists through high standards of professional ethics, education, and attainments; the increase and diffusion of chemical knowledge; and by its meetings, professional contacts, reports, papers, discussions, and publications, to promote scientific interests and inquiry, thereby fostering public welfare and education, aiding the development of our country's industries, and adding to the material prosperity and happiness of our people.

SEC. 3. That the American Chemical Society shall have power to make its own organization, including its constitution, bylaws, rules, and regulations; to fill all vacancies created by death, resignation, or otherwise; to provide for the election of members, their division into classes, and all other matters needful and useful to promote the objects of the society. It shall hold an annual meeting at such place in the United States as may from time to time be designated.

SEC. 4. That the American Chemical Society shall, whenever called upon by the War or Navy Department, investigate, examine, experiment, and report upon any subject in pure or applied chemistry connected with the national defense, the actual expense of such investigations, examinations, experiments, and reports to be paid from appropriations which may have been made for that purpose by Congress, but the society shall receive no compensation whatever for any services to the Government of the United States: Provided, That the title to any and all inventions and discoveries made in the course of such investigations, examinations, and experiments that, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, involve the national defense, shall vest in the Government of the United States, and the Government of the United States shall have unlimited license under all other inventions and discoveries.

SEC. 5. That the American Chemical Society be, and the same is hereby, authorized and empowered to receive, by devise, bequest, donation, or otherwise, either real or personal property and to hold the same absolutely or in trust, and to invest, reinvest, and manage the same and to apply said property and the income arising therefrom to the objects of its creation.

SEC. 6. That as soon as may be possible after the passage of this act a meeting of the directors hereinbefore named shall be held at the city of Washington in the District of Columbia by notice served in person or by mail addressed to each director at his place of residence by the secretary of the American Chemical Society, a New York corporation, and the said directors, or a majority thereof, being assembled, shall organize and proceed to adopt bylaws, to elect officers and appoint committees, and generally to organize the said corporation; and said directors herein named, on behalf of the corporation hereby incorporated, shall thereupon receive, take over, and enter into possession, custody, and management of all property, real or personal, of the corporation heretofore known as the American Chemical Society, incorporated as hereinbefore set out under the laws of the State of New York on November 9, 1877, and to all its rights, contracts, claims, and property of any kind or nature; and the several officers of such corporation, or any other person having charge of any of the securities, funds, real or personal, books or property thereof, shall, on demand, deliver the same to the said directors appointed by this act or to the persons appointed by them to receive the same; and the directors of the existing corporation and the directors herein named shall and may take such other steps as shall be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 7. That the rights of the creditors of the said existing New York corporation known as the American Chemical Society shall not in any manner be impaired by the passage of this act, or the transfer of the property hereinbefore mentioned, nor shall any liability or obligation for the payment of any sums due or to become due, or any claim or demand, in any manner or for any cause existing against the said New York corporation, be released or impaired; but such corporation hereby incorporated is declared to succeed to the obligations and liabilities and to be held liable to pay and discharge all of the debts, liabilities, and contracts of the said New York corporation so existing to the same effect as if such new corporation had itself incurred the obligation or liability to pay such debt or damages, and no suit, action or proceeding before any court or tribunal shall be deemed to have abated or been discontinued by reason of the passage of this act.

SEC. 8. That the corporation shall, on or before the 1st day of December in each year, transmit to Congress a report of its proceedings and activities for the preceding calendar year, including the full and complete statement of its receipts and expenditures. Such reports shall not be printed as public documents.

SEC. 9. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

SEC. 10. That this act shall date from the 1st day of January 1938.

ANNE E. FELIX

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, sometime ago the House passed House bill 5495, providing an appropriation of $2,000 to pay the expenses of a contestant in a contested election. It seems that during the prosecution of this contest the contestant failed to ask for the $2,000 allowed by the House ordinarily in such contests, and that the House passed a special bill pursuant to an act of the Congress of 1879. From the Committee on Privileges and Elections I report the bill favorably, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 5495) for the relief of Anne E. Felix was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Anne E. Felix, of Pittsburgh, Pa., the sum of $2,000 in full satisfaction of her claim against the United States for expenses incurred as contestant in connection with preparation and prosecution of the election-contest case of Anne E. Felix v. Michael J. Muldowney for the seat from the Thirty-second Congressional District of the State of Pennsylvania in the Seventy-third Congress, as authorized by the act of March 3, 1879 (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 226), a full and detailed account of such expenses having been properly filed with the clerk of the Committee on Elections No. 2, in accordance with the provisions of the act hereinbefore recited: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

ACTIVITIES OF THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there are in preparation several statements regarding the activities of the executive departments of the Government which should be incorporated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as part of the proceedings of the first session of the Seventy-fifth Congress. At the moment I have not the data covering this information. As the RECORD will be extended for 10 days after the adjournment of Congress, I ask permission that the memoranda covering this information be inserted in the Appendix as part of my remarks covered by the request which I am now making.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, before the request of the Senator from Kentucky is acted upon, may I inquire whether the statements referred to are to be in the names of Members of the Senate?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; they are.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INVESTIGATION PERTAINING TO COURTS IN PUERTO RICO

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported back favorably the resolution (S. Res. 184) submitted by Mr. BURKE on August 19, 1937, which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized to investigate the advisability of amending section 40 of the act entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes", as proposed in H. R. 1485, Seventy-fifth Congress.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee or subcommittee is authorized to hold hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Seventy-fifth Congress, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, to employ such clerical and other assistance, and to make such other expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not exceed 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $2,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANALS

Mr. BYRNES, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, reported back favorably the resolution (S. Res. 183) submitted by Mr. CLARK on the 19th instant, which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Interoceanic Canals, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized during the Seventy-fifth Congress to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

FILING OF CONFERENCE REPORTS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that any committee of conference may have the privilege of filing any conference report that may be agreed to during any adjournment or recess of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

INDIAN LANDS IN ARIZONA

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate passed a bill at the request of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN]. The bill went to the House and the House attached an amendment. A conference was asked. Because of the lateness in the session I now ask unanimous consent to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate disagreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2188) to amend section 3 of the act of June 18, 1934 (48 Stat. 984–988), relating to Indian lands in Arizona.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the motion will be entered.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I now move that the House be requested to return the bill to the Senate for further consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

SINEPUXENT BAY BRIDGE, OCEAN CITY, MD.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Calendar 1287, House bill 7806, a bridge bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7806) authorizing the State Roads Commission of the State of Maryland to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across Sinepuxent Bay in Worcester County, Md., at Ocean City, Md., to replace a bridge already in existence, reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, which had heretofore been agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

WASHINGTON AIRPORT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. CLARK submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7985) to promote air commerce by providing for the enlargement of Washington Airport, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the language inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"That the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to lease to the National Airport Corporation, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Delaware for airport purposes, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, for a period not exceeding 25 years, and only for such period as the same shall be used for airport purposes, at a rental of $25,000, payable in advance, the lands forming that part of Military Road, Fort Myer Military Reservation, Arlington County, Virginia, described as follows: Beginning at a point on the easterly line of the Arlington Reservation north sixteen degrees west seventy-five and twenty-nine one-hundredths feet from the stone marking the southeast corner of said reservation; thence with said easterly line of said reservation north sixteen degrees no minutes west seventy-one and seventy-three one-hundredths feet; thence north eighty-five degrees thirty-five minutes east two hundred and sixty-three and twenty-five one-hundredths feet; thence by a curve to the right of six hundred and eight and seven-tenths feet radius three hundred and thirty-six and forty-two one-hundredths feet; thence south sixty-two degrees forty-five minutes east one thousand two hundred and fifty-three and eleven one-hundredths feet; thence by a curve to the left of four hundred and six and seven-tenths feet radius four hundred and fifty-four and twenty-seven one-hundredths feet; thence north fifty-three degrees fifteen minutes east thirty-two and nine one-hundredths feet to a point; thence south thirty-one degrees twenty-seven minutes east eight and ninety-six one-hundredths feet to the northwest corner of the right-of-way of the Virginia approach to the Highway Bridge; thence with the westerly line of said right-of-way south twenty degrees fifty-five minutes west one hundred and ten and ninety-one one-hundredths feet; thence south sixty-six degrees fifteen minutes west forty-five and eighty-five one-hundredths feet; thence by a curve to the right of four hundred and seventy-six and seven-tenths feet radius four hundred and twenty-four and three-tenths feet; thence north sixty-two degrees forty-five minutes west one thousand two hundred and fifty-three and eleven one-hundredths feet; thence by a curve to the left of five hundred and thirty-eight and seven-tenths feet radius, two hundred and ninety-seven and seventy-three one-hundredths feet; thence south eighty-five degrees thirty-five minutes west two hundred and forty-seven and sixty-three one-hundredths feet to the point of beginning. The above-described parcel of land comprises a strip of land seventy feet in width, the center line of said seventy-foot strip being coincident with the center line of the highway from the Highway Bridge to Arlington National Cemetery, and contains three and seven thousand one hundred and sixty-five ten-thousandths acres of land, more or less.

"The Secretary of War shall not make such conveyance or lease until he shall have received from such corporation to be paid to the board of commissioners, Arlington County, Virginia, such sum as may be necessary, but not to exceed $25,000, for the construction of a substitute road.

"SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sum as may be necessary, but not to exceed $25,000, to be paid to the Board of Commissioners of Arlington County, Virginia, for the construction of a public road as a substitute for that portion of Military Road authorized to be leased to the National Airport Corporation.

"SEC. 3. The Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to lease, within six months after the enactment of this Act, to such corporation for airport purposes, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, for a period not exceeding fifty years and only for such period as the adjoining land shall be used for an airport, at a rental of $1 per annum, that part of the lands (originally known as the Arlington Plantation and now commonly known as the Arlington Experimental Farm) lying east of the Washington and Southern Freight Branch of the Pennsylvania Railroad, containing fifty-three acres more or less.

"SEC. 4. The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to lease to such corporation for airport purposes, under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, for a period not exceeding fifty years and only for such period as the adjoining land shall be used for an airport, at a rental of $1 per annum, the portion of the bed of the Potomac River adjoining the Washington Airport, if agreed upon by the Park and Planning Commission, commonly known as the lagoon area of the Boundary Channel, better described as the area lying south and east of the following-described arc: Beginning at a point which is the center of the west face of the south abutment of the Mount Vernon Memorial Highway Bridge over Boundary Channel at its mouth, thence upstream in a straight line south fifty-four degrees thirty-five minutes west (true meridian) a distance of two hundred feet, thence in a series of curves to the right (upstream) the chords of which bear south seventy degrees fifty-five minutes west one hundred and fifty feet, north eighty-one degrees thirty-five minutes west two hundred feet, north sixty-two degrees thirty minutes west three hundred feet, north fifty-one degrees thirty-five minutes west four hundred feet, and north thirty-eight degrees ten minutes west two hundred and fifty feet to intersect the approximate high-water shore line on the west bank of the said Boundary Channel. Such lease shall contain express conditions that the corporation, if deemed necessary by the Secretary of War, will widen and deepen the Boundary Channel and will construct a retaining wall along the above-described arc, or cause such work to be done, under the supervision of the Secretary of War and in accordance with such terms and conditions as he may prescribe: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent the expenditures, upon lands belonging to the United States, of funds heretofore appropriated by Congress."

And the Senate agree to the same.

ROYAL S. COPELAND,
BENNETT CHAMP CLARK,
VIC DONAHEY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
A. J. MAY,
EWING THOMASON,

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, AUGUST 20, 1937

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, from whom all thoughts of truth and fraternity proceed, kindle, we pray Thee, in the hearts of all the true love of Christian brotherhood. Guide with Thy unerring wisdom the Congress as it takes counsel today; we pray Thee to strengthen the bonds of cooperation among all Members. May it strive wisely to order all things according to Thy holy will and for the peace and contentment of our whole country. Gracious Lord, consider our land; preserve its unity and bless it with honorable industry, sound learning, and pure religion. May our fellow citizens everywhere earnestly desire and more diligently seek the fruits of righteous living and uphold the standards of law and order. Heavenly Father, disappoint all fears, steady all hearts, and show us the way of service in our Savior's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.
